Q. Is it or is it not true, if not, state exactly what the fact is, that the whole country is open wild country, in a state of nature, excepting here and there small tracts that may be enclosed along the creeks and streams, and that everybody's cattle in that whole country, local or otherwise, are during a certain season of the year, driven up there and allowed to roam at large over the pea-vine and such stuff as there may be in the woods and on the burns? State what the fact is.

A. They are.

Q. You may answer.

A. It is, yes, sir. The cattle are taken up into the forest reserve; but the local cattle, most of them, will follow the feed. In other words, they will work up in June and July up into the mountains, and when the pea-vine goes, then they work down, and in August and September they will work on the creeks, where they can get lush feed and everything, and then after that they work down onto their patented lands.

Q. What character of vegetation is there on these railroad lands, upon which stock could graze and upon which they do graze at any time of the year or at such times of the year as they are there? What kind of feed is it?

A. Well, on the O. & C. lands inside of the grant, there is very little bunch grass. The majority of the time they live on the pea-vine.

Whereupon complainant objected to the foregoing questions as leading.

Whereupon witness testified that this grazing takes place from one to three months, from the time the pea-vine starts to get ripe in June, up to some time in August, and they follow the ridges and burns, and then get the pea-vine.

Q. Suppose an actual settler wanted to go in there and tender the company $2.50 an acre under the act of Congress, and claim to be a purchaser of 160 acres by legal subdvisions, what is the fact, if you know, as to whether that 160 acres would or would not afford pasturage of any kind for the support of any kind of stock, and if so, about how much stock, and for how long a time?

A. Well, I have on my place—speaking personally—I have four or five head of stock, and they eat about all that I can get.

Q. Yours is a very good place, down on the bottom in part?

A. Mine is on the creek bottom mostly.

Q. But I am speaking now of 160 acres applied for by some actual settler, under this so-called act of April 10, 1869, to buy it at $2.50 an acre and make a home on it.

A. There isn't a place, not one place on that grant, that a person could go on and make a living, of the unsold lands.

Q. Why couldn't he use it for pasturage and get rich?

A. Well, on account of the underbrush or salal and other stuff that they don't eat, or eat very seldom.

Q. Now, isn't it true that, if he was the only actual settler in the whole township and had the balance of the lands to pasture on, he might pasture it for two or three months in connection with the rest of the grant? Isn't that true?

A. One might. He might run a small bunch of cattle.

Q. Now, if the Oregon and California Railroad Company lands were open to settlement, 160 acres to each, could four settlers occupying each section make a living for themselves or their families, either by using the land for agricultural purposes or for grazing purposes?

A. No, sir.

Whereupon witness testified that Nichols, who owns some of this cattle, lives at Riddle, about thirty-five miles from where he runs his cattle. He drives them every year into that country—the range has gone this year, and this is about the last week for the sheep to return. They were turned out on the range some of them, this spring, and some of them wander up in the forest reserve. The only persons in the sheep business are Donovan Brothers, or James Donovan, at Myrtle Creek, who runs from 900 to 1500 head of sheep for a short time in the summer. He drives them up and takes them out. His first camp is eleven miles from Myrtle Creek; the last about thirteen miles. The sheep live there mostly on the poison oak, and grass browse, and pea-vine, mostly on pea-vine. They eat poison oak like a horse, and they like it. A horse will eat it more than anything else, that is, horse, sheep and cattle. They take the sheep up into these mountains and woods as soon as they can, in the spring after lambing, and they have taken them out this year already. They are up there about two months. They have a shepherd with them, one or two men, and dogs, and hold them in there. As soon as they start to shrink, and as soon as the pasture gets so it cannot support the sheep, they take them out. It would take four or five years for anybody to go in three and get any place in such shape that he could keep fifty or seventy-five head of sheep. They would be able to do that by slashing, burning, and sowing grass seed in the burns. On burned over land, or when land would be cut, after the timber was cut and the slashing was burned, one can sow in the ashes in the fall, and get a very good stand of Italian rye, or orchard grass, or in the low swales, timothy, which will make very good pasture. Grasses would grow in patches on the land that he thinks could not be cleared and used for grazing purposes; that which would not be practical to clear; could be grazed all right that way. Grasses on that class of land, growing among the stumps, roots and trees, if one did not overstock it, could be grazed almost the whole year. It would be impracticable to take a quarter section of land as an actual settler, slash it all off and graze it, and be able to make a living with stock, because the cost of merely burning and slashing would be so much greater than he could buy open land for elsewhere, that it would not be practical. The chief value of this grant, from his standpoint and in his judgment, is for its timber possibilities.

Q. Did Mr. Underwood tell you what he wanted this statement, Government's Exhibit 117, for?

A. He told me that it was for the general character of all the land in those townships. He didn't mention the railroad grant.

Q. Was this written out by you or by him?

A. Written out by him.

Q. And how long were you in conversation with him?

A. Probably fifteen or twenty minutes at that time, about thirty minutes, maybe.

Q. And the definitions of agricultural land and of grazing land were discussed by you and him under the terms as stated by you?

A. Yes, sir. It should have been in there.

Whereupon, on recross examination, witness testified that this land in the grant is not of the same general character as his homestead. He spent a year looking around, practically, when he came here, before he could find a piece that he could homestead. It has mountains on both sides of it. It is not of the same general character and not the same mountain range. The highest point is 241 feet from the lowest point on his place. He has between twenty and twenty-five acres of cleared land. The homestead has cost him very nearly $4,000 to get in the shape it is in now, with his buildings. He is not connected with the Commercial Abstract Company, but testified that Mr. Van Ostrand, who is the president of the Neenah-Oregon Land Company, owns a half interest in the Commercial Abstract Company, and witness worked one winter, as he was drawing his salary from Van Ostrand; he worked a year last winter for the company in the office. J. D. Zurcher, who testified in this suit is manager of the Commercial Abstract Company.

Whereupon WILLIS VIDITO, being called as a witness on behalf of the defendants, and being duly sworn, testified, that he is sixty-eight years old, is living in Corvallis, Benton County, Oregon, at present, and has lived thirty-seven years in Township 14 South, Range

8 West in Alsea Valley. Until about nine or ten years ago he farmed and carried mail; he ran several mail routes in the Coast Range in years past; one eleven years, another sixteen years, and another three years, he thinks. He was assessor of Benton and Lincoln Counties forty-two and forty-four years ago, and was Justice of the Peace in Alsea Precinct, he thinks, about fifteen years. Alsea Valley, or Precinct, is now in Benton County. He is acquainted with a good portion of the unsold lands of the Oregon and California Railroad Company in Benton County, Oregon, and has lived in the vicinity of these lands for forty years, and handled all the chittam bark for the Oregon and California Railroad Company ten years ago. He is not working for that company at present and has not been this year. He was fire warden for that company in that range, he thinks, for about nine years. The company paid him and he looked after all fires in all that country; and thinks there was about 75,000 or 80,000 acres mapped out to him that he looked after during that time. In his younger days he hunted a good deal over these unsold lands and leased these lands for the company on shares two different years, for a per cent of the chittam bark, not less than one-third, or whatever he could get. There are various kinds of timber on these lands. To which testimony complainant objected as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and it was agreed between the parties that this same objection should be deemed taken to all the testimony of this witness, relating to the character of the lands within the limits of this grant, settlements thereon and public land entries thereof. Whereupon witness testified that the timber on all the high lands is nearly all common red fir, some Noble fir, and the lower lands along the creek bottoms, is alder, cedar, maple, vine maple, cascara and various other kinds of brush and small timber. This chittam bark is the cascara sagrada. There have been great quantities of that, but it has been pealed for some thirty odd years and there is very little of it left. The chief value of these unsold lands in Benton County would be timber, nearly the total value. There are many parts of this land that is burned land, that has nothing on but fern, that comes annually. Every two or three years, fire gets in and burns off hundreds, sometimes thousands of acres. No one ever took any trouble to seed it, and consequently there is nothing on the land of any value. The only thing that the soil of this burned over land could be used for would be when it burns over sometimes to sow it to grass, that you might get some benefit out of it in the way of range. The low lands of this burned land might be used in this way for range if one could get seed on it, but he has never heard of any one sowing any seed on this burn. He has insisted that it be done, that the people over there pool together and buy seed and sow these lands in order to have range.

"Q. Now, suppose that an actual settler, under this so-called claim of the Government that the company is under obligation to sell to actual settlers at the rate of not to exceed $2.50 an acre and in quantities not exceeding 160 acres, should take a quarter section, or apply for it and the company should let them have a quarter section of this burned over lands upon which to settle and make a home, how would that man make a living on that piece of land?

A. There is none in Township 6, 7 nor 8 West and 13 South, 6, 7 nor 8 west, in 14 South, that anybody could make a living on, either Government land or railroad land.

Q. Why?

A. Well, it isn't of a nature that they could do anything with that quantity of. I took a claim in 1872, and I couldn't make a living on that, and it was the best, I think, that was available at that time, nearly forty years ago."

Whereupon witness testified that near the divide of the Coast Range, the timber is usually pretty heavy and has very few open spaces. Further west near the line of the company's grant, is less timber, a good deal of second growth, and where second growth timber now is about the right size for piling, but not old enough, there is absolutely nothing grows. He knows of one claim that the company sold before the lands were withdrawn by the Government, that would be a very good claim for agricultural purposes. Various parties have spoken to him about that claim at different times when he was in the employ of the company. They wanted to locate on it and he thinks that the company leased that land to get twenty tons of chittam off it after a good part of it had been sold. There is some good bottom land on it. It is situated in Section 7, Township 14 South, Range

8 West. He never figured on any per cent of the lan in Benton County that could be used for agricultu purposes or for any useful purpose other than for ti
ber. There would be a very small portion of it th could be utilized for such purposes. There are thousan of acres of this land that do not have any undergrow or pea-vine on. There is Oregon grape and salal bru growing on high ridges and some north hills of the l lands, but the only available substance for grazing wou be these native running briars, which cattle live on wh they range over it. Cattle could graze on the high lan during June, July and August. On the low lands th could run over it, and do, the year around. There is l of these lands now in Township 13 South, Range 7 We and there is not a living man on that whole townshi
In Range 13 South, 8 West there are no inhabitants that township, either on the even or odd sections. T reason for that is, no one is fool enough to think that another fellow, who raises a garden there. There h with the understanding that he would ever clear the up. He has never had any experience or knowledge as to the cost of clearing these timber lands, this heavy timber land, in Western Oregon. He has had a few acres grubbed out of these creek bottoms, in maple and ash timber, which cost him about $80 an acre to clear up, which had never been slashed. There were standing trees here and there in the bottom land along the creek, not this big fir timber. He never heard of anybody trying to clear it by burning up the stumps or logs. It does not seen to him that any one would take chances on getting the odd or even sections of these heavy timbered lands, covered with merchantable timber and undertake to clear them. He finds that in southern Benton County, there is a good deal of land that is very rocky, close to the surface—no rocks in sight. He prospected for some mineral and found that the land is decomposed sand, rock, and wherever a tree grows and turns up, it throws up a lot of bed rock on much of that land. The land, if blown out, or where it is on low, wet land, the roots grow very shallow, and lay all on top of the ground, and those roots could be exterminated, and there is an awful lot of them, but on higher land the roots go deeper, the higher the land the deeper they go, and most of it is rocky under the surface. His knowledge of the root and soil character of this grant is confined chiefly to Benton and Lincoln Counties. He knows where the company's lines are, in Lincoln County and is acquainted with the unsold lands of the company in Townships 12 and 13 South, Range 8 West, and Townships 13, 14 and 15 South, Range 9 West. He became acquainted with these lands and their character by looking after fires over various parts of the grant for the last ten years, by leasing out those lands for chittam, and has run lines dividing up sections, and hunted up the stakes, and knows all about it. Opposite 13 and 14 South, in Lincoln County, the company's grant only runs about a mile into that county, and there is but very little timber on the company's lands. It is second growth, what there is. Section 30, Township 14 South, has a good body of heavy old timber on it; but that is the only section along the line there of the company's grant in Lincoln County that has any timber on in 13 or 14 South. There is a little timber on section 30, in 13 South, that is good timber. Where the character of the land has no merchantable timber on it at present, there is an undergrowth of fern, salal, vine maple and cherry, and all that kind of thing. On Section 21, 13 South, the elevation is 3,700 feet. There is some pretty fair soil on that summit. It is grass land; and also in 15 South, there is a mountain range there that contains some prairie grass on it. He does not know of any of the unsold land in Lincoln County that would be valuable for agricultural purposes.

"Q. What per cent would be available for pasturage purposes, to a man who would go there and settle, and take 160 acres?

A. Oh, it would be worth something to him, because, as I say, the cattle runs all over that country. It makes no difference what the distance, nor how high it is. They pick out salmon berry leaves on the creek bottoms, and salal, and fern, and running briers, but the briers, on the most of that country, is the only pasture there is. There is no grass—no native grass.

Q. I mean, suppose a settler would go in there and buy 160 acres, take a homestead of 160 acres, expecting to make it his home, and be confined to that piece of land to make his living, either by pasturing stock or any useful avocation relating to agriculture or horticulture, how would he get along?

A. He would be caught.

Q. He wouldn't, then, be able to make a living on the place at all?

A. No, he couldn't make a living for a family on a piece of land, unless he had money to squander and live on.

Q. I mean out of the land?

A. No, he couldn't make it out of the land. I never have advised anybody, in years past, not in the last ten or fifteen years, to ever take a homestead. I knew where there was vacant Government land, but I couldn't recommend anybody to take it.

Whereupon witness testified, that he knows of part of the even sections within the limits of this grant, where the land is chiefly valuable for timber, which had been taken under the Timber and Stone Act, and thinks that most of it was taken for this cascara bark, and after they peeled the bark off they threw the claim up, and all that Government land was filed on along the line between Lincoln and Benton, about eight or nine years ago, and he does not think that there is any one of them living on those claims today. They were just simply vacated. He thinks only one man perfected his title. There is no one living on these homesteads taken in the last twelve or fifteen years. The homesteads were sold to timber syndicates. Some of them had cleared up five or six, or ten acres, that is, they had cut off the timber and sowed grass, and burned up part of the logs; they had timber enough on their claims, so they sold out for a good figure, and just simply left, vacated, and the timber owners own it now. Nearly the entire value of the unsold lands of the company in Lincoln and Benton Counties, consists in its timber. Whereupon on cross examination, witness testified, that he has been during the last fifteen or twenty years employed considerable in connection with these lands; during the summer time as fire warden, and during the summer season for two or three months by the Oregon and California Railroad Company. The company never tried to do anything with that chittam bark for the past eight years, he thinks. He looked after it while he was in the office, during the summer season, and tried to see that none of it was stolen off the lands; but the company never ordered him to lease out any of it, or make anything out of it. He was employed as fire warden in the summer time up to a year ago; and patrolled for the Government this season. He was fire warden, commissioned by the State Board of Forestry to patrol in the North part of Benton County this season; that is, fire guards that the appropriation provides shall be expended by the State for fire protection. He ran a good many lines of these sections, most of them in the western part along the line between Lincoln and Benton Counties. He would sell a forty to a party for the company for chittam, and another forty or half section of the same section to somebody else, and he had to run a mile through the section, and pace it out, and give them their territory to work on. The Oregon and California Railroad Company showed these lands to him in Township 13 South, Ranges 6, 7, 8 and 9 West; and Township 14 South, Ranges 6, 7, 8, and 9 West, and the county line is a mile and a third south in 15 South. The maps the company furnished him in later years only authorized him to go to the county line, which was the south line of 15 South, and as far as the grant went west. Those are the lands that he has been more thoroughly over than others. He has just a general knowledge of the other lands. He is better acquainted with the western part than he is along the divide. There is no chittam bark on that divide, and when he was interested in working on those lines, it was the western part, along the line of Lincoln and Benton Counties. He has worked as fire warden on all of these lands in Benton County, he thinks, that is, there hasn't been fire on all of them, but he has been over all of them during that time. That is true, also, as to the grant in Lincoln County, it only runs about a mile along there. Whereupon on re-direct examination, witness testified that he thinks he has gone over the lands, within the limits of the grant, in both of these counties sufficiently to enable him to tell whether they are timber, agricultural or grazing lands.

Whereupon DENNIS McCARTHY called as a witness on behalf of defendants and being duly sworn, testified that he is forty-six years old, resides at Marshfield, Oregon, and is a timber cruiser and that he has resided in Marshfield, Coos County, Oregon, eight years and has been cruising timber most of the time. He was in the employ of the Simpson Lumber Company when he did the first cruising in the county. He cruised for outside companies that bought timber there and the last four years he has been in the employ of the county. For timber companies, his duties were principally estimating the amount of timber on certain tracts of land and in cruising for the county, his duties were estimating the timber, classifying the land as to its soil and whether it was adapted to grazing or cultivation, etc. He also ascertained whether the land was chiefly valuable for timber. In cruising, one starts in, at the corner of the section or whatever the land is, he is working on and runs through the land. It is according to whether it is heavily or sparsely timbered. They aim to go through the timber so as they can see the whole of the timber or whether or not the land is all timbered or not and either count the trees or average it up by the acre. Where the timber stand is uniform they generaly average it up by the acre, count the number of acres on a certain tract and average up the balance, if it is uniformly timbered. In cruising for timber companies, who are either applicants to purchase or wish to know the contents of their timber holdings, he uses the same methods of cruising. They ascertain the number of trees, by either counting all the timber or a certain number of acres and averaging the rest and then get the size of the trees by measurement. They generally measure down timber in order to get the size of the trees and then once in awhile the standing timber, the diameter of the stump and take that as a guide, take the down timber, giving it the same contents as they would a down tree of the same diameter. He did not use very much these volume tables. He generally used tables that he had made himself from actual measurement of timber that was down, or in logging camps where they were cutting and measuring up a certain number of trees and made a memorandum, kept a book for that purpose. He is familiar with and carries Spalding's and Doyle's rules and several of these tables and scales used by loggers and others. He understands how to triangle and obtain the heighth of trees but they never do that, they generally take the down timber and use that as a guide to the length of the trees. These methods are the most accurate that one can get, because they take actual measurement of the down timber in the same vicinity they are cruising. Timber investors buy or sell right along always on his cruises. The Simpson Lumber Company is a large corporation, has sawmills in Coos County and has been operating there for fifty years. The sawmill is at North Bend on Coos Bay. The Company has two mills, one has a capacity of about 100,000 feet a day of ten hours and the other about 50,000 feet, he would think. There is only one more sawmill at North Bend manufacturing lumber —he believes California men own it now. It was built by some local men and he believes they sold out. It is only a small mill of about 50,000 capacity. He cruised all of the timber holdings of the Simpson Lumber Company about eight years ago. He believes that "Defendants' Exhibit 314" is a fairly good map of that section of the country. The red color on the map is the Simpson Lumber Company's lands and he is able to identify them in a general way from his actual knowledge of where these lands are on the ground. He recognizes them all. Most of these lands of the Simpson Lumber Company are steep mountain lands. The north of the map is in Douglas County. The lands in Douglas County in township 22 north, range 12 west, are all high steep mountain land. He does not know how many acres the Simpson Lumber Company owns in Douglas County. There are approximately 4,000 acres in that county, to all of which testimony complainant objected as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial and it was agreed between the parties that this same objection should be considered as taken to all the testimony of this witness relating to the character of the lands within the limits of these grants, the settlements thereon and public land entries thereof.

Whereupon witness testified that the Simpson Lumber Company owns about 24,000 acres in Coos County which are chiefly valuable for timber. He is acquainted with the C. A. Smith Lumber Company transacting business in Marshfield, Oregon, where they have two large sawmills, one of the capacity of 300,000 feet board measure in ten hours and the other about 150,000 feet. He could not say accurately but the volume of lumber manufactured and shipped by the C. A. Smith Lumber Company from Marshfield, which comes from the timber on the water shed west of the Coast Range in Coos County, must be something over 100,000,000 feet a year—it is more than that, he does not know how much more it would be. He could not say how much money that company has invested in these mills and timber holdings in Coos County. It is a very large enterprise. He has been through the mills of the C. A. Smith Lumber Company and over a great deal of its timber lands. The bulk of the holdings of the C. A. Smith Lumber Company is in the southeastern part of the county and he thinks this company owns about 70,000 acres in Coos County. Some of these lands are within the limits of the Oregon and California railroad grant, heretofore purchased from the Oregon and California Railroad Company. The Simpson Lumber Company owns in Coos County about 24,000 acres. The Menasha Woodenware Company, of Menasha, Wisconsin, owns a large tract of timber formerly owned about 20,000 acres and has recently purchased another large tract there of about 70,000 acres and it has pretty close to 100,000 acres there all together. These timber lands of that company are mostly all mountain lands, principally fir timber which is the principal tree in Coos County and western Douglas County, with a little scattering hemlock and cedar. Weyerhauser Timber Company is the next largest owner of timber lands in Coos County, owns about 25,000 acres in that county. He does not know the extent of its holdings in Douglas County. It has a large tract there. The holdings of the Weyerhauser Timber Company in Coos County are all heavily timbered mountain land. He has cruised part of the unsold lands of the Oregon and California Railroad Company in Coos County. He thinks they have cruised about 60,000 acres of them up to this time. His knowledge of the balance of these lands is just a general knowledge. He has been through the townships in which they are situated but has not cruised these townships yet. He has been sufficiently over them to be able to state, in a general way, the general character of the rest of these lands. So far as he has been through the unsold lands of the Oregon and California Railroad Company in Coos County, they are mostly high lands, heavily timbered lands, as far as he has seen them and he has actually cruised about 60,000 acres of them and these were all heavily timbered lands, and as to these that he has not specifically cruised but traveled through or over, they were chiefly timber and most all high mountain land. These unsold lands are nearly all steep mountain slopes, gulches and generally rough country. In their present state, he would not consider, that any of it would be available for agricultural or horticultural purposes and it is so heavily timbered that it would not be practical to clear the timber and cultivate it. It would not pay, he thinks, any part of it, to clear the heavy timber off of it and cultivate it and their chief value is timber. There is a small portion of this acreage where, if the timber was cut and removed and the lands grubbed or the roots taken out, it would be plowed or tilled but whether it would produce anything to pay or not he could not say—there would probably be five per cent of it, the slopes would be easy enough or level enough to plow or till—there would probably be five per cent of that, after the timber was cleared off, that would be available for agriculture, providing it would produce crops. He does not know about that. These lands are generally about the highest elevation of any lands in the county, from 1500 up to 3000 feet, some more than that. In some places where this timber would be, that might be removed, the soil is fairly good clay soil, but the land is generally all rocky. The soil in some parts of it is very good—good clay soil, good clay loam. There is not any of it in its present state that he knows of that would be susceptible to grazing. If the timber was cut down and removed and the stumps cleared and grass was sown in the ashes, after the clearings were burned, there would probably be, perhaps fifty or sixty per cent of it that would be so as stock could range over it, if it would grow grass. He does not know as to that. What he means is, that it would not be so steep that stock could not go on, probably sixty per cent of it that stock could range over and feed on. Whereupon witness testified.

Q. Suppose that a settler would come to the company and say, "Here, I want to pay not to exceed $2.50 an acre for 160 acres of that land out there, and I want to make a home on it—I want to settle on it," and the company should sell it to him, from your knowledge of this grant, I wish you would state to the court whether or not such settler would be able, confining himself to the particular quarter section, however he might select it, to support himself and his family, make settlement there, by any means, either for grazing what few stock he might have on it, or devoting it to agricultural or horiticultural or any other useful purpose?

Q. You may answer.

A. I don't know of any that would be available or practicable for a settler to go on and make a living.

Whereupon witness testified that there is very little settlement on the even sections within the limits of the grant in Coos County. There is scarcely any settlement on the lands. There is very little evidence of any settlement. Most of that land has been taken under the timber and stone act or with scrip. The title, after it passed to the entryman, has most all passed into the hands of some of the large timber holders. These even sections that have been thus entered are all heavily timbered lands. There are scarcely any remaining even sections within the limits of the grant, not entered. It has been most all taken up with the exception of a few spots that have been burned, an old burn. What has been burned is mostly vacant and still public land. Most of these even sections within the limits of this grant in Coos County have nearly all been taken under some law of the United States, mostly under the timber and stone act and when the entry was completed and title vested in the entrymen the lands have all passed substantially to timber investors. These lands owned by these various timber companies in Coos County, including the timber lands outside of the grant towards the Pacific Ocean owned by these various timber companies, the C. A. Smith Company and the Simpson Lumber Company and other timber investors, is most all very heavy timbered country and compares very favorably in the estimation of timber men with timber elsewhere in the State. It is considered just as good as any part of the State he believes. C. A. Smith, he believes, came from Minneapolis, Minnesota. Witness has made a few trips into Curry County, and has passed through some of the timber lands in that County. He does not remember that he has passed by or been on any of the unsold railroad lands in Curry County. He has been in township 31 south, range 12 west, which is partly in Coos County, but knows that, only in a general way, he has not cruised that township yet. He has been some on township 34 but has never been in township 35, range 11. He has been in the north third of township 31, range 13. The general character of those lands that he has visited or seen in Curry County is that they are all on high hills, steep, rough country, and the timber is fairly good there. The land's chief value, as far as he has seen, in Curry County was for timber. He could not see any that was available for agricultural purposes. He has been cruising for Coos County four years to arrive at the valuation of the lands for assessment purposes, to classify and value the lands as for assessment purposes.

Whereupon defendants offered in evidence "Defendants' Exhibit 314" to which complainant objected as not properly identified, which was received in evidence and is hereinafter set out and described and made a part of this Statement of the Evidence and identified as such.

Whereupon witness testified that he is personally acquainted with Charles A. Smith of the C. A. Smith Lumber Company and has been at all the camps of that Company, but could not say as to the number. The Smith-Powers Logging Company is C. A. Smith and Mr. Powers, residing in Marshfield. That company logs for the Smith mills. He has seen the publication called the "American Lumberman," published at Chicago. It is considered the best publication in the timber interests that there is, on the Pacific Coast or elsewhere in the United States. A photograph on the front page of the issue of November 11, 1911, of the "American Lumberman" is the photograph of C. A. Smith, he believes, and he recognizes that document as the "American Lumberman" of November 11, 1911. The photograph or picture shown at page 48 looks like that country in a general way, but he cannot see any particular marks that would show it was taken in Curry County for sure, but he can see that it is a forest country just the same as it would be. They have plenty of that kind of timber shown at page 49 of this magazine. The timber where the man is standing between the two large trees seems to be a fairly good stand of timber for that locality. He has seen a good bit of the Port Orford Cedar in Curry County and the picture at page 51 is a good picture of the Port Orford Cedar. The picture at page 53 looks as though it might have been taken in that country and he has seen such trees as those of that timber shown on pages 54 and 55, and the picture on page 55 is a good picture of the spruce timber growing in that country. He has cruised all that spruce timber where the camp is situated. They cut such timber as that shown at page 59 of this publication. They cut a good deal of that high timber there of that heighth. The picture at page 61 is a good picture of that section as also the picture at page 63 which is a fairly good and typical illustration of what is on the ground after the timber is felled. The picture at pages 64 and 65 correctly represents the situation as it actually is. He recalls a large number of young men that were sent out to take lessons in forestry and reproduction of forests from some of the forests of Coos County, but he does not recall where they came from. He knows there was a large number there, this year. The map at page 66 is a good map of the timber holdings of the C. A. Smith Timber Company in that part of the country and the picture at page 67 seems to be a good picture of that forest country. The profile map or panoramic map at pages 68 and 69 looks as though it was a good picture of that country in general outline and he has seen such timber lands in that section as shown on page 70 of this publication which seems to be a good photograph. He recognizes the picture at page 73 as a picture of camp 5 showing the operations of the C. A. Smith Lumber Company, or logging company, and of the yarders as they call them and has seen such works, there a good many times. He has been in the mill of the C. A. Smith Lumber Company at Marshfield and the photographs at pages 87, 88, 89, 90, 91 and 92 of this publication seem to be good, true photographs of that mill. He has been at the yard shown on pages 94 and 95 of this publication and it is a good picture of that yard as it was at the time the picture was taken. There is not so much lumber in that yard at the present time. The picture at page 99 is a good picture of portions of the timber there of the C. A. Smith Timber Company. He recognizes these pictures relating to the mill and the timber lands of the C. A. Smith Timber Company and has seen this before. They are good pictures. He recognizes the picture on page 111 of the modern steel steamship "Nann Smith," owned and operated by the C. A. Smith interests. That ship is still operating there.

Whereupon defendants offered in evidence all parts of this publication recognized by the witness and particularly all of the article describing the C. A. Smith Lumber Company and its interests at Marshfield, Oregon, in Coos and Curry Counties, Oregon, to which complainant objected as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial and not properly identified, excepting the photograph of C. A. Smith and the C. A. Smith lumbering plant at Marshfield and the vessel "Nann Smith" mentioned by the witness, which exhibit was received in evidence and is hereinafter set out and described and made a part of this Statement of the Evidence and identified as such.

Whereupon, witness further testified upon cross-examination as follows:

Questions by Mr. Rabb:

Mr. McCarthy, you testified in relation to some of the photographs in Defendants' Exhibit 315?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, so far as the photographs of the lands are concerned, you cannot identify those lands as being Coos County lands, can you?

A. No, not as——

Q. They may be in Bohemia somewhere?

Mr. Fenton: Read that question and answer. He interrupted him.

Question and answer read.

Mr. Fenton: Now, I would like to have your answer.

A. Some of the pictures of the timber land, might be taken in other parts of Oregon and show just about the same, but we have such timber there as is in all those pictures.

Q. You don't mean to identify those photographs as photographs that were taken in Coos County?

A. I don't suppose any one could do that. No one could do that, you know.

Q. You didn't take the photographs?

A. No, I didn't take them.

Q. And don't recognize the places as places that you are acquainted with?

Mr. Fenton: Object to that because it is not divided. The witness says he didn't take the photographs, and he could answer that No. The other part of it is another question, as to whether he recognizes any of the spots that those photographs show—logging camps, etc. You may answer.

A. Well, there's some of them I can recognize the places. But in the standing timber, where there isn't anything but the standing timber, of course, that I couldn't do—recognize the spots.

Mr. Fenton: Speak a little louder.

A. Where it is pictures of the standing timber, I cannot recognize any particular objects in the pictures that I could say positively they were taken there.

Mr. Rabb: I move to strike out the exhibit from the record as improperly identified, witness not being shown to have knowledge of the matters contained and stated—of the photographs shown by this exhibit.

Mr. Fenton: Counsel for defendants give notice that they will call another witness to further identify these photographs as being photographs of what they purport to show timber lands of the C. A. Smith Lumber and Manufacturing Company—and that these are all places in Coos and Curry Counties.

Whereupon witness testified that he had lived in Oregon eight years, residing in Minnesota and Montana before coming to Oregon. He lived about ten years in Minnesota and worked in the timber camps for awhile first and then started timber cruising there. He was employed in Minnesota by different companies,—The Musser-Sauntry Lumber Company. He was raised on a farm and worked in the timber woods more or less all his life since he was able to do anything. He was raised in New Brunswick, Canada, which is a timber country. The farms in his native country were farms that had been cleared. Timber had previously grown upon the lands. The O. & C. lands that he cruised in Coos County were all high mountain lands. He cruised first in township 24, 25, 26, and 27, range 10 west; township 26 south, range 9 west, west half of that township; township 29 south, range 9 west, all of that township; township 21 south, range 10 west, what lands the company has in that township; two sections in township 26 south, range 11 west, he believes a little more than that—that is about all he guesses. These lands are on the west of the Coast Range. Practically all of the timber lands in that section are owned by large timber companies, both in the even and odd sections. He cannot recall any particular pieces of the lands of the Oregon and California Railroad Company in Curry County that he has been on. He only knows the general character of the formation of these lands and all the lands there in Curry County are up on high, rough, hilly ground, very rough country there, aside from little valleys. He does not base his knowledge as to these lands solely upon his knowledge of the lands in Coos County. He has been through Curry County and may have crossed over some of the railroad lands in Curry County, but he could not recall any particular quarter section or anything of that kind, that he has been on; in a general way he knows these lands. All the lands in Curry County aside from the little strip along the coast are very high and mountainous and rough. He has never been over these lands in Curry County that are involved in this suit. He has been through the country enough to know what they are, in his opinion. He did not testify that he had never seen these lands, only in a general way. Vegetation grows very heavy thereon. All the lands on the western slope of the Coast Range are very prolific in their growth of grass and trees and vegetation grows very heavy there. On the low bottom valley lands along the rivers grasses and crops of all kinds grow well, but in the timbered area there, there is practically no grass growing in the timber. The timber is too heavy and dense for any grass to grow. He does not know whether the heavy growth of timber prevents its growth but the grasses do not grow in the timber there as it does in other places where he has been. The entire country in Coos County was originally most all timber. Along the bottom lands the heavy fir timber did not grow as it does on the mountain tops. It was more of myrtle, maple and alder and such timber as that, which is not merchantable timber as a rule, growing mostly on the bottom of the Coos River and the Coquille River and is not merchantable timber, as a rule, it is a different class of timber, different soil. There is nothing in the formation of the soil that would prevent vegetation or grasses growing on these lands involved in this suit, on parts of them the soil is fairly good, where it is not too rocky, on the high mountain slopes some places there is nothing but bed rock, there is no soil on them, other places are very rocky, such as boulder rock and some of these townships, for instance in township 27 south, range 9 west it is not altogether a lava formation, but is something similar to that and the soil is very rocky. There isn't practically any soil on it. It is all a small shale rock. This is in township 27 south, range 9 west. It is very heavily timbered down there. There are parts of the land that he has cruised that is good soil. The soil is good wherever there is soil that is not too rocky. It does not always take good soil to raise good timber because one will see very large timber growing practically on rocks. They root almost on the bare rock. This large timber grows on almost barren rock, in some places. He is acquainted with the newspaper called 'The Coos Bay Times, Marshfield, Oregon," and it is a paper of general circulation in Coos County. The photographs in that paper indicated as "Coos County Strawberry Field" might have been there. They raise strawberries there and there is some timber there in the background of the strawberry patch. He cannot tell from that photograph whether it is heavy timber or not. It may not be saw timber. The photograph "Pear Tree in Blossom" might have been there, they raise some pears there, not very much. They do not raise them to a very large extent. In places there are pears. He recognizes the photograph "Anson Rogers' Beautiful Farm Home on South Coos River" in this same paper as the home of Mr. Rogers in Coos County. It looks very much like it anyway and is a photograph of his home farm there. He cannot recognize the photograph "Another Coos County Farm" in this paper as any particular farm, but it might have been there. There are such places. He recognizes in this paper the photograph "Panoramic View of Stephen Rogers' Farm" as a photograph of Mr. Rogers' farm in Coos County and he recognizes the photograph "Myrtle Lodge, Home of Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Rogers, on the South Coos River" as the photograph of the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Rogers. There is timber back on the hills back of the farm, as shown by the photograph, and there is some growth of timber or what appears to be perhaps logged off land, but there is no land cultivated that was logged off. There was some they used for grazing land on the hillside there on the slopes. It is fair grazing land on the lower slopes. The photograph in the lower left hand corner on the same page of this paper entitled "Coos County Farm Scene" he recognizes as a farm scene in Coos County. It might have been there and the photograph "Panoramic View of Stephen Rogers' Farm" looks something like dairy farms down there.

Whereupon complainant offered said paper in evidence marked "Government's Exhibit 118" which was received and so marked and is hereinafter set out and described and made a part of this Statement of the Evidence and identified as such.

Whereupon witness testified that he does not know exactly the population of Coos County. It must be somewhere about 12,000 he thinks. The average price of the good bottom lands in Coos County along the river is somewhere about $70.00 per acre. He believes they ask higher prices than that for some of it along the rivers. Dairying, farming, fruit growing, lumbering, coal mining, market gardening, cattle and poultry raising are all carried on to some extent in that county, he believes. He has been a timber cruiser for the last fifteen years and has examined lands largely for big timber companies who were not interested in obtaining agricultural land. They do not want agricultural lands. In working for these timber companies he examined a piece of land with reference to the timber. They must always report in making cruises on the possibilities of the land, whether it is suitable for agriculture after the timber would be removed from it. He cannot recall, only in a general way, to what timber company he ever made a report on the agricultural possibilities of the land after the timber was removed in Coos County, he generally put it in his reports of any land that he ever examined, the character of the land and made a topographical map of the lands that he examined. He always has done that. At times he may not have done it. The principal thing in cruising lands for logging companies, examined by him was to examine as to the timber and the logging facilities only. He did not consider the agricultural value of these lands he examined in Coos County while he was working for the logging and timber companies so much as they do now since he has been working for the county. In a general way the topographical map always shows the slopes, whether they are high or steep. Most always he made out his report whether the land was suitable for agriculture or grazing after the timber would be removed, or whether it was very high, rough and rocky. He is not speaking of the county, but in a general way, all estimtaes that he made or ever made. He made written reports. As to all the land he cruised for the Simpson Lumber Company he made topographical maps of each forty acres. In a general way he believes that the reports will show whether it was agricultural land or not. He cannot say that he specifically reported whether each subdivision was suited for agriculture or not, he could not say in that report. He was not so particular at that time as he is now. Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Don't you know, as a matter of fact, Mr. McCarthy, that the Simpson Lumber Company was not interested a particle in the agricultural character of that land?

A. No, that wouldn't make any difference. A cruiser's report should show that anyhow, if it is right.

Whereupon witness testified that in making his cruises for the county his reports show whether the land is agricultural land and he classifies that in its present state and shows whether it will be suitable for agricultural or grazing lands, or whether it might be, after the timber would be removed—that is shown on each forty acre tract in a place provided for in the report by itself aside from the timber in the report blank. In the report blank, there is a place for inserting whether it will be agricultural land when the timber is removed. He worked some for other timber companies besides the Simpson people. He cruised some for C. R. Smith, the Menasha Woodenware man, but was not with them very long. He picked up some timber for them, sold some timber to them, but not very much. He did not sell them any logged over lands, he sold some lands of the Simpson Lumber Company, part of which had been logged over. The Woodenware Company understood that part of the lands sold to them was timber, but they did not understand that all of the lands that they purchased were timber. They had their own man cruise the lands. Their own cruiser came there and cruised the lands. He cruised the lands first but they sent a man there before they closed the deal to cruise it. They had two or three men on it of their own. There is considerable agricultural land around Myrtle Point and there are several little towns down in Coos County. Myrtle Point is somewhere near or in township 29 south, range 12 west, but he does not exactly remember without looking at the map. There is no railroad running into Coos County from the outside. There is a short local railroad from Marshfield to Myrtle Point. Transportation coming in from the outside is only by water. Title has passed from the Government to practically all of its lands in Coos County there, the even numbered sections. There is very little vacant Government land in the county. Most all of that was taken before he came into the county. There is a little agricultural land around the town of Sitkum, in Coos County. There is not any land that would be very easily cleared and cultivated in the eastern part of the county. There is a little strip in the valley along the Coquille River at the town of Sitkum in township 28 south, range 10 west. It is a very little narrow strip. Bridge is in township 29 south, range 11 west, somewhere near there. He has never cruised very much right around there near Bridge. There is a little strip of valley along the river where there is some agricultural land. He does not know where Bancroft is. It is a little postoffice station. He does not think there is any town there, but he does not remember ever being there. He knows there is a place called Bancroft there somewhere. He knows Gravel Ford, there is some agricultural land around there. There are a good many streams running through Coos County, branches of the Coquille River. There are not many that run into Coos Bay except the Coos River. There is some agricultural land down close to the mouth of the streams. There is considerable bottom land but after one goes up a certain distance, the valleys are very narrow, just narrow strips. There is quite a little bottom of agricultural land along the east fork of the Coquille River down there at Gravel

Ford. There is quite a little bottom of agricultural land in the northern part of Coos County north of Myrtle Point. In the timber area, there is scarcely any range, there is considerable range along on the east branch of the Coquille. The timber is too thick. The grass does not grow and cattle do not range on the northern part of the county at all.

Whereupon upon re-direct examination witness testified that he started four years ago in April cruising the timber lands of tax payers in Coos County each year for the County of Coos and put in all the time for two years and practically ever since, with the exception of about three months last winter. He found out who owned the lands by generally checking from the records or sub-divisions, generally checked from the records in the Court House and marked off the sub-divisions and the owners, generally had a map of the owners, ownership maps of all the townships in the county. The county did not furnish him an ownership map, he made these maps generally himself from the records. The county made an assessment of these lands to the owners each year based upon his cruise. He thinks 60,000 acres of the unsold lands of the company in Coos County would be very near what he had cruised, it might not be exactly that. While cruising these lands and the other timber lands in the county, he became, in a general way, familiar with the other part that he did not cruise. A couple of townships that the company had lands in, that he had not done very much in, he has not cruised them by forties. He has a sufficient or general knowledge of the part that he did not cruise, he had been over it more or less, and had such general knowledge as would enable him to make a fairly good estimate of the character of the soil, of the timber on the lands, and its general conditions. Coquille and Coos Rivers and other short streams are heading, with their branches, in what they call the Coast Range of Mountains, the west slope of the Coast Range. He would guess that Coquille, the County seat of Coos County in a straight line, is about eighteen miles to the mouth where is empties into the Pacific Ocean. Myrtle Point, on the Coquille River by railroad, is about thirty miles from Marshfield, and Coquille, the County seat to Marshfield by rail is about eighteen miles, and he thinks they call it nine miles from Coquille up to Myrtle Point. He thinks that Coquille has about 1,200 people and Myrtle Point about 1,500. Myrtle Point is the last town of any size on the way from Marshfield, by way of Myrtle Point to Roseburg. After one leaves Myrtle Point going east he has to go by stage or mountain road to reach Roseburg through the Coast Range.

Q. "What is the fact, if you know, as to whether or not practically all of the argicultural, dairying and fruit lands of Coos County are situated on the bottoms of the Coos River, the Coquille River and other streams leading into the Pacific Ocean or into these streams, in the western part of Coos County and outside of the limits of the grant?

A. Yes. All the land that is cultivated in Coos County is practically on the river bottom."

Whereupon witness testified that these are all west of the west boundary line of this grant involved in this suit that he knows of. He does not know of any that is not. He thinks this "Government's Exhibit 118" "The Coos Bay Times, Marshfield, Oregon, Evening Edition" was published sometime in January, 1912, or early last winter. The photograph "Anson Rogers' Beautiful Farm Home, on South Coos River" is on tide water of the Coos River. The tide does not ebb and flow over these lands that are shown that appear to be diked in that picture. That tide land or tide stream must be about fifteen miles from Marshfield; from the Pacific Ocean to the mouth of South Coos River is about six miles by water. South Coos River empties into the Coos River about ten miles from Coos Bay, right below that Anson Rogers' farm shown in that picture, a short distance. Marshfield is on Coos Bay. Coos River empties into Coos Bay. South Coos River empties into the bay right west of Marshfield on the east side of the Bay. Marshfield is situated on the west side of the bay. The character of this land showing the beautiful farm home of Mr. Rogers is what they call the bottom land of Coos River. It is not tide lands. Most any kind of grass grows on it, but he could not say whether it grows before it is cultivated. The "Panoramic View of Stephen Rogers' Farm" is right across on Coos River a short distance above the Anson Rogers place shown in the picture. There is no tide water running through this farm of 740 acres with 220 acres in cultivation described in the article. The tide ebbs and flows in the stream that runs through this land. The heighth of the tide there is ordinarily about seven feet at this point where these farms are. These farms must be ten miles away from the western boundary of the line of this grant to the nearest point. There are no wagon roads hardly on Coos River, and it would be about the same distance by wagon road to the nearest west boundary line of this grant, from the nearest point of these farms. There are really no wagon roads on Coos River above tide water. They go by boat or launch and the transportation is most all by launches on the tide water of these streams. Above these farms the valley narrows down to a small gorge and there is scarcely any bottom land above tide water in Coos River. The Coquille River empties into the Pacific Ocean south of Marshfield and there are small river steamers running from Bandon to Coquille City. There is tide water in Coquille River above Coquille City, but he could not say what the ebb and flow of the tide is as far up the river as Coquille City, it must be four or five feet, probably more than that. The tide affects the waters of the Coquille River as far east as Myrtle Point. Myrtle Point is very near the limit of tide water, except in very high tides. These farms and dairy ranches and fruit farms lie outside of and west of the grant, towards the Pacific Ocean. Sitkum is a ranch farm house and a postoffice there and has a population of probably ten or twelve, along there. He could not say how long it has had a postoffice, but thinks it had a postoffice when he came to the county. There are no stores there. There is no place of business there, only the stage station. The man that runs the stage between Roseburg and Marshfield keeps his horses there and has a ranch there. They keep stage horses there and change horses there. This stage line runs the whole year, but there is a part of the year they have to use pack horses instead of wagons on account of snow and bad roads, more particularly the snow on the mountain range, from Sitkum to Roseburg. There are two stage lines from Coos County to Roseburg, one from Coos to Roseburg, and the other from Myrtle Point. The stages pass over what they call the Coast Range of Mountains. Capa Arago Lighthouse Bridge is right west of Marshfield and below the mouth of the entrance to the harbor of Coos Bay. This Coos County Strawberry Field is not within the limits of the grant. The picture of the Coos County Dairy Scene is a tide water scene. The milk is transported from these dairy farms to the creameries and cheese factories on Coos River by these launches. On Coquille River they probably do a little dairying above tide water, on the smaller bottoms along the streams but on Coos River the transportation is all practically done on tide water by launches. There are several cheese factories, there are two or three places perhaps more that manufacture cheese in Coos County. There is not any particularly large cheese factory there that he knows of. Any of them that he knows of are on tide water. There is one on Coos River on what is called Catching Inlet, a branch of Coos Bay and one over on the Coquille River on tide water.

Whereupon on re-cross-examination witness testified that Coquille River empties into the ocean. There is not any bay there, he believes that it runs over into Myrtle Point, in township 29 south, range 12 west, and then there are branches extending out eastward into Douglas County and south into Curry County and east over the edge of Douglas and Coos Counties and that is the east branch last referred to. He is acquainted with Bridge, situated in township 29 south, range 11 west, and there are some ranches right along there. He thinks Bancroft is a postoffice, but he cannot locate that—he knows there is a place of that kind there somewhere. Etelka is in township 31 south, range 12 west, and there are some ranches there along the south fork of the Coquille River. All the ranches on the Coos River side on the Coos Bay side are practically all on tide water. There are other ranches in the western part of the county on the Coquille side on branches of the Coquille River. There are small bottoms that run up above tide water, very narrow bottoms on most all of the branches. These people would naturally build their cheese factories down at tide water in order to market their cheese. He supposes the transportation facilities on the Coos River side are practically all water. On the other side there are roads running up to all the ranches so far as there are ranches on the river. It is water transportation on Coos River. They would naturally put a manufacturing industry of any kind down near the shipping point, that is where all the ranches are on the Coos River, they would naturally put them there. All the ranches on the Coos River side on both branches of Coos River on Coos Bay in the valleys running into Coos Bay are on tide water. On Coos River they are all on tide water. On Coquille River a large majority of them is on tide water. These are bottom farms, that is, referring to these Coos farms and on the Coquille side. The ranches around Bridge and Bancroft, Myrtle Point and Sitkum, are on bottom lands and have very little hill lands. Sometimes they clean off a small piece of the side hill for grazing or something of that kind, but they are practicaly all bottom farms in the County. These are not tide farms on tide water around Bridge or Sitkum. Tide does not extend into eastern Coos County or around Sitkum or Bridge. There is not very much tide at Myrtle Point. That is just about the head of tide water, it just raises a little there, the tide varies there at different times of the year, he is acquainted some with the variation in the tide but cannot recall the exact figures. There are three stage lines running over into Coos County, one from Drain and two from Roseburg. The one that runs from Roseburg by Sitkum runs only part of the year, they have quite a high range on the road. There had been no serious accident on the stage road by way of Sitkum but the serious accident had been on the Myrtle Point road and it is not the condition of these roads more than it is the snow, that prevents these stages from running during the winter time. The Myrtle Point stage runs all the year round from Roseburg into Marshfield, part of the time in the summer it is an auto stage. The Drain stage runs all the year round, it crosses over the Coast Range but not so high as the Roseburg line. The Drain route follows the valley of the Umpqua River down to the Coast. There are quite a number of ranches along the Umpqua River right in the valley on the bottoms. The Coast Range varies from place to place, some places the divides are lower to get over than in other places. The Coast Range averages about 3,000 to 3,500 feet in altitude in places, that is, the divide will average that. He does not mean that that would be the altitude from tide water of the divide, the divide is broken and is not continuous.

Whereupon upon re-direct examination witness testified that the stage line from Drain to Marshfield goes down to Elkton, down the Elk Creek, a branch of the Umpqua River, and then follows the Umpqua River to Scottsburg, and at Scottsburg the passengers are transferred to a boat and taken to Winchester Bay, on the Pacific Ocean, and at that point the boat is abandoned and a stage takes them up, and the passengers are carried by stage on the beach to a point on Coos Bay, and there take a boat and are transferred by boat on Coos Bay to Marshfield. There are some ranches along the Umpqua River between Elkton and Scottsburg and from Scottsburg to Gardiner located along the river bottoms. These ranches seem to be general farming and dairying, and they raise some grain along there. He does not think there is any valley from Scottsburg to Gardiner. He does not remember any. There are places from Elkton to Scottsburg where the valley is about from a quarter to a half mile wide. The Umpqua River follows a deep gorge from Elkton to Scottsburg and the bluffs on either side of the Umpqua River all the way down through that canyon varies from fifty to one hundred feet and then the mountains are high there. The gorge would probably be fifty to one hundred feet, but there are high rocky slopes above that—high mountains on both sides of the river. The Umpqua River practically cuts a gorge through the Coast Range. He believes that Myrtle Point is outside of the westerly boundary line of the indemnity limits of this grant. Sitkum is the eastern limit of the farm lands along that branch of the Coquille River, and is just on the eastern boundary and in the adjoining section to the Umpqua Forest Reserve shown on "Defendants' Exhibit 259." There is one store at the town of Bridge, a small, little country store, and no other business there except a little farm. He could not state the number of acres of farm land there at Bridge, little farms extending up the river from there, little narrow strips of bottom along it, he could not say how many acres there would be. Bridge is located on the middle fork of the Coquille River about twelve miles from Myrtle Point. It is a mountain stream, and at Bridge it does not narrow into a gorge, it is not navigable and you could nearly jump across it in summer time, in winter time there is quite a lot of water in it and it is a swift stream. He thinks they have driven some logs by there from above. The C. A. Smith people get most of their logs by logging railroads. Formerly they got most of them down there from the mountain streams, they would roll the logs down by the mountain streams, but the Smith people get most of their logs by railroads. Logging down these streams is practically abandoned. They use donkey engines to haul the logs into the streams, a short distance from the streams and a logger can move a log with a donkey engine and cable without resetting his engine, about a quarter of a mile. If he wanted to move it farther, he would have to reset his engine.

Whereupon on re-cross examination witness testified that Myrtle Point appears to be on the edge of the limits of the grant, by reference to "Defendants' Exhibit 259." Myrtle Point is an agricultural town depending upon agriculture. There is a sawmill there. Local people have a sawmill there, but he does not remember the name of the company. That mill cuts about 40,000 feet in ten hours and he supposes employs fifteen or twenty men. There are other farm houses close by Bridge that probably get their mail there, but right in what is called Bridge he does not remember of more than a couple of residences there. There are probably a couple of houses within a range of a quarter of a mile of Bridge.

Whereupon J. F. NELSON, called as a witness on behalf of defendants, being duly sworn, testified, that he is sixty-two years old, resides at Mulino, Clackamas County, Oregon, and is at present a farmer, and he has resided in that county about thirty-six years and occupied the position of county assessor from 1902 to 1909, and while such resided at Oregon City. His present business is farming. He is very well acquainted with the unsold lands of the Oregon and California Railroad Company in Clackamas County, where they are, and is acquainted with the even sections within the limits of the grant and became acquainted with them before he was elected assessor. He was deputy in the assessor's office at that time, and went around over the county, and over parts of this land belonging to the company, as deputy assessor. He was deputy assessor three years, under John C. Bradley two years; under Bradley from 1894 to 1898 and Williams from 1898 to 1902. He did not assess these lands while he was deputy assessor but passed over them as deputy. During the seven years that he was assessor he assessed these lands, he was over them while he was deputy, but not while he was assessor. He has not been over and through them since that time, frequently, but he has been over them several times; they used to go in there hunting and fishing. He passed through them twice while he was deputy assessor. These lands are situated in the southern and eastern part of Clackamas County, and most of them in the southern part of the county. These lands are nearly all in the Cascade range. The majority of the land is timbered land, or land that is worthless. The majority of it is up in the Cascade Mountains. To which testimony complainant objected as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and it was agreed between the parties that this same objection should be considered as taken to all the testimony of this witness relating to the character of the lands within the limits of these grants, settlements thereon, and public land entries thereof. Whereupon witness testified that the value of these lands would be mostly for the timber on them. Most of this timber is fir and spruce, he thinks. There is very little of this land down in the valley where it could be put into agriculture, there is but very little of that, most of the land is up in the mountains where it would be beyond the settlements. In his judgment there is not over four per cent of the lands of the company in that county that would be good for agricultural purposes. Some of the land in the foot hills which is not clear back on top of the mountains, would be good for a short time in the summer for grazing, which he would judge was about twenty per cent of the whole. There is only a short time in the summer that it can be used for grazing purposes, because they would have to wait until the snow goes off. It is up near the snow line and they have to wait until the snow gets off the ground and the stuff grows. It is mostly pea-vine, wild stuff like that. He supposes horses, cattle or other stock might perhaps graze on that land for three months in the summer after the snow was gone and the stuff grew, which takes some little time.

"Q. Now, suppose a so-called actual settler or purchaser should want to buy 160 acres of land in this grazing section, to make it a home, and was required to confine his stock on this 160 acres for grazing purposes, and was not permitted to have a range outside, what would you say as to his ability to support his stock on this 160 acres? Limiting it to that 160 acres only?

A. Why, he couldn't do it. He couldn't keep his stock on it. He couldn't have feed for them.

Q. Why? Why do you say that?

A. Why, because he couldn't get the feed off that 160 acres to feed from the time the pasture gave out until it came in again the next year.

Q. How many stock would 160 acres of this land, any 160 acres of this land, really support for two or three months in the summer, if they were limited to that 160 acres?

A. There couldn't but a very few head. You see, this pea-vine doesn't grow all over. It just grows in spots."

Whereupon witness testified, that a good deal of the grant is of a rocky nature, and there is loose rock on it. It has been burned over, a good deal of it. Most of the other vegetation is this tall fern that nothing will eat. He does not know that there is any other particular vegetation. Once in a great while one will find a spot where there happens to be a little other grass. There is a good deal of salal on that ground up there. He never saw any animal eat the salal. He does not think they would eat it. Possibly goats might, as they will eat most anything. That land that has been burned over in Clackamas County might be used for grazing purposes, if there is anything on it. He would judge that about thirty-five per cent of it could be so used. The burned area is in the southern part of the grant, in Townships 6 and 7 South, Ranges 2 and 3 East, in the south part of the county. Butte Creek is the line between Marion and Clackamas counties. The line between Clackamas and Multnomah Counties is in Township 2 South, he thinks. The line between Multnomah and Clackamas Counties runs practically east to the top of the Cascade Mountains. Most of the company's lands would be in what is called the southeast part of the county. The Forest Reserve which is at Bull Run, is close to Bull Run; part of Bull Run is in the Forest Reserve. The Cascade Forest Reserve is east of that. He has been at Wilhoit Springs, and Gowley Creek and Butte Creek. He has not been out to the head waters of Clackamas River, which heads in the Forest Reserve. He has been on Clear Creek, Canyon Creek and Cazadera, all through that country; and has been to Cherryville and Eagle Creek, all along there, and has lived in Clackamas County thirty-five years. He considers that the railroad land that has timber on it, would not be good for anything, after this timber is removed; that is for a settler or a person to buy, or for a person to go on. He would not consider that it would be worth anything, because it is so far back in the mountains that they couldn't raise anything on it to make a living on it and for the reason that it is so far back in the mountains, the soil, he does not consider it good to raise anything on, and it is so far back in the mountains, they have frost away late in the spring and early in the fall. Climatic conditions on account of frosts and elevation would interfere with the production of crops. The soil is what he calls "shot land," meaning soil that won't pulverize up like the lands do down in the valley. It works up in little bits of round lumps and dries up. Down in the foothills they raise some garden stuff and some grain, but no one has any land up in that part, back where the railroad land is. He does not think there is any grain or fruit, to any extent, could be raised on these unsold lands if the timber was taken off. He knows this side, where they have tried to raise grain and fruit, and they raise very little. He knows by experience what it will cost to cut down and clear this land of the stumps of fir timber, because he had land cleared up, and it will cost from $75 to $100 an acre, depending upon how heavy and big the timber is. The land that he grubbed and cleared was fir and some little pine. It was just medium as far as the timber is concerned, neither heavy or light. He bought powder and had the stumps blown out.

"Q. Suppose that the land was timbered, and would carry six million feet of saw timber, board measure, to the quarter section, what would you say as to about what that would cost to get the roots out—take the timber off and get it ready so you could plow it?

A. Well, six million feet is just medium, a medium amount of timber on a quarter section. I would judge it would cost $75 an acre.

Q. Well, now, after you had cleared this land, what would the bulk of it be good for, if anything?

A. Well, I don't know where the timber is whether it would be good for anything or not. I don't think that it would raise anything worth while, that is, to pay for farming.

Q. Why?

A. Because it won't grow.

Q. Well, why won't it grow?

A. Because the soil is not fit for agricultural purposes, and, as I said before, it is too near the snow line.

Whereupon witness testified that there is a good deal of these unsold lands, after the timber is removed, that is rocky, a great deal of it; more than one-half that is up in the mountains is rocky. That is all cut up with canyons up there; wherever these creeks come, there are canyons, and deep canyons, and this timber grows right in the sides of the canyons; and there is hardly any level land, to amount to anything between the canyons. These little creeks that one sees here make deep canyons up there, and the Molalla and Clackamas and all those creeks are very deep canyons. There are no valleys to amount to anything along these creek canyons up there in the mountains where one could farm any. Clackamas County has been settled in the western part of the county, around Oregon City and Milwaukie since about 1840. Oregon City is the oldest town in the Willamette Valley; and it was the first seat of government for the Territory of Oregon, where Dr. John McLoughlin lived and died. Dr. McLoughlin was in the employ of the Hudson Bay Company first, and afterwards when he settled and took up his claim at Oregon City, he never got title, because he was not an American citizen. Oregon City is about thirteen miles from Portland. Mt. Hood is in the eastern part of Clackamas County, Oregon, and a little southeast of Oregon City, about fifty miles, in the Cascade Mountains. Whereupon on cross examination witness testified that he had lived in Clackamas County thirty-five years and had been in Oregon forty-two years. He has lived two miles on the other side of Mulino, on the Molalla River, which is his post office, except six years of that time when he lived in Oregon City while he was assessor. While he was deputy assessor he went through these lands to assess the residents of owned property there. The deputy assessor doesn't assess the railroad land. The assessor himself does that in the office. He went around assessing the people who resided in the county and went over these lands in going to their residences. In visiting the settlers he passed over the railroad lands, and that is his acquaintance with them. The town of Mulino, near which he lives, is some distance from most of these railroad lands; about twelve miles away from most of it. There is a little railroad land within five or six miles of Mulino, and some right close to where he is. Small pieces, but most of the lands of the railroad company are about twelve miles away from his place. He has been over these lands at other times than as deputy assessor; he has been up there fishing and hunting, and all over the mountains. That is a great resort up in there for fishing and hunting, and when they hunt they go all over it. Township 3 South, 1 East, is six or seven miles from Oregon City, and Oregon City is thirteen miles from Portland, making nineteen miles from this land to Portland. The unsold lands in Township 3 South, 4 East is near Cazadero. He has been all over there. There are settlers all through that country there. Township 3 South, 4 East is settled; 4 South, 3 East is settled and part of 4 South, 4 East is settled. He cannot give the sections now in 4 South, 4 East that are settled and that are not settled; but most of 4 South, 4 East, one is getting up pretty well towards the foothills of the Cascades and there is a portion of that, that is settled and a portion that is unsettled. Here and there are creeks in through there, and the best lands are all taken. All that is left in there now is something that is rough, and is not really worth taking up, because it is on the sides of canyons. 4 South, 5 East and 4 South, 4 East is the same. Dodge and Elwood are up in the foothills of the Cascades. Elwood is south of Sandy. He did not go up to Elwood from Sandy, but went in the other way. He has been all through there. These lands are very rough, cut up with creeks and canyons, and everything—all of this. A good many of these claims—part of them—are on the side hills and are worth nothing but as grazing lands. There are a good many of these settlements in through this section. They get a good piece of land in 160, and the balance of it is grazing land on the side of the canyon. These creeks make big canyons. 5 South, 2 East is a good township, that is all settled, that is good farming country in there. There is very little unsold railroad lands in that township. The company has a little piece of railroad land right here on the Molalla River, probably 30 or 40 acres in there. Section 13 is in the north end of that township, along the Molalla River, and when one gets up there and a little back, the Molalla commences. All of the lands that are on that Molalla—there is some good farming lands on the Molalla—after one gets up a little further there is a little valley. There are good farming lands in the eastern part of this township, in 5 South, 2 East. He is acquainted with the railroad land in Section 25, Township 5 South, Range 2 East, the Southeast quarter of Section 25 is back in the foothills of the Cascades, and he could not say that he was acquainted with that specific tract. 5 South, 3 East is a settled township; not all of it, he does not mean that it is all settled; it is partly settled, there are settlers in that township. Township 5 South, 4 East is getting up into the foothills of the Cascades, there are settlers in there, it is partially settled. It is not a fact that there are settlers in all of these townships. After one goes south from 6 South, there are but few settlers. There are some settlers in 6 South, 2 East and 6 South, 3 East. He does not think there are any settlers in 7 South, after one passes 7 South, 2, 3 or 4 East. That is getting up into the Cascade Range and he does not think there are any settlers there. He would not say positively whether there were or not, but he does not think there are. He had a plat of every piece of land in the county when he was assessor for his own use, and he knew all about the land. There are some settlers in 7 South, 2 East, the other side of Soda Springs. There are no settlers in the township where Table Rock is situated. There are some settlers in Township 6 South, 4 East. Township 5 South, 5 East, is up in the foothills. It is possible there might be some settlers in there. He cannot say exactly that there are no settlers at all. 5 South, 4 East is getting into the Cascade Mountains. 4 South, 5 East, is in the Cascade Mountains, east of Cazadero and Estacada. There are settlers in that township and a few, but not many, in Township 3 South, 6 East, which is way up in the Cascade Mountains. There are not many settlers there, he thinks. He is perfectly satisfied that there are not many settlers there, but he would not swear there wasn't. He would not be positive, but he is convinced there are some settlers in Township 6 South, 4 East. Township 6 South, 5 East, part of it is in the Cascade Reserve and part of it is settled. In Township 2 South, 6 East, Marmot is settled, and at Cherryville there are some settlers, but not many. That is in what they call the burn. Dodge is up in what they call the German burn. That has all been burned over years and years ago. There must be settlers in 3 South, 6 East. There are several townships where there are no settlers. This county runs to 8½ South, he thinks it is, and 9½ East.

"Q. Now, please examine the map, Mr. Nelson, and tell me what townships have no settlers in them, to your knowledge?

A. Well, we will say 7 South, no—none—I wouldn't say there was none in 7 South, 2 East. 7 South, 2 East, you see. Here is the county line—3 South and 7 East.

Q. That is 7 South, 3 East you are pointing to.

A. What was it you asked?

Q. I asked you just to name the townships there were no settlers in?

A. 7 South, 3 East, there are very few. I cannot answer those questions positively from my memory.

Q. You wouldn't testify positively, then, that there are no settlers in any of these townships?

A. Well, I would testify that there was no settlers in it, to the best of my knowledge; but I could tell by going to the assessment roll, I think, because we assessed. I have got maps of Clackamas County, or did have, that showed every tract of land and who owns it at the present time every year, and if I could examine them I could tell exactly what townships and everything was settled, and what was not.

Q. But from your present knowledge, you would not attempt to testify positively as to what townships had settlers and what had not?

A. No, sir, I wouldn't do that, because I don't want to testify to anything but what I know."

Whereupon witness testified that the locations of these lands in the different sections odd or even, makes a good deal of difference in the formation of the soil and in the lands; for instance, Section 3, 6 South, 5 East, might be a good section, and some other might be in a canyon or worthless. The numbering of the sections would make no difference. In the southern part of the county, covered by his testimony, there is probably no difference between the railroad lands and the even numbered sections. Most of the northern part, covered by his testimony, was taken up before the land grant was given to the railroad. His testimony is in regard to the railroad land, because the good land has been either taken up or bought up until one gets back into the Cascade Mountains. There is some of the land that is worthless, that they wouldn't have, even down here in 5 South, 2 or 3 East, some that is worthless, they wouldn't have it. The general character of the land is the same, whether on the even numbered or odd numbered sections, and his testimony would have to cover the condition of the country as it exists there.

"Q. You never examined this—ran the lines on this land—to see if 160-acre tracts could be selected by 40-acre subdivisions, that would furnish support for a man and his family in cultivation and use of the land?

A. No, I never ran the lines, but a majority of the land is up in the mountains, so far back that it would not support a man and his family. There is parties that have land up in this side of the railroad land that cannot make a living on their land, because produce or grain, or anything of that kind won't grow. It has been burned over, and it is poor land. Is poor land, that is, all stuff won't grow on it. Once in a while you will find a piece of land there that you can grow some fruit on, or you can grow a little vegetables.

Q. Isn't it a fact that this shot land you have mentioned is generally considered good fruit growing soil?

A. In a fruit location; but when it is too far back, it isn't worth anything.

Q. If the altitude there is not very high, is it, Mr. Nelson?

A. I don't know just what the altitude is, but it is getting pretty well up when you get up to 6 and 7 South, that is, when you get up to 6 South, 2 East, there is a valley Wilhoit Springs is in. When you get past that, you get right up in the foothills of the Cascades. I don't know what the altitude is. I know parties that have gone on Government land in 6 South, 2 East, and tried to make a living there, and gave up, moved out, because they couldn't raise grain or vegetables to live on.

Q. You were so informed? That is from hearsay, I understand?

A. I saw it, and have been there.

Q. You didn't know anything about their uses of the land, did you? You didn't know how they cultivated the land?

A. I did.

Q. Except what you were told?

A. I knew the parties well, and knew them for years.

Q. So you would say that none of this land is susceptible to cultivation in the grant?

A. No, I don't say that at all. I don't say there is none of it at all, because there is some of it in the grant that is good land—some of it.

Q. I mean in Clackamas County, that you have testified to?

A. Yes, that is what I mean. There is some good land in this grant in Clackamas County that is susceptible to cultivation.

Q. Where is that land located, Mr. Nelson?

A. It is 4 South, 2 East, that you was looking at here—a very little. There is not much land that is good for cultivation; but this in 4 South, 2 East, is what we would call in the valley, and that could be cultivated. In Section 11, 4 South, 2 East, they have got some land there that, after the timber is removed, if a person would clean it up, it would be farm land; they could farm it. But it would cost them $100 an acre to clear it up—more than the land is worth.

Q. Your experience in farming has been principally in the valley land, hasn't it?

A. I have been around. My farming, personally, has been in the valley land, but I have lived up in the mountains, and seen where they farmed there on this burned-over land, like the railroad company has. Persons will try it for a while, and then they will give it up. They cannot make a living on it, and move out. I know of several that has done that."

Whereupon, witness further testified that there is considerable of this railroad land that is not burned over. If it had been burned over there would be no timber on it. Second growth is not considered when one is talking about timbered lands. Of course, there is second growth of timber; but when he speaks of timber lands, he don't mean second growth. Some of the timber in those foothills is good timber. To make it accessible to market they would have to build a logging road and railroad in there. There are no streams one could run the logs down. They would have to put a railroad in there. These timber lands are about fifty miles from Portland. There are some of the railroad lands in 4 South, 3 East, that are susceptible to cultivation. Possibly there might be some railroad land there, a little in there, in Township 4 South, 3 East, that would be tillable. The railroad land, when they assessed it, if it was not timbered land, and could be cultivated, was put down in that way on the assessment roll, so that he would know what kind of land it was, but he could not remember the sections of Clackamas County; there was over one million acres in the county, and it is utterly impossible for him to remember each section, just how it lays. He has a way of knowing the percentage of these lands that are susceptible to cultivation, or suitable for agriculture, and figured it out from the assessment rolls and his own personal knowledge. He has been over a great share of the land himself. A good deal of the land in Township 5 South, Range 3 East, is settled and possibly there might be some tillable land in the railroad company's land. He could not tell about Section 7. He does not remember the sections in each township, just how they are. Township 5 South, 3 East, is out about Canyon Creek. Some of the specific tracts he could testify to, from his personal knowledge, because he knew the sections and knew the land, where it is; but as a general thing, he wouldn't do it. That is only in the southern parts of the county. He knows that land is worthless. He can testify to a good deal of that land in the southern part of the county as worthless. He can testify that the unsold lands in that vicinity generally, because all of the unsold lands are unfit for cultivation. A person couldn't make a living on it; if it were cleared up a person couldn't make a living on it. He does not mean that his testimony shall go to all the lands in Clackamas County to that effect, just the lands in the Cascade Mountains, that are so far back they are not worth cultivating—a person couldn't make a living on them. Of course, they have good land in Clackamas County, a little of it, but not much; private individuals own most of it. There are settlements running up into these townships, within which these lands are situated and until one gets too far south. In 6 South, 2 East, there are some little settlements, and in 7 South, 3 East, a very little. Butte Creek cuts across through there and cuts off some of those two townships, and puts it in Marion County. There is a good deal of livestock raised in Clackamas County. There isn't near enough stock raised in that county to supply the markets. There is a good deal of stock in the county—there is a good deal of stock bought outside of Clackamas County for the markets here, and after one gets back in the foothills there isn't so very much stock raised. Mots of the sheep and cows from Eastern Oregon range on the Forest Reserve. He does not think the unsold lands in Clackamas County would make a good sheep range, people never take any sheep up there. There is a good deal of land in Eastern Clackamas County that is not in private ownership, there is quite a lot in Eastern Clackamas County outside of the Forest Reserve, he could not tell how much there is. There is considerable fruit raised in Clackamas County, but he does not think considerable fruit is raised in the vicinity of these railroad lands; or very much in the eastern or western edge of the lands in the grant. As a general thing farmers have a little orchard for their own use, and that is about all the fruit there is raised around there. He has heard of the Hood River fruit country, at Hood River, Oregon, on the slope of Mt. Hood, part of the Cascade Mountains, but does not know whether it is generally recognized as one of the finest fruit countries in the United States. He thinks they haven't tried it. People who want to sell lands will say that it is good for a good many things that it is not good for. He does not know whether the Hood River fruit country is producing good fruit now or not. He would like to say in explanation a little more about the Hood River country. When asked the question he didn't understand about the Hood River fruit country. He was thinking of Mt. Hood. The Hood River fruit country is, of course, a good ways from Portland, on this side of the Columbia, across the Cascades. He knows all about that country. Mt. Hood is situated in Township 2 South, Range 9 or 9½ East, in the eastern end of Clackamas County. Clackamas County runs to the top of the mountains. He has been up to the Hood River fruit country and knows that it lays in the Cascades. He does not know how far from Mt. Hood the fruit country is, he could not say in regard to that. Mt. Hood is in 2 South, 9 East, right on the edge of Clackamas County; 9 East is 18 miles east; 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 South, Ranges 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 East, wherein the railroad lands are located; Mt. Hood would be 18 miles east of these railroad lands. He does not know the distance from Mt. Hood to the Hood River lands. The Hood River lands are altogether in different shape from the lands on this side of the Cascades. Hood River is down on the Columbia, and naturally would be good fruit land, the company's land is up on top of the Cascade Mountains, where he don't think it would be a fruit country at all. He couldn't say from having seen Mt. Hood, which is visible from the fruit lands in the Hood River Valley, and the lands of this grant in Clackamas County, what, if any, difference there is in the distance from Mt. Hood to the Hood River fruit country. He really hasn't any opinion, because he does not know anything about it, and cannot tell. He has been to Hood River several times, but never paid any attention to the distance between Hood River and Mt. Hood. He knows that the Hood River fruit lands are in the foothills of the Cascades. These lands of the railroad company are about on top of the Cascades, and the Hood River lands are down in the valley, on low ground next to the Columbia River, and that makes a great deal of difference. It is a fact that the Cascade Mountains, the foothills commence at the Columbia River, at the town of Hood River, and gradually go up to the top of the mountain. There isn't much of a foothill to these fruit lands. It isn't very far from the Columbia River up to the fruit lands in Hood River; they are not much higher than the Columbia River. Some of these fruit lands are practically all on hillsides, on rolling land, and some of them are right on top of the flat; table lands, gradually rising—flat lands up from the river. There is no river flat, but the Columbia would naturally be the level. He does not know how far these fruit lands extend back. He was up on the first bench and went over it. He never saw any fruit growing along on the flats of the Columbia River. He was not up there. He does not know as to whether the flats along the Columbia River would overflow at this place. He does not think the Columbia could get high enough to overflow them. It is rather steep from the Columbia River up at Hood River and along there. It is not straight up. They have a wagon road up there. It is a steep hill. He never paid any attention to how that land lies towards Mt. Hood, but it naturally gradually ascends to Mt. Hood; it would have to do so. He could not tell if that is a broken country, as he never was outside of the town of Hood River, up on the top of it. It is a broken country when one gets up in there. It might be broken at the river, and still when one got up on the first bench, there might be a little stretch of level land there. He never tried to raise any fruit or vegetables, or any grains, or agricultural products of any kind, in the vicinity of or on any of these railroad lands, but he is well acquainted with persons who have, and has been at their places. These persons tried to raise fruit there. He does not suppose they were experienced fruit people. The names of these persons were Mr. Paynter, Mr. Russell and Mr. Davis. Russell lived there and Davis lived there, about fifteen or twenty years, perhaps twenty-five years, and were old settlers in that country. They had to go into the cedar timber and make shingles to make a living. They couldn't make it off their land. He knows that because he was clerking in a store, and received the shingles from them, and knew all about it. He has been all over their lands and knows all about it. He knew all about their financial condition, from having clerked in a store where they bought groceries, and being up on their farms. He has been up on their farms while he was in the store and after he was out of the store, when he moved into Clackamas County. They lived up there fifteen or twenty-five years. When the timber and deer ran out, so they couldn't make shingles and get their groceries, they moved out. They have all left there. He thinks they have been out of these perhaps fifteen years or more. He cannot give the section where they lived, but they lived in 6 South, 2 East. He does not know the section they lived on. He thinks they both lived in the same township and range, they were quite close together. They lived there in 1876, and he does not know just when they left. He came down here in Clackamas County. He knows they have been gone—Davis has been dead a good many years, but his family left there. Russell is living now, and he left there quite a good many years ago. He has been on Russell's farm. Russell tried to raise grain, hay and oats for his cattle, and the oats would grow about a foot and a half or two feet high, where they did grow, and the fern would grow a great deal higher. He never got the ferns out of the ground. Davis died down on his son's farm in the valley. This fern land is not generally recognized as good vegetable land, even when it is cleared. Some of it is, but fern will grow very large where one cannot grow anything of vegetables, or fruit, or grain, to amount to anything at all. One generally finds ferns in rich, loamy soil most all over Oregon. One will find ferns where the land is not all rocks, but where it is rocky gravel, fern will grow most any place. It will go down to moisture fifteen or twenty feet, the roots will. He does not know that a number of the best fruit farms in the State of Oregon are on fern lands.

Whereupon J. T. GRAY, called as a witness on behalf of defendants, being duly sworn, testified that he is forty-five years old, by occupation a farmer, and has lived in Township 12 South, Range 6 West, in Benton County, Oregon, where he has lived for fourteen years, about fourteen miles or thereabouts from Corvallis. He has been over about half of the unsold lands of the Oregon and California Railroad Company in Benton County. He first hunted over them, and this summer he was out a month and a half as a fire patrol. He traveled them as a fire patrol for the Oregon and California Railroad Company, to protect their timber and other timber as well, from fire. Part of these lands are covered with fir timber, and part are burned. To which testimony complainant objected as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and it was agreed between the parties that this same objection should be deemed as taken to all the testimony of this witness relating to the character of the lands within the limits of these grants, settlements thereon and public land entries thereof. Whereupon witness testified that about three-quarters of the lands that he had traveled over was timbered and its chief value was its timber. Some of the lands he had visited were burned over; he could not state the number of acres, but would say there is a good scope of country, probably ten sections, which had been burned over. The character of some of this soil is gravelly, and other is more of a clay soil, while some of it is loose soil, with fern in it. Most of the vegetation grown on this land is fern and salal and some portions of it has grown up to brush. He would say that of the entire holdings of the company, both timbered and burned over, that he has visited, there would be not over fifteen per cent suitable for agriculture or horticulture, or any useful purpose, other than the timber that is on it. He would hardly know what use to put these burned over lands to, but these few settlers who have settled between the railroad land back of the peak, have tried to run a few goats, with out-ranges, but he does not know as to their success. There is very little grazing on these burned over lands; the vegetation is fern with a few patches of peas early in the spring. What pea vines there are, are only in small patches. These pea vines only afford sustenance for animals two or three months.

"Q. Now, suppose, Mr. Gray, that an actual settler, under this law which the Government is seeking to assert against the company, should apply to the company and be allowed to purchase 160 acres at $2.50 an acre for a home for himself, I wish you would state to the court what this man would do, or could do, if anything, with this 160 acres, if he was required to confine himself to that land, and did not have the privilege of pasturing outside land, or doing work outside.

A. Well, there is very little of it that can be got to with a wagon road without a big expense, and it is generally rough, and I don't think a man could live on it the year around—he would have to move out in the winter time.

Q. What do you say, and what can you say, and what is the fact, as to whether or not such a man, under those circumstances, on 160 acres, could or could not make a living at any useful business on the land?

A. Not at present, unless something would turn up that we haven't got in our community there."

Whereupon witness testified that a majority of these timber lands is fairly good timber. He has had experience as a logger, and knows the fir timber that is capable of being manufactured into saw timber or lumber. He has had experience as a logger nine years for the Benton Lumber Company in Benton County. About twenty per cent of these lands he has been over in Benton County would make first grade lumber. Most of the timber would come under the head of second class timber; a small portion would be first, and a small portion would be third class. He has been over the balance of these lands in Benton County, or near them, or across them, to some extent, other than those that he has spoken of, but not enough to give evidence before the court here of what the character of the balance is. He noticed the general character of the balance, just from looking at it, and it is broken land, and it was just about the same as what he had been over, from looking at it as he went along. There are other burned districts in this unsold land, besides the 6,400 acres of burned area that he had mentioned, that he had not been over, but it is the same kind. Its value is less, because it is further back in the mountains, where nothing but a pack horse could be gotten to the land. Mary's Peak is 4,600 and some feet high, and has good timber around it. He doesn't know the height of the others. Grass Mountain is a little lower. Mary's Peak is a snow peak and carries snow until July. He doesn't know the exact distance, but it is southwest from Corvallis and must be sixteen or eighteen miles. Mary's River rises on Mary's Peak and flows in a northeast direction, but not direct, and empties into the Willamette at Corvallis.

"Q. Where are these lands now, chiefly, with reference to Mary's Peak?

A. The timber land is around Mary's Peak, east of it, and further southeast, across the little valleys there that is between."

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified that he has been in the employ of the Oregon and California Railroad Company about a month and a half this summer, and is the only time he ever worked for the company, and is not employed by them now, but was up until it rained and made the fire safe, about a week ago; something like that, since he has been out for the company, a week or ten days ago. It has been raining somewhat all summer, but they have had one or two seasons that they were required to look after the fire. He couldn't tell the exact number of acres that he patrolled. The tract he patrolled follows the ridge about sixteen miles long, varying in width on account of being burned off, and perhaps six miles wide on an average. He could give a part of the location of these lands by looking on a map. He lives in 12-6 West and there is some timber there. In 12-7 West there is also timber, and he patrolled these townships; and he had a view of it that way. A little valley runs through, known as the Alsea Valley and Wells Creek. There was a wagon road there, and he drove that way. He has lived in 12-6 West ten years the 8th of November, 1912, and prior to that time he lived about two miles southwest of Corvallis. He now lives on Section 32, which was a homestead that he had purchased. There are settlers in that township besides himself, several of them. There is a little valley, which is just settled, the valley part. Not all the settlers in that township are located in that valley, some are across the divide from him, out of the timber entirely. He never ran the lines of the sections that he patrolled, but just passed along the hills; he has been on both sides. There are settlers on the even numbered sections in the valley, and there were a few settlers on the lands of the company behind Mary's Peak; but on the ridges there are no settlers except in the valley. They are on both odd and even sections in the valley. They were taken by donation claims or sold to them. There is a town of Alsea in one of these townships, a postoffice, and there are settlers in that vicinity. The township line runs through Alsea. The north part of Alsea is divided. It is in 14-8 West. The dividing line is right in the north part of Alsea, splits the town. He has only a very general knowledge of the remainder of this grant, from having observed it at a distance, except that he has been almost all over what he has testified to, on both sides of those ridges, broken country, that has this timber on. He patrolled that country. When it was raining he made some trails on these sides, so that the land could be got to in case of fire when it was needed with a pack horse. The soil is not very good, in general, in the townships where the railroad lands are situated, it is too broken and steep, and only a small portion of the soil is good. There are parts—small parts of it—that are good, but they are small. There are no other grasses besides pea vines the season round that would furnish range for goats, sheep or cattle. There are places in the foothills where they have a little bottom land and a lot of side hill, and they range this rough country in that way. Where one has enough valley land to raise feed for the winter, they can keep stock and range on these hills in the summer, and drive them down in the winter and take care of them.

"Q. Isn't it a fact there are a number of 160 acre tracts that a man could take up in these railroad lands, that is, not by legal subdivisions, but in 160-acre tracts, 40-acre subdivisions, that a poor man could take up, a man that was up against it financially, and make a living there for himself and his family?

A. No, sir; none at all. That question is like this—a man would have to have money to live on, and be able to go out and buy, before he would be able to go up there and live a number of years to clear this up and live at all, even if the soil was good.

Q. There is some agricultural land in there, isn't there, in its present state?

A. Down in this valley is very fine land, but it is narrow.

Q. There is some of that land is railroad land, isn't it?

A. That is the valley?

Q. Yes.

A. Not to my knowledge. There might be a small piece somewheres that I don't know of; but none, literally speaking."

Whereupon witness testified that he lives in Section 32, Township 12 South, Range 6 West. There is no railroad land adjoining him. There is not a great deal of railroad land in that township. There is some of this Coos Bay wagon road grant land there, he thinks it must be, because Section 5, right close to where he lives, belongs to that grant. Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified that he goes to these lands for patrolling, by a road running right down through the center of the district, called the Alsea road. Alsea is a valley over on the coast. It reaches tide-water further down. Alsea has been settled thirty or forty years. He has been in the Alsea Valley. He is not prepared to tell what kind of land is on the coast in the Alsea Valley; but around the town of Alsea there is nice, good land. Alsea has three or four hundred population. The Alsea River heads right west of Mary's Peak, and the other branch heads around back of Bellfountain, by a little mountain they call Green Peak. Bellfountain is a post-office, has a store or two, and is out across on the Willamette Valley side. There are some settlements on the Alsea River, which leads over into the Alsea Valley, along the river. This valley is a narrow valley. Down to Alsea it is fairly well timbered, both sides of this little stream. He got into these lands of the company to patrol them by cutting a trail for his saddle horse; one could not drive an automobile or team through them very well. Whereupon, on recross examination, witness testified that Alsea is about thirty miles from the coast, he would say a little further than that. Alsea Valley leads to the coast, but the town is not on the coast. Alsea is about the center between Corvallis and the coast. Corvallis is a city of some size and the Oregon Agricultural College is located there. There is quite a lot of good fruit country in Benton County; they are setting out large orchards. Corvallis is outside of the timber belt and it is about fourteen miles by wagon road before one strikes much timber; and it is about the same distance to the railroad lands which he was patrolling; that is, about that distance of fourteen or fifteen miles to the nearest foot of it. Corvallis is situated in the Willamette Valley and is surrounded by a fine agricultural country. He is not prepared to say whether there was or was not some railroad lands in the townships in which Corvallis is located, or in the adjoining townships.

Whereupon W. V. FULLER, called as a witness on behalf of defendants, being duly sworn, testified that he resides at Dallas, Oregon; is at present a merchant; has lived in Polk County eleven and a half years, and has been in the timber business in Polk County about eight years, and has handled and cruised timber lands and has had experience in cruising timber lands in Polk County. He does not know anything about the lands in Polk County east of Range 6 West. These lands, whatever there are, are just a very small fraction and are not timbered, not much, if any, timber on them, but in Ranges 6, 7 and 8 West, he is familiar with all of the unsold lands of the Oregon and California Railroad Company and has been practically on every forty acres of these lands and familiar with them since 1901. The lands lie in the Coast Range of mountains on both sides, on either slope, east and west side and on top of the mountains, and are mostly very hilly land—he supposes as hilly land as there is in the Coast Range of mountains in Polk County, and the elevation will run from 1000 to 3500 feet, to which testimony complainant objected as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and it was agreed between the parties that this same objection should be deemed taken to all the testimony of this witness relating to the character of the lands within the limits of these grants, settlements thereon and public land entries thereof.

Whereupon witness testified that most all of the railroad lands in Polk County are well timbered. The main portion of the timber is fir, but in some parts there is a small amount of white pine, larch, hemlock and cedar. There are five or six sections of land, the bulk of which has practically no timber on it. The remainder of these lands would run from 40,000 to 75,000 feet per acre. This would be considered a good stand of timber. The value of these lands lies almost wholly in their timber. There is very little of the total area of these unsold lands that would, in his judgment, be agricultural or suited to agricultural or horticultural purposes. If one wanted to go into it by sections, he could get at it easier. He thinks there is not ten per cent of it that could be used for agriculural or horticultural purposes, for the reason, in the main, that the elevation is too great there for farm products or fruit to grow successfully. There is a great difference in the soil. In the main, if the lands of the company in Polk County were on an elevation suitable for raising crops, etc., he thinks they would raise crops. Some of them, however, are very rocky. Probably thirty per cent of this land could be utilized for grazing purposes. These lands that could be used for grazing purposes lie on a less elevation, say, than 1000 feet, and on this there is a good deal of pea vine and other small growth of vegetation that stock eat. Sometimes the pea vine grows at a higher elevation than that, but not a great deal. He thinks there is thirty per cent, or such a matter, of the entire area of these lands that could be cleared of timber, burned over, seeded to grass, and devoted to grazing purposes. It would cost from $75 to $100 an acre to clear this land of the timber so they could be suitable for agricultural purposes. He has known a good many people who have undertaken to make a living up in those hills, cleared little patches of land at different times, and he knows that at this time one cannot find any of them living there. They did not seem to be able to make a living. Practically all of the entries in the even sections within the limits of these railroad lands have been sold, a good portion of them have been sold. Some are still in the hands of the original entrymen, who hold them yet. The reason he knows to whom this land has been sold is that he has a great many times made out maps of all the lands in Polk County, and he was occupied that way last week several days making out a map for the Spaulding Logging Company. Therefore, he knows practically every forty acres of land in Polk County. The land is owned in the main—the land is owned by the Spaulding Logging Company, and Mitchell & McClure, the land in the name of Mitchell, Trustee, the Willamette Valley Lumber Company—he has forgotten the parties who bought the Mitchel tract there—five large holders. This land in the even sections was mainly entered under the Timber and Stone act. The homestead entries are exactly in the same condition as the stone and timber entries. The timber companies, when buying in there, did not pay any more or less for a homestead entry than a stone and timber entry, excepting where the settler had possibly cut off ten or fifteen acres of timber to make a home, they would deduct that from the land, because the timber value was not there on those acres, that had been removed. These lands were bought for the timber and that was their chief value then and now. The homestead cabins and other improvements of the homestead entrymen are there yet, excepting in some few instances where they have been burned or rotted down; they are not occupied. Under the timber and stone act no settlement is required. The character of settlers or entrymen was that of any one who happened in the country there; some had families and some had not. In the main, these settlers commuted on their homesteads at the end of fourteen months. They generally complied with the law as to residence during the first fourteen months as near as they could, before they proved up; some of them resided continuously on their lands, and some did not.

Q. Suppose that a man would apply to the company under this act of April 10, 1869, to settle on 160 acres of this land and pay the company the price of $2.50 an acre, and desire to make it his home and make settlement on it, what, from your knowledge of these lands, would be his ability to do that and make a living?

A. They could not make a living off the land alone. He would have to have some other way of supporting his family.

Q. Well, now, why couldn't he take 160 acres that way and make a home for himself and family, and make a living?

A. One reason is because the land is so heavily timbered, unless he had some outside money to clear the land, it would be an impossibility. Another reason is, as before stated, the altitude is such that crops will not grow successfully, that a man can get his seed back, you might say.

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified:

Q. Do you remember of having a conversation with E. S. Foley, a special agent of the General Land Office, at your drug store in Dallas, on or about the 9th day of March, 1912?

A. I remember of having a conversation with some one. I don't remember who it was.

Q. Do you remember of executing an affidavit before Mr. Foley at that time?

A. I don't remember of executing any affidavit.

Q. I will ask you to examine this document and state to the court whether that is not an affidavit that you executed before Mr. Foley on the date stated?

A. It seems to be my signature. Do you want me to read it all? Do you want to ask me any questions about it?

Q. Yes. In this statement or affidavit, Mr. Fuller, is it not stated that "He (meaning yourself) is engaged in the drug store business, and where he has lived,"— "W .V. Fuller, being first duly sworn, deposes and says that his residence and postoffice address is Dallas, Oregon, where he is engaged in the drug store business and where he has lived for eleven years. And affiant further says that for seven years he followed mining and land locating in Townships 7, 8 and 9 South, Ranges 6, 7 and 8 West,"—

A. That is cruising, that word there.

Q. That is "cruising" instead of "mining"?

A. Yes.

Q. (Continuing) "and is familiar with said lands and with their character. At this time the greatest value of these lands, generally speaking, is for its timber, although much of it would be valuable if cleared for general farm purposes, including fruit, dairying and grazing purposes. And affiant further says that on June 11, 1907, he made an application to the Oregon and California Railroad Company to purchase the southeast quarter of Section 31, Township 8 South, Range 7 West"— a word I can't make out—"in Polk County, Oregon, which said application was declined, and said railroad company refused to recognize or consider the application in any way." Signed "W. V. Fuller." And also stating, "Subscribed and sworn to before me at Fuller's drug store in Dallas on this 9th day of March, 1912." Those statements are contained in that affidavit there?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon complainant offered said affidavit referred to in this cross examination in evidence, to which defendants objected as not impeaching evidence, as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and as being prepared by the Government, written out by Mr. Foley as a special agent of the General Land Office in his own language, on some conversation which he may have had with the witness, which said exhibit was received in evidence and is hereinafter set out and described and made a part of this Statement of the Evidence, and identified as such.

Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified that he did not know who Mr. Foley was, and he had forgotten all about the occurrence, but he remembers now that a man did come into his store and talk to him about the land, and he sees that that is his signature to the affidavit. He does not remember—he had forgotten what the document contained.

Q. Did you make the statement to Mr. Foley that "At this time the greatest value of these lands, generally speaking, is for its timber'—you made that statement to him, did you?

A. I presume that I did, yes.

Whereupon witness testified that he presumes, although he could not say, that he also made the statement, "Although much of it would be valuable, if cleared, for general farm purposes, including fruit, dairying and grazing purposes." By the words "much of it" he means there is some of it, quite a bit of it, in fact, that after it was cleared, would be valuable for general farm purposes, including fruit, dairying and grazing purposes. He does not remember that he told him about the climatic conditions that would prevent it being suitable for agricultural and horticultural purposes. He did not talk to him only a little while. Foley did not tell him what he wanted this statement for. He has a record of his cruises referred to in this statement. He made this record in 1907 or 1908, he does not remember which. A good share of it was made by him as the result of his own cruising. He was deputy county assessor and had a contract from the county for cruising all of the timber lands in the county for assessment purposes, and he made that cruise for that purpose, and this is a copy of that record made by him or under his supervision. He will take Township 7 South, 8 West, that he cruised and read the amount of each forty.

Section 1, northeast quarter of the northeast quarter, 2,900,000 feet; the northwest of the northeast, 2,900,000 feet; the southeast of the northeast, 1,800,000 feet; the southwest of the northeast, 2,200,000 feet; the northeast of the northwest, 2,800,000 feet; the northwest of the northwest, 3,200,000 feet. I will state that those forties largely overrun—there was about 60 acres to a forty, or nearly that. The southwest of the northwest, 2,400,000 feet; the southeast of the northwest, 2,200,000 feet; the northeast of the southeast, 2,100,000 feet; the northwest of the southeast, 3,300,000 feet; the southeast of the southeast, 2,100,000 feet; the southwest of the southeast, 2,000,000 feet; the northeast of the southwest, 2,100,000 feet; the northwest of the southwest, 3,000,000 feet; the southwest of the southwest, 2,100,000 feet; the southeast of the southwest, 2,200,000 feet. Take section 23 of the same township: The northeast of the northeast, 1,300,000 feet; the northwest of the northeast, 1,200,000 feet; the southwest of the northeast, 1,600,000 feet; the southeast of the northeast, 2,000,000 feet; the northeast of the northwest, 1,500,000 feet; the northwest of the northwest, 1,700,000 feet; the southwest of the northwest, 600,000 feet; the southeast of the northwest, 800,000 feet; the northeast of the southwest, 1,900,000 feet; the northwest of the southwest, 2,000,000 feet; the southwest of the southwest, 2,000,000 feet; the southeast of the southwest, 1,800,000 feet; the northeast of the southeast, 2,400,000 feet; the northwest of the southeast, 1,800,000 feet; the southwest of the southeast, 1,800,000 feet; the southwest of the southeast, 2,200,000 feet.

Q. What township and range is that in?

A. 7 South, 8 West.

Q. Now give another township and range.

A. Take 8 South, 8 West, directly south of that.

Q. 8 South, 8 West?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right.

A. The north tier of forties in this township run short, as they have overrun in the township north. In Section 1, the northeast of the northeast, 1,500,000; the northwest of the northeast, 2,700,000; the southwest of the northeast, 1,400,000; the southeast of the northeast, 1,200,000; the northeast of the northwest, 1,600,000; the northwest of the northwest, 1,700,000; the southwest of the northwest, 1,400,000; the southeast of the northwest, 1,700,000; the northeast of the southwest, 2,600,000; the northwest of the southwest, 1,900,000; the southwest of the southwest, 3,600,000; the southeast of the southwest, 2,400,000; the northeast of the southeast, 1,900,000; the northwest of the southeast, 2,000,000; the southwest of the southeast, 1,900,000; the southeast of the southeast, 3,400,000—very heavy timber.

Q. Anything in Section 3, Township 8 South, Range 8 West?

A. Yes, sir. The northeast of the northeast, 700,000 feet; the northwest of the northeast, 800,000; the southwest of the northwest, 1,600,000; the southeast of the northeast, 500,000; the northeast of the northwest, 1,300,000; the northwest of the northwest, 1,400,000; the southwest of the northwest, 1,400,000; the southeast of the northwest, 1,400,000; the northeast of the southwest, 1,500,000; the northwest of the southwest, 1,300,000; the southwest of the southwest, 1,200,000; the southeast of the southwest, 1,800,000.

Q. Do your cruisings that you have there in your record show anything for the even sections in that township and range?

A. It shows exactly the same, yes—everything.

Q. You cruised the even sections, too, did you?

A. Oh, yes, certainly.

Q. Now, take an even section there, and give us the cruising on it in that same township and range, alongside of the railroad section—Township 8 South, Range 8.

A. Take Section 2. That lies between 1 and 3 that I just read. The northeast of the northeast, 1,200,000 feet; the northwest of the northeast, 1,400,000; the southwest of the northeast, 1,800,000; the southeast of the northeast, 1,900,000; the northeast of the northwest, 1,400,000; the northwest of the northwest, 1,400,000; the southwest of the northwest, 1,600,000; the southeast of the northwest, 1,100,000; the northeast of the southwest, 1,700,000; the northwest of the southwest, 800,000; the southwest of the southwest, 800,000; the southeast of the southwest, 1,000,000; the northeast of the southeast, 1,800,000; the northwest of the southeast, 1,700,000; the southwest of the southeast, 1,000,000; the southeast of the southeast, 900,000.

Whereupon witness testified that in making these cruisings he cruised by forties—both the even and odd sections. He cruised all of the timber lands in Polk County, over 200,000 acres, including the lands involved in this suit, all of the timber land that run over a certain amount, that one would call timber land at all. He cruised Townships 7, 8 and 9 South, 6 West; Townships 7, 8, 9 and 10 South, 7 West, but there was very little of Township 10 South, Range 7 West, in Polk County. He cruised Townships 7, 8 and 9 South, Range 8 West. The purpose of this cruising of which he made this record was to arrive at its value for assessment purposes. He is not positive whether it was for the year 1907 or 1908. The diagram shown in his record is a township of thirty-six sections. In cruising these lands he sought to find out the amount of timber, the quality of timber, the lay of the land, the quality of the soil, its distance from navigable water or railroad, and everything that would tend to show the value of the land, and his testimony in this case is based upon this information thus obtained.

Whereupon on recross examination witness testified that these lands he has described are pretty well to the west side of the grant, excepting 7-8, that is pretty well to the east side of the grant in Polk County. The line of the western limits of the grant is in Range 8, extending a little east of the center of these two townships. These two townships are rather in the extreme northwestern portion of Polk County.

Whereupon R. B. HUNT, called as a witness on behalf of defendants, being duly sworn, testified that he resides at Eugene, Oregon, and is a civil engineer, and has lived in Lane County fourteen years. He is well acquainted with the unsold lands of the Oregon and California Railroad Company in Lane County.

Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, witness testified that Lane County is bounded on the east by the summit of the Cascade Range, on the west by the Pacific Ocean, and on the south by the Calapooia Range from its junction with the Cascade Range, following westerly to Range 7 West; thence following north on the section lines to the Siuslaw River; then following down the Siuslaw River to the north line of the last tier of sections, or the north tier of sections of Township 19 South; then following west to the Pacific Ocean, and is bounded on the north by the watershed between the Calapooia River and the McKenzie waters, starting from the junction of that divide of the Cascade Range and following in a westerly direction to Range 2 West; then running by sections down to the last tier of sections north, in Township 16 South; then following west to the Willamette River; then following the center of the Willamette River in a northerly direction to the last tier of sections in Township 15 South; then following west to the Pacific Ocean. He has been on each township, and on each section of some townships of these lands marked in green on Defendants' Exhibit 259. For six years he was deputy county surveyor of Lane County, and was engaged in surveying out lines. For several years he was examining timber for private individuals and for a large timber concern. Most all of the examinations that he was making were of lands adjoining the Oregon and California grant, and in some instances they were not, but in most instances they were land adjoining, in the even sections. In the reports he gave on these blanks of the timber companies he reported the timber and logging conditions, the topography of the country, the soil, and the agricultural lands, and all that would make a complete report of the land, and he made these reports in the form of what are called in this record "Cruisers' Reports." He is a practical cruiser. In every instance in making the examinations of these even sections adjoining the unsold odd sections, he would be running a line between the two sections, and necessarily would pass around the boundaries, and from his knowledge thus obtained, the chief value of these unsold lands of the company in Lane County would be for their timber. To which testimony complainant objected as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant, and it was agreed between the parties that this same objection should be deemed taken to all the testimony of this witness relating to the character of the lands within the limits of these grants, settlements thereon and public land entries thereof.

Whereupon witness testified that, in his judgment, he would say there was somewhere between fifteen and twenty per cent of these lands that could be used for agricultural purposes. They are situated — a forty where one comes down to a stream or creek, there would be a few acres out of the forty that would be valuable for agriculture if cleared, but the majority of the unsold lands are further back in the mountains. The settlements of the country have taken up all of the lands that would be suitable for agriculture, and the lands that are left are the lands that are rough and mountainous, covered with timber, so that it would be very poor for agricultural purposes. For grazing purposes there would be a greater per cent than for agricultural purposes. Under the present conditions there would be only a very few months in the year that these lands would be valuable at all for grazing, but if they were logged, burned over and seeded, there would perhaps be the four summer months out of the year that stock could graze over—perhaps for grazing that would run sixty or seventy per cent of these lands.

Q. Now, let me put this question to you: This that you speak of as being suitable for grazing would be about 60 or 70 per cent provided the timber was cut off, removed, logged, and then the remnant burned, the stumps, and seeded to grass or some growth upon which the stock could have the summer range? Is that what I understand?

Mr. Rabb: Objected to as leading.

Mr. Fenton: Yes, I know it is leading.

A. Yes, sir; that was what I meant.

Whereupon witness testified that it would cost in the neighborhood of $40 or $50 an acre to clear this land suitably for this method of making it grazing, but not to take the stumps out. It would cost all the way from $100 to $150 an acre to remove the stumps and clear the land of roots, so as to make it available for agricultural purposes. The powder to blow out the stumps of one of these average acres of timber would cost from $30 to $50 an acre. One would use black powder, and usually black and giant powder together. The black powder being a slow powder, it is usually used with the giant powder. These unsold lands are chiefly valuable for timber. It would hardly be considered first-class timber, taking it straight through, because all the best of it has been taken up by actual settlers. He knows that timber companies have bought a lot of timber lands from the company, and that the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company has bought a large tract of timber land. There is the Fisher Timber Company—in fact, all the timber companies operating in there.

Q. Then what remains of this grant that is unsold, that is timbered land, is what there is left after a good many years of these lands being on the market for timber?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon witness testified that the timber market about ten years ago was very low. He was in the employment of a timber company at that time, and buying timber, and since that time the market has been steadily increasing in value. There is a very little timber of any kind now that has a stumpage value of less than one dollar per thousand. The average value of the best quarter section of these unsold lands in Lane County would be in the neighborhood of one million to a forty, or four million to a quarter section, which would make the value of the quarter section $4,000. The best unsold quarters would be worth at least twice that. He has personal knowledge of a good many applications made to the company by so-called actual settlers or purchasers of these lands at $2.50 an acre under this act of Congress of April 10, 1869, and these applicants always tried to get on the best quarter sections. Sometimes they make mistakes. He means by that that they try to get on the quarter section that has the most timber.

Q. Well, now, suppose one of these applicants to purchase one of these quarter sections should receive a deed from the company, and the company should accept the $2.50 an acre, and this purchaser should desire to use that quarter-section for an actual settlement for a home, what would be its value for him as a settler?

A. He couldn't use it for a home.

Q. Why couldn't he use it for a home?

A. It wouldn't pay him to do it. He couldn't make a living on it.

Q. Well, why? How would he get any value out of it?

A. The value would be in the timber.

Q. When and how?

A. Well, it has a market value now. He could sell it.

Q. To whom could he sell it?

A. Well, he could sell it. Mr. Wendling, of Wendling, Johnson & Company, is buying in that country there.

Whereupon witness testified that Wendling, Johnson & Company are big timber holders, who have bought large tracts in the western part of Lane County, and who purchased a million and a half of timber at $1.00 per thousand in the last two years. They would have to pay for this land if a man had title to one of these 160 acres thus acquired from the railroad company, the market price, which would be $1.00 a thousand. That is the lowest price he knows of.

Q. Then if a settler could buy this quarter-section for $2.50 an acre, he would get it for $400, and could immediately sell it to a timber syndicate for $4,000?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, is that true generally of all of these applications to purchase of this class, that you know of, in that country?

A. Why, yes; generally it is true.

Whereupon witness testified that unless the land is within a Forest Reserve, in the even sections, the title to most of it in the even sections in Lane County within the limits of and adjoining these unsold railroad sections, has been deeded to those individuals. In the first place, patents were issued in the nature of a homestead, taken along the streams and valleys, and afterwards, in the timber, within the last ten years, these lands in the even sections have been taken as timber claims under the timber and stone act. In nearly every case where final proof has been made in homestead cases, if lands were timbered, in these even sections, the lands were sold to some timber company. Large timber holders own a majority of these lands in the even sections in Lane County. No settlement is required under the timber and stone act. These lands entered under the timber and stone act were sold the same way, to large timber contractors. The Cascade Forest Reserve is in the eastern part of Lane County.

Q. Referring to this land that you say might be grazed land, what is the fact, if you know, as to whether any man could take a quarter-section of it, and use it successfully for grazing purposes, and make a living on it, if he was confined to his quarter section?

A. In my opinion, he could not.

Q. Well, when you speak of it being good for grazing, what do you mean?

A. Oh, in a general way.

Q. Do you mean that, if a man was a stock man and cattle man down in the valley, for four months in the year he could drive his cattle into this mountain range and let them roam over the thousands of acres there, the even and odd sections that might be unenclosed, and in that way get some benefit for grazing? Is that what you mean?

Objected to as leading.

A. Well, I had reference to odd sections.

Q. I understand. Well, now, suppose the odd sections were all divided into quarter-sections, which were fenced up, would it be of any particular value for grazing from which to make a living?

A. Not to take the tract as a whole in Lane County, no, sir, it would not.

Q. In other words, the grazing there would be in the way I have spoken of, the lands being out on the common, a man having headquarters, and his cattle could roam at large over a large body of land?

Objected to as leading.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that what you mean?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon witness testified that he noticed the yellow body of Defendants' Exhibit 259, and that the town of Eugene appears to be in the center of the valley, on the Willamette River. Eugene is very near in the center, but it is a little bit closer to the foothills on the east side of the valley. The military road grant of the Oregon Central Military Wagon Roard shown in yellow, was given on account of a road built from Eugene into the central part of Oregon, and he believes that grant was prior to the railroad grant, but whether prior or not, the lands within that grant appears to have been lost to the Oregon and California Railroad Company. Eugene had a population of 9009 according to the census of 1910.

Q. What is the fact, if you know, as to whether there are any actual settlers within the limits of these unsold lands of the Oregon and California Railroad Company, on the even sections or on any of these lands that have been heretofore sold by the company, if there are any?

A. Yes, sir; it is quite thickly settled.

Q. Well, you don't mean, do you, that the lands within the limits of the grant are quite thickly settled—these timber lands?

Objected to.

A. No; I mean this county.

Q. No; I didn't ask you about the county. My question was as to the settlements within the limits of these unsold railroad lands.

A. Well, in nearly every case where there is a stream that flows through the townships, there is settlement along the streams—all the streams.

Q. Are they many or few? I mean, now, within the limits of this grant, near these unsold railroad lands.

A. There are a good many close to the Willamette Valley; but after you go back toward the head, they are very scattering toward the head.

Q. State whether or not there are any settlers with homes in the indemnity limits of this grant, being ten miles on each side?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where are they? Where would they necessarily be?

A. They are along the streams and valleys.

Q. Are they few or many?

A. Well, the first ten-mile limit there are many.

Q. Well, I mean the indemnity limits, not the place limits.

A. Oh, the indemnity—that would be the thirty-mile limit, you mean?

Q. Yes, the thirty-mile limits. Are there any settlers in the thirty-mile limits?

A. Yes, there are settlers in the thirty-mile limits.

Q. Where would they be?

A. They would be along the streams.

Whereupon witness testified that he does not know the character of the lands, marked in blue, lands deeded by the Oregon & California Railroad Company on this Defendants' Exhibit 259. He is acquainted with the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company lands. They are very fine timber. He knows that the center of what are known as the Wendling mill, and operations of the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company, is in township 16 south, range 1 west, and range 1 east, and he is quite familiar with their holdings through that part of the country, and if the 70,000 acres of the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company are situated near there, it would be fine timber land, and would be the best as compared with the unsold timber land of the Oregon & California Railroad Company in that vicinity. It would be better than what the railroad company has left. The timber around Wendling would average between six and ten million feet to 160 acres. He is acquainted with the timber holdings on the Siuslaw River, and in the watershed adjacent to or tributary to that river, in Lane County, within the limits of this grant. Porter Brothers own over 20,000 acres in Western Lane County; Wendling-Johnson Lumber Company about 30,000 acres; Sterritt & Hovey have over 20,000 acres; Stewart and R. V. Jones of Portland about 15,000 acres. These are the largest timber holdings, and they are considered fine timber. The character of the unsold lands of the company in that vicinity would be considered as second-class timber, but what would be considered merchantable within the meaning of the market, and he believes would average four million feet to 160 acres, but that would not include the burned areas. The burned areas are generally covered with salal brush. He could not give the acreage of the burned area, but knows that in Western Lane County—he thinks about two years ago—there was a fire that burned over in the neighborhood of fifteen sections of railroad land. This would be covered with brush. Some of it before the fire was heavy timber. The soil of the Coast Range is generally a clay soil, running all the way from a few inches to sixteen feet, with sandstone formation under that.

Q. What is the character of soil as to its being productive or otherwise; where it is burned over, what would it produce, if anything, that could be utilized, taking into account elevation and everything else?

A. The Coast Range is very productive in that part. The hills are not very high on an average. The summit is about 1000 feet above sea-level. The valleys are very narrow, and numerous spurs—small streams; if the soil was level so you could farm it, why, there is some of it there would produce grain, or most anything in the way of vegetation.

Whereupon witness testified that the lands in the eastern part of Lane County, on the east side of the grant, are much higher and run all the way from 1000 to 3000 feet, some even higher than that. The higher the elevation, there would be more frost than at a lower elevation. This burned over country usually grows up with pea-vine, which can be used for grazing in the spring and earlier part of summer by cattle, a couple of months. On the Coast Range there is what they call rhododendron, black huckleberry, thimble berry and salal brush. He does not know of any animal that will eat salal bushes, but cattle will graze a little on salmonberry bushes. The huckleberry bush grows five or six feet high on an average, but stock does not feed on these bushes but very little. There are several points where there would be snow in the eastern part of the grant in Lane County, during part of the year. One point is called Mt. June. It gets its name from the fact that snow is usually there in the month of June. He recalls among the timber companies or timber investors that hold lands in Lane County, excepting the Oregon and California Railroad Company, Booth-Kelly Lumber Company of Eugene, Boston-Oregon Lumber Company, of which Mr. Winslow of New York is the head, who is also identified with the Indino Quartered Oak Company, also the Drew Lumber Company, of which Wells Gilbert is agent, the Leffingwell Estate, for which Major Forrest is acting as agent at Eugene, two Brown Lumber Companies, one of Eugene and one of Cottage Grove that has some mills at Cottage Grove, the Wendling-Johnson holdings, of which Mr. Wendling, at Weed, California, is head, Porter Brothers, who have an office in Portland, Sterritt & Povey, with their head office in Chicago, for whom Elliott Bean of Eugene is agent, a tract owned by R. V. Jones of Portland and Mr. Stewart of Astoria, called the Western Oregon Timber Company, or some such name. The Weyerhauser Timber Company own considerable land in there. There is considerable land there that is known as the "N. P." land—Northern Pacific script, but he could not say how large an area of acreage there is of this Northern Pacific script, but knows there is considerable of it through the country. He has done business with most of these timber holders, and is well acquainted with them.

Whereupon on cross examination witness testified that he has resided at Eugene fourteen years; is thirty-six years old; lived at Bandon, Coos County, before coming to Eugene; is a civil engineer by profession; has worked for the Government and the railroad companies, and his work for the Government was Deputy United States Mineral Surveyor, sectionizing in the mineral surveys, but was working for a contractor. While employed in the Government work he was not under salary from the Government, but the mineral surveyors made the surveys. The work was done for the Government.

He did that work as deputy mineral surveyor, and did the work for contractors on Government work, and sectionized Quinault Indian Reservation in 1904 as contract work. He has also been chief engineer of the Pacific Great Western Railroad Company, with its termini at Eugene and the mouth of the Siuslaw River, which is under construction. He ran out the original line for this road. He has had something like ten years experience in timber cruising, perhaps a little more than that, since he started in. As a school boy in the summer months he started out first cruising during three months' vacation, and would work along first one thing, and then another; first as a chainman. He started cruising the timber by making an estimate of the timber. The first thing he did was scaling on what they call a dump, where the logs are hauled in before they are put in the river or on cars for transportation, measuring the logs with a scale. He cruised timber for the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company, Boston-Oregon Lumber Company, the Laswell Company, but these were for large companies. He might have done work for some other companies, but he does not call to mind. The most extensive work was for people in Lane County. He worked for the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company off and on something like seven years, and for the Boston-Oregon Company about sixty days, and during the summer months, one summer, for the Laswell Lumber Company. He was the cruiser and had a compassman with him when making the estimates on this timber. He has cruised timber for practically all of the people of Lane County, who have been in the business of buying and selling. Before coming to Eugene he was in school at Bandon, and had no business. His testimony is confined to Lane County, and he wants it understood that his testimony goes only as to lands in that county, as far as he has been into it. From this map that he sees on the wall, and from his memory only now, he thinks that there is not more than ten sections in the western part of Lane County in this land grant but what he has been on one line of the section, in township 16 south, ranges 1 and 2 west, and 1 east; township 15 south, ranges 1 and 2 west; township 17 south, ranges 1 and 2 west; township 18 south, range 1 west and 1 east, he believes he has been over eighty per cent of the sections by being on the line. He means by being over it, by being on one line of these sections. The rest of the land in the grant, he is not so familiar with, only by a township, or in a general way, perhaps cruising one or two sections in the township. The ones that he is more familiar with he has just pointed out, or given by number and they are in the eastern part. Those in the western part with which he is most familiar are township 15 south, ranges 6. 7 and 8 west; townships 16, 17 and 18 south, ranges 6, 7 and 8 west. He has been over all but ten sections in the western part of the grant, that is an estimate. He is acquainted with townships 19, 20, 21, 22 and 23 south, ranges 1 west and 1 east; 1 east would apply only to townships 20 and 21 south, with which he is not so well acquainted. In ranges 2, 3 and 4, townships 20, 21, 22, 23 and 24, he is acquainted with these. It would be hard to say how well acquainted he is with these, he has been over these townships considerably, enough so that if one would name any landmark there he could tell its location, or the topography of the country, map out the streams or the roads. He would know only from memory what sections they would pass, but would know what township they were in. He does not believe that he has cruised any of the lands in green on that map, Defendants' Exhibit 259. He was employed by the Southern Pacific Company in 1909 on a railroad survey, and by the P. R. & N. Co., or Lytle Road, built from Portland to Tillamook Bay as locating engineer for nine months, and located the lines from the mouth of Salmonberry to Satin Falls, and from the Nehalem around Garibaldi and Tillamook Bay. He believes that is a subsidary line now of the Southern Pacific Company; it was known at the time as the Lytle Road. E. E. Lytle, he believes, was the president of the road. He has never been engaged in locating timber claims in his life, or any Government land, excepting that he has bought relinquishments and placed script on them. He bought script and got the lands, when working for the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company. The valley referred to in his direct testimony as the Willamette Valley, is all farming country, and part of township 15 south, 2 west, is farming land, and a part of these green lands on this map in there is susceptible to agriculture and tilling, and there is considerable agricultural land in these green lands in townships 15, 16, 17 and 18 south, ranges 1 and 2 west, and there are settlers in all these townships. Eugene is in section 31, in 17-3 west, the closest part, would be seven or eight miles from Eugene, and the farthest away would be twenty-five miles. There are settlers through townships 15, 16, 17, 18 and 19 south, ranges 5 and 6 west, and considerable of the land there is under cultivation. There are small farming lands around Goldson. Elmira is in the foothills of the Coast Range, in section 25, township 17 south, range 6 west, and there is some farming land around Blachley, in township 16 south, range 7 west. Triangle Lake is in Blachley basin, and there are farming lands about there. There are a very few settlers in township 15 south, range 8 west, that is what is called deadwood country, and the mountains are very high. It is a large range that runs out and makes Cape Perpetua. There are settlers in township 16 south, range 8 west. There are settlers around Green leaf, on what is called Lake Creek, in section 35-16 south, 8 west. There are railroad lands, colored in green, adjoining or in that section, as shown by this map, Defendants' Exhibit 259. There are settlers in township 18 south, range 6 west. Ivison used to be a post office, in township 18 south, range 7 west, but the party who was there has sold out and left, and there is no one living there now, and there are some settlers in that township. There are a very few settlers in township 18 south, range 9 west, in the southeastern portion, which is back taward Roman Nose Mountain, and is a very high, rough country. There are settlers in all of these townships excepting there might be one or two townships out of the grant where there would not be any settlers. These would be eastern townships. From the way the township lines run, there is not a township but which hits a stream, and every stream would have settlers on, so there would be no township where there would not be any settlers, but by naming a township there would be settlers in it, for the reason that the township lines are more than six miles from one stream to another. It would be possible to carve out a six-mile square, the boundaries for a township, which did not contain a settler, but he is not positive as to that. He would not want to be understood to say that there would not be such a condition existing there. There are not very many settlers in township 15 south, range 2 west, only on the Willamette side, where the township goes down into the land marked in yellow. That township is a mountainous country, and not merely foothills. It is what is called the Coburg Mountains, the range that comes down from the watershed between the Calapooia and the McKenzie rivers, and the general direction is westerly until it reaches near township 15 south, 1 west, and then it swings around almost south and enters some high hills just north from Eugene, making a gateway. If one would notice from the topography of the country that the Mohawk River flows south, and the coast fork flows north, going through a narrow gap at Eugene, caused on account of the topography of the country, there is quite a high range. The Mohawk flows through township 15 south, 1 east and 1 west; 16 south, 1 west and 2 west; 17 south, 2 west, in confluence with the McKenzie

River. The Mohawk Valley is an agricultural country. The part of the grant in the western part of Lane County has considerable good clay soil, and in this ridge west of the Mohawk River there is some clay soil on that; but the other part, on the slope of the Cascade Mountains, the soil is not so good; there is considerable more rock, there would be a part that could be farmed if the country was level. When one gets near the summit of the mountains, the clay soil has washed, eroded, slid off, so that it is very shallow, and this would be universally true, in the entire country, back into the higher elevations, the higher mountains, the soil would be so thin it would not amount to anything. The timber is poor there. The burned area is over the higher elevation. As a rule, the better the timber, the better the soil. He was born on a farm, raised on a farm until he was ten years old, and that is his only experience in farming, and he would not attempt to say that he has any knowledge, except a general idea, spending most of his life in the country he has learned somewhat. He has spent his life out of doors in the fields, and his work has been such that he had to stay with farmers at their homes, cruising timber, and so on, and he would not want it to be understood that he did not know anything about farming. His farming has not been as an expert, but he would think that he knew something about it, but not as an expert farmer, but by coming in contact with and being around farmers. He never has engaged in farming for a livelihood, and has never taken a homestead, and never settled on any lands, timbered lands, or attempted to clear them, or anything of that kind. He does not remember of cruising any of the unsold railroad company's lands in Lane County. He has cruised some that have been sold.

Whereupon on redirect examination, witness testified that the lands with agricultural possibilities in the Mohawk Valley, would average half a mile wide for a couple of townships, and narrows then into numerous small streams and valleys; part of it goes out into little branches. The waters in Mohawk Valley are called the Mohawk River, which empties into the McKenzie River. Eugene is about seven miles from the mouth of the Mohawk River, and the mouth of the McKenzie River is about six miles in almost due north direction, and the Mohawk in a northeast direction. The McKenzie River empties into the Willamette River. The valley along the McKenzie through the land about which he is being interrogated, would be south of the McKenzie, which flows close to the foothills to the north. There is a valley along the McKenzie River that extends up a few miles about Waterville, sixteen miles from Eugene in an eastern direction. The McKenzie is one of the wildest and most rapid streams in Lane County, and its waters are the source of fine power sites, and it heads in a very high altitude, in Fish Lake and Clear Lake. These water power sites, on a straight line, must be from seventy-five to eighty miles easterly from Eugene, in the Cascade Mountains. The lands in the Mohawk and McKenzie Valleys, after one enters the foothills of the Cascade Range, that are agricultural, are small tracts or parcels, and that is true with respect to any of the lands on these streams within the limits of this grant.

Q. Now, counsel asked you if there were not settlers in practically all these townships within the limits of this grant in Lane County, Oregon, and I believe you answered that, possibly with the exception of one or two six-mile squares, there would be a settler or settlers. What character or kind of settlers do you refer to, and where would they be situated?

A. They would be along the streams.

Q. And how much arable land or agricultural land would there be on a homestead or a claim of any one of these settlers thus described by you, and what would be the character of the rest of their holdings.

A. That is where the streams flow through the land that is unsold?

Q. Yes.

A. Why, they would in most cases be small.

Q. What would be the character of the bulk of their lands?

Q. What would be the balance of the quarter-section or 160 acres of this settler, aside from that portion that he might make a garden on, or pasture a cow on, or utilize for any useful purpose as agricultural or horticultural land?

A. It would be valuable for the timber that is standing on it in most cases.

Q. These settlers that you refer to, what character of settlers are they—what kind of entries?

A. Why, I think most of them are homesteads.

Q. What is the fact, if you know, as to whether these lands that are thus settled are chiefly valuable as a quarter-section for timber or for agricultural purposes?

A. Why, in the western part of Lane County, most of the settlers have sold their lands and moved out. Their buildings are there yet.

Q. Buildings vacated?

A. They are vacated; and timber men have bought the land for the timber that is on the 160 acres.

Q. Now, these settlers that are still there, where they have made final proof, what is the chief value of these entries or lands that they have within the limits of this grant?

Q. You may answer.

A. Why, in most cases, they would be valuable chiefly for the timber.

Q. How does the timber on these entries, as timber, compare with that that is on the unsold portion of the grant of the Oregon & California Railroad Company, as to quantity and value in proportion to the acreage?

A. Why, usually on the homesteads there is twenty or thirty acres that has been burned over and the timber has been killed, so taking it in proportion to the claim of 160 acres, why, I think in most cases it would be a less amount of timber. That might not hold true with timber that is away back, but with the adjoining timber.

Q. Yes, what I mean to inquire about is, is the timber on these homesteads that are still occupied substantially the same kind of timber, and quality, as the adjoining railroad unsold quarter-sections?

A. Yes, sir; certainly.

Q. How extensively have these homestead entrymen abandoned their homesteads? I mean, after they proved up and sold to timber people, how extensive and general is that in Lane County, in the timbered section within the limits of this grant, if you know?

A. Why, it is quite extensive, and some places they have moved out so that where there was a schoolhouse and a postoffice, why, the buildings are standing there, but without any one occupying them.

Q. What has happened to postoffices in some instances?

A. They have been discontinued.

Q. What has happened to the school?

A. Well, there is no school there. I presume there is a school district, but they don't have any school. There is no one to go.

Whereupon witness recognizes the official bulletin known as "Thirteenth Census of the United States, 1910," prepared by the "Bureau of the Census, E. Dana Durand, Director," showing the population of Oregon, the number of inhabitants by counties and minor civil divisions, prepared under the supervision of Wm. C. Hunt, Chief Statistician for Population, and recognizes the same as the official bulletin issued by the Census Bureau.

Whereupon defendants offered the same in evidence marked "Defendants' Exhibit 317," which was received in evidence and is hereinafter set out and described and made a part of this Statement of the Evidence and identified as such.

Whereupon on recross examination witness testified that there is quite a fruit country a little south of Eugene, and at Creswell there are quite large orchard tracts in the stage of growing. The Bornstadt Company has purchased a large tract, but he does not believe any of the trees have borne any fruit yet, but it is considered good fruit land. That tract has been planted to trees for several years, and there are trees growing on it. There may be among the foothills, on the streams, a portion of these unsold lands of the company that could be used as fruit lands.

Q. Isn's it a fact that quite a large amount of that land could be used for raising grapes, for instance, that might not be available for raising grains?

A. I presume grapes would grow on it; but it would not be practicable, on account of the steepness of the ground.

All of the best land there has been sold and taken up, and only the roughest remains in Lane County, and while his testimony may seem to show that it is one-sided, trying to make it appear that the country is rough, it is simply because the best of the land is gone and this is the part that was considered the roughtest and farthest back that has remained. There are certain benches, table lands, in townships 15 and 16 south, range 1 west, that would be parallel with the ridges, following along out parallel, between the directions of the streams and the ridges running through a part of these townships, that could be used for fruit and grapes. It would not be very wide, but it would be parallel with the streams that would extend through the township. In the valley the fern land has been killed out. There is none there now. Most of the valley land is under cultivation. There may be very small patches in there of fern land, but one could not, generally speaking, say that it was fern land. He believes there have been large areas of fern growth there, by the evidence one can see—referring to the Willamette Valley. There is some dairying land within the vicinity of these granted lands. Cottage Grove is situated within the vicinity of this granted land, and there is a creamery there. Cottage Grove is twenty-two miles south of Eugene, in section 28, township 20 south, range 3 west.

Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified that he does not know of any vineyard of any size in Lane County, that is, a commercial vineyard. He knows of one or two grape vines, but would not call them a vineyard. There is no one in the business of operating a commercial vineyard in Lane County, and he does not know of any grapes ever being grown on these lands in the grant. The Willamette Valley does not seem to be suited to grape culture. There is no one in that business in Lane County. Cottage Grove is on the main line of the Southern Pacific, south of Eugene, and between Portland and San Francisco. That section of the country has been settled up ever since he can recollect. Lane County is not considered a dairying county. Tillamook County is considered a dairying county. But there are some creameries—there is one creamery in Eugene, but he does not know of any one who has a large herd in that county. The dairying land within the limits of the unsold portion of this grant, either on the even sections or on the unsold lands, would be very small, if there is any.

Whereupon on recross examination, witness testified that he believes the only Government land open to entry in Lane County that is available, is in the Forest Reserve, and it is subject to certain restrictions and regulations so that no one has taken it up.

Whereupon JACKSON F. KIMBALL, called as a witness on behalf of defendants, being duly sworn, testified that he is thirty-nine years old, resides in Klamath Falls, Oregon; has resided there for ten years, and is by occupation a timber cruiser, which has been his business chiefly. He is local representative of the Weyerhauser Timber Company and subsidiary companies in Northern California and Southern Oregon, and is secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Forest Fire Association for Klamath and Lake Counties, the objects of which is the protection of timber from forest fires during the summer season. All the timber companies in Southwestern Klamath County, and most of the larger owners in Northern Klamath County, are members of the Association; and there are, in round numbers, about 500,000 acres of timber lands represented in this Fire Association. These lands, thus represented, are embraced in what is called the Pokegama Plateau, which takes in what is called the eastern part of Jackson County in the high Cascades, and all the timbered lands out to the Klamath Basin; and that is what is called Unit No. 1. The balance of the timber in Klamath and Lake Counties, is operated in connection with the United States Forest Service, but he could not give the acreage of timber land in the Forest Service in these two counties. The Weyerhauser Timber Company owns altogether down in that country 300,000 acres; that is, the Weyerhauser Company and its subsidiary companies. He would have to look up his notes to be sure about this. They have in the Pokegama Plateau, or in Southwestern Oregon and in Jackson County, between 80,000 and 90,000 acres. These lands that are in that patrol are either in Jackson, Klamath or Lake Counties. In the patrol of the Weyerhauser Timber Company and the Weyerhauser Realty Company, are something like 250,000 acres of timber lands, called a yellow pine tract. There is some fir mixed in the holdings. They consider it a good tract for the timber. Defendants' Exhibit 316 shows the holdings of the Weyerhauser Land Company, and the red coloring on the maps represents the Weyerhauser Land Company, the yellow the Pokegama Sugar Pine Lumber Company, and the green the Pelton-Reid Sugar Pine Lumber Company. He knows from personal inspection, or cruising, or from having been over the land at some time in the past, the lands shown on the maps in red, being map No. 1, the acreage of which he would have to guess at, but would say around 70,000 acres in the Southwestern part of Klamath County and the Southeastern part of Jackson County. He is familiar with the tract as far west as Range 4, and he has been in portions of townships 38 and 39, range 3, but very little. Range 4 is practically on the top of the Cascades. To which testimony complainant objected to as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and it was agreed between the parties that this same objection should be deemed taken to all the testimony of this witness, relating to the character of these lands within the limits of these grants, settlements thereon and public land entries thereof. Whereupon witness testified that the general character of that country in that vicinity, within the limits of the grant, with which he is acquainted, is a timbered country on the divide of the Cascades. The lands marked black, with which he is familiar, do not represent the best lands in there by any means. By that he means that the most of the better sections belong to some of the timber companies in there. Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, the unsold lands of the Oregon & California Railroad Company, shown in green, with which he is familiar, generally speaking, are timbered lands, and chiefly valuable for timber. The timber is yellow and sugar pine, white and red fir, what they commonly call larch, which is botanically known as Shasta, or Noble fir. The most valuable lands of the country are in the Jenny Creek country, meaning the lands marked in green. They are timbered lands, and as a rule are covered with white fir, or very old burn, which evidently happened a good many years ago and left those high points with nothing but brush on them. The soil on these railroad lands, with which he is familiar, in the eastern part of Jackson County and the western part of Klamath County, is generally in the high country, and it is more or less rocky and brushy. The percentage of what they call agricultural land in that country, would be very slight, as to those lands with which he is familiar. It would be an awful guess to give the percentage. There are very few acres comparatively. His company owns in there, in the association, 77,000 acres, in round numbers and he should not imagine there were a thousand acres altogether in that 77,000 acres that would be suitable for agricultural or horticultural purposes. There would be little spots, little glades, as they call them—there are a few little spots on the headwaters of Jenny Creek that it is possible a settler might clear a few acres of land and raise a little garden. While that country is very brushy, he has figured in offering this tract to sheepmen, that being a portion of their business in all the rest of their lands which are under lease, that that entire area in these would carry 20,000 sheep. By that he means all running west of the Klamath River, all of that country in through there. In figuring that over, they also included the territory which is open country in Northern California, and they figured that they would range over a territory, roughly speaking, of about one million acres. The sheep are herded, starting in the low lands early in the spring, with what they call the spring range. The sheep work as the snow recedes, north into the high hills. Starting along in April, lambing time down in the lower country, the sheep would run to Thanksgiving possibly; that is, they would work up in the high hills for possibly four months during the summer, and gradually work back when the storms came on, until they were down in this open land. About half of this one million acres is in California, as he estimates, and that portion is generally an open country. The sheep would be on the timbered portion of this one million acres, which he says would be about 500,000 acres, depending upon the season, but he would say generally about four months. There are seasons favorable, which would mean five months. The people that would own or have 20,000 sheep, or such large bodies, are still to be produced. They have been offering these lands for the last four years in an effort to get sheepmen in there, and so far it has not proven attractive to the sheepmen. They are trying to pursue exactly the same methods which the Forest Service attempts to carry out in selling the right to graze on these timbered lands. He believes that it is a good thing for their timber, and incidently produces a little revenue. As sheep graze they are herded and graze the lands closely, and there is a good deal of the inflammable material which is on the ground during August, the dry season, that the sheep either eat up, or tramp into the dust, make it into dust, and thereby reduce their fire risk. These sheep are always accompanied by shepherds or herders. The sheep are usually divided into a band of 2,000. In that country down there it is very brushy and a wise sheepman would probably not have over 1,500 sheep, and they generally figure on a camp tender for three herders, not over that. The presence of these herders and campers, they think, is very good. They have a stipulation with them whereby they are to observe certain rules and regulations which the Forest Service has found advantageous, and which they have also found, in reference to care in building their fires; and also in case of a fire, their interests are identical with the Weyerhauser Timber Company, in suppressing them.

Q. Now, Mr. Kimball, suppose that a settler, under the act of April 10, 1869, should apply to the railroad company to purchase a quarter-section, whether in legal subdivisions by 40's, or a string of 40's, or in any way that it might be sold to him, and the company should sell to him, as an actual settler, at $2.50 an acre, any of these lands that are unsold, or in that general vicinity, and he would be expected to confine his activities to his own quarter-section to make a living, either by grazing sheep, or by raising cattle, or by agriculture or horticulture, or any use that he could put this land to as an actual settler, state, from your knowledge and experience, what would be the result of his attempt to make a home on this quarter-section?

A. If he could use that quarter-section as a basis, whereby he could lease a large area in there, either from the timber companies, the railroad company, or from the forest reserve, a band of sheep of 2000 head would support a family.

Q. How much range would that 2000 sheep have to have on these lands?

A. Well, it is safe to say that they would need in there 200,000 to 250,000 acres.

Q. My question supposes that he is buying this for a home, now?

A. Pardon me, I want to change that. We figure down in there not less than ten acres to a sheep. That would be 20,000, wouldn't it?

Q. Yes.

A. My multiplication is wrong.

Q. But suppose he was confined to his quarter-section, and all the quarter-sections were fenced, if that were possible, what would he be able to do with that quarter-section in grazing or farming, or horticulture, or anything else that would enable him to make a living?

A. There are little spots in there where it is possible that a man might make a living, although the only way they have been able to do it is supplemented by trapping and working out. As far as being dependent on the soil is concerned, I don't know of a single vacant piece of land in that country—by that, I mean, including the railroad land—where it would be possible for a settler to make a living from the land itself.

Q. Now, there are about seven or eight thousand applicants in this record for the purchase of quarter-sections under the pretense that they desire them for homes, actual settlement, at $2.50 an acre, and in 160 acres, or quarter sections. Within your knowledge in that section of the country, would these actual settlers or would they not be able to make a living on the quarter sections?

Q. You may answer.

A. It would depend.

Q. I mean confining it to the land, to the quarter-section.

A. It would not seem possible to me. Occasionally there is a man that can live on practically nothing, but the average man going in there, I doubt if he could select an area in there where he could raise sufficient produce to support him.

Q. Why would he not be able to raise on a quarter-section sufficient produce to support him—what is the reason of it?

A. The general character of the land in there is not productive, even grain, or any other natural product of the soil.

Whereupon witness testified that the fine fruit lands in Jackson County are principally in the Rogue River Valley. He is not familiar enough with it to give definite information as to the area of the Rogue River Valley, or how long or how wide it is. He imagines that it is the area which is colored in yellow, pointing to the yellow field in the vicinity of the Rogue River and around Medford, in Jackson County, shown on Defendant's Exhibit 259. He does not know from personal knowledge anything about the character of the Weyerhauser holdings, shown on map No. 4 of Defendants' Exhibit 316, and only knows that the Weyerhauser Timber Company has acquired them for timber purposes. He has very little personal knowledge of the lands shown on map No. 2 of Defendants' Exhibit 316. He cruised in there for awhile, on Little River in Douglas County. These lands of the Weyerhauser Timber Company, with which he is familiar, are covered with a heavy stand of yellow and white fir. Those that he cruised were very good. It is so long ago that he does not remember exactly, but he thinks something between 25,000 and 50,000 feet to the acre. He is not familiar at all with any of the lands shown on map No. 2 of Defendants' Exhibit 316, showing in red the timber holdings of the Weyerhauser Timber Company in Lane and Douglas Counties, in the vicinity of the West Fork of the Willamette River, and the middle fork of the river, and in the vicinity of Wildwood, in Township 22. He is not familiar at all with the lands shown on map No. 3, of Defendants' Exhibit 316, showing in red, lands in the eastern part of Marion County, on Little River, North Fork; also on the Santiam River in Linn County, within the limits of the grant and outside of the limits of the grant, in the eastern part of Lane County and some scattered sections in the eastern part of Lane County. His knowledge is chiefly confined to the lands of the Oregon & California Railroad Company and other timber owners in Jackson and Klamath Counties. Whereupon defendants offered in evidence these four maps, Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, of Defendants' Exhibit 316. To which complainant objected as not properly identified. Which was received in evidence and is hereinafter set out and described and made a part of this statement of the evidence and identified herein as such. Whereupon on cross examination witness testified, that he is the local representative of the Weyerhauser Lumber Company, and its subsidiary companies, in Southern Oregon and Northern California. He does not know approximately how much land the Weyerhauser Timber Company owns in Oregon, but it owns many thousands of acres, and he presumes, although he does not know, that it is one of the largest land holding companies in the United States. He is acquainted with the lands referred to in his direct examination, described as beginning in the west of Townships 38, 39, 40 and 41, all in Range 4 East; and then Township 38, Range 5 East, down to the California line, and Range 6, beginning with 36, and running down to the California line, in fact from Range 6 East, where the yellow pine occurs in all that country, he is more or less familiar with. He does not mean to say that he has been over every quarter-section, but in a general way he has been over these townships. A great deal of it he has cruised by forties. He has been engaged in the timber business about twenty years, and it is practically all he knows. In their business down there, since they have started in the leasing business, it has become necessary to get more or less information in reference to farming, but his farming experience is all theoretical. The Weyerhauser Timber Company is about through acquiring timber lands in that section of the country. They have acquired quite a little chunk; timber is what the company is engaged in and that is what it is after; it does not deal in agricultural lands at all, unless it is for timber. It is not dealing or investing down there, generally, in real estate. With reference to the ranging of sheep, about which he has testified, they have all of their lands leased east of the Klamath River; but none in that area which they call the Pokegama Plateau—the Jenny Creek belt. They have large areas of grazing land throughout their timber holdings. Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified that he could not tell the exact acreage of lands they had leased in Oregon, but approximately it is about 200,000 acres. They are all leased to sheepmen and for the purpose of sheep grazing. They leased from year to year and they generally figured about as the Forest Service does, that five acres of range will carry one head of sheep, they have found. They leased only from year to year in Oregon. The sheep man goes in about the first of June, and generally leaves the range by October first; in the high mountains the time is shortened very much. The leasing business is carried on by the company in that way, partially to get a little revenue and partially to get a little fire protection. The sheep men pay them five cents an acre per annum, generally. They have a little land north of the Klamath Indian Reservation that is not productive. The market price, so far as they are able to get at it, is five cents per acre; that is the price that the sheep men are willing to pay them. If a man had 160 acres of that kind of land, at five cents an acre, he would get $8.00 a year. That is the best that they have been able to do and they are in the business for what there is in it. Generally these people that rent that land in there this way, are large sheep men. He always tried to play fair with the natural users of the range, but in the very nature of things it gravitates to the big men. The little man cannot afford to pay often times what the big man can. The headquarters of most of these men are at Lakeview. Most of the sheep winter on the desert, as it is called; that is a vast body of public land that lies east of the timbered tract in Lake County, which is naturally in the western part; and as a rule they have to drive from about 50 to 100 miles from their winter range to their summer range. The District Forester of the United States gets for the lands within the Forest Reserves in Oregon, where they lease to sheep men, or cattle men, seven cents per head for summer range, and it varies up to, he thinks, thirteen cents, including the lambing range. That is an open country, that is not timbered, is furnished to sheep men where they lamb. The Forest Service figures stock per acre, for leasing purposes, about the same as they do, generally. There are territories where it takes a great deal more land, and other territories don't take as much, but on an average about five acres to a sheep. The Forest Service charges seven cents a head for their summer range, and his company charged equivalent to twenty-five cents a head, and he thinks they are getting considerable larger incomes than the United States. There are reasons for that all right enough, under their rules and regulations. The lands within the Forest Reserves are known as timber lands. There are, of course, spots in the Forest Reserves that have agricultural possibilities.

Q. But what, relatively, are these lands in the United States Forest Reserve as compared with the unsold lands of the Oregon & California Railroad Company in eastern Jackson County and western Klamath? How do they compare, if you know?

A. The lands of the railroad company that I am familiar with are located on the high Cascades or on the slope of the Jenny Creek plateau, and there is mighty little stuff in there that is much account. But further north, in the forest reserve, there are quite a good many little meadows, natural meadows, in the high plateau country—if that answers your question.

Q. I am referring to the timber character of the two classes of lands.

A. Oh, it is about the same, as far as the kind and amount.

Q. You mean by your answer that in the forest reserve there is probably a fraction more land that could be utilized for grazing, or for agricultural purposes, in that section than in the railroad lands?

A. Yes, I think so. A little further north there are quite a number of spots in there that is good grazing land.

Whereupon, on recross examination, witness testified that in the comparison he was referring to the Crater National Forest. The Forest Reserve is not run as a money making institution; it would naturally charge much less than a private concern would for the use of the range in the Reserve. There are a good many reasons why it is necessary for them to do that. The settler has rights that a timber company does not have to recognize, but the Forest Service does have to. It is very natural that the conditions should be different; and then, of course, his company is out for all there is in it. He would lease his range to the small holder, or small stock man, the same as a large one, if by doing that it did not put them in a position where they could not lease all their lands. They might have a man who would want a choice bit of grazing land in their territory, and by renting to him they would be prevented from leasing a whole lot of other land, and they would probably turn him down as a business proposition. That is the way they look at it. It is a fact that they consider the good will of the settlers living in the vicinity of their lands as some consideration in leasing the lands, a very vital consideration, there is no question about that.

Whereupon MILFORD JACOBS, called as a witness on behalf of defendants, being duly sworn, testified, that he is fifty-four years old, resides at Tacoma, Washington, and his business has always been logger and timber cruiser; he has been a timber cruiser, done nothing else, for the last fifteen years. He has cruised timbered lands in the states of Oregon and Washington, and worked mostly for the Weyerhauser Timber Company. He has cruised timber lands for the Weyerhauser Timber Company, and its subsidiary companies, in the Coos Bay country, and in the country north of Eugene, the Calapooia Range country. He has seen Defendants' Exhibit 316, from a distance, and looked at these maps, and says that he has done a lot of work in the Jenny Creek Basin, in Townships 38, 39 and 40 South, Range 5 East, north of the line of California there, and has cruised lands, he could not say how many acres for the Weyerhauser Timber Company, in the Jenny Creek country. He was sent in there to look over that country, to see what it was, as a timber proposition, and then he did a lot of work cruising afterwards. In going through the country they took notice of the conditions of the country, whether it was a timber proposition or not. He has no recollection of the lands shown on map No. 4 of Defendants' Exhibit 316. He has done quite a lot of work on the lands shown in red colors on map No. 2 of Defendants' Exhibit 316, in Coos County, near the Umpqua Forest Reserve; and also the lands in Coos County and part of Douglas County, east of the Umpqua Forest Reserve, shown on this map. He has done work on the east side of this No. 2 of Defendants' Exhibit 316, in the eastern part of Lane and Douglas Counties. He has done some work there. He became somewhat acquainted with the conditions of the whole country in doing work on these lands of the Weyerhauser Timber Company. The Weyerhauser Timber Company did not buy isolated tracts of timber. They would not buy a piece of timber unless it was a timber country. The method of cruising depends on how close a cruise is wanted. If it is wanted very close, in a few acre tracts, he counted every tree. If it is wanted extra close, he took calipers and measured it; he didn't usually do that. He usually takes acre tracts and counts them and makes an average of every ten acres. There is a report goes in on ten acre tracts. His reports would show of these lands cruised by him for the Weyerhauser Timber Company, in these various localities, that he cruised about 25,000 feet to the acre, but that should be raised about forty per cent, because it was cruised quite a number of years ago, when they did not cruise closely. The price of these timber lands has advanced and the market has become more active, and cruisers are expected to, and do as a matter of fact, cruise more closely; they cut a great deal more closely. There is a great deal more timber cut off of an acre now than there was ten years ago, because timber is worth more. Stumpage has gone up and they cut it closer. The market value of stumpage runs in the neighborhood of a dollar a thousand. Different pieces and different localities will vary, but that is a fair average. The price in the Columbia River country, known to the loggers of Portland and the timber buyers and mills of Portland and tributary to the Portland logging market, will run from $1.50 to $2.50 per thousand. He does not know whether logs produced from these timber lands that are tributary to the Columbia River market for Portland go clear to Astoria or not. He has never been down there. As far as he knows, they were logging what they could to take to Portland. He knows the price of stumpage for logs in the Nehalem country, in Tillamook County, that is, not the timber that has been logged to the present time, he couldn't, but the land that is on the market for sale he has knowledge of the stumpage prices. They quote stumpage in that section of the country, at the present time, at $1.00 a thousand, and they base their price on $1.00 a thousand stumpage, which is the market value. There is a good deal of timber in Lane and Douglas Counties, along where the Weyerhauser Timber Company has made its investments, which only has a speculative value at the present time. It is held for speculation. It cannot be utilized at the present time, and it depends somewhat on who holds it as to the market value, whether it is a large company or a small individual. Whereupon complainant objected to the testimony of witness as to the character of these lands within the limits of these grants, as incompetent, irrelevent and immaterial, and it was agreed between the parties that this same objection may be deemed taken as to all the testimony of this witness relating to the character of the land within the limits of these grants, settlements thereon, and public land entires thereof. Whereupon, witness testified, that the timber in the Jenny Creek country, with which he is familiar, will run largely to yellow pine. There is quite a per cent of sugar pine down the Pokegama, and as one gets up and into the hills it runs more yellow pine, and some white pine.

Q. What is the character of the unsold lands in the Jenny Creek country? I mean the lands of the Oregon & California Railroad Company that are in the eastern part of Jackson County and in what we call the Jenny Creek country, if you know?

A. Why, the land there, it is practically all the same thing. There are a few little clearings along Jenny Creek. They are small. And there is some open country there, but the land is a timber proposition.

Whereupon, witness testified, that these lands of the Oregon & California Railroad Company in that section are chiefly valuable for timber. The unsold lands of the Oregon & California Railroad Company, belonging to that company in Jackson County and in the Jenny Creek country, marked in green on Defendants' Exhibit 259, are not very heavily timbered. The best of the timber has been sold for timber purposes. He accounts for the fact that the best timber has been sold, and is now held by other people, because these people were buying timber in there and they bought the best.

He cannot tell the year when the market for these railroad timber lands, in that section of the country, first became more or less active. The Weyerhauser people went in there about eight or nine years ago, possibly ten years ago. Under present conditions the unsold lands of the Oregon & California Railroad Company, with which he is familiar, in the Jenny Creek country and in the eastern half of Jackson County and western half of Klamath County, have no value for agricultural purposes. They would have some value as a grazing proposition. If one would limit grazing possibilities to a quarter section, if it lay aside of a piece of land that was suitable for agriculture on a creek bottom, it would be of some value as a grazing proposition. There is very little land there that could be used for agricultural purposes, in the unsold portion of this grant, with which he is familiar. He has never come in connection with a grazing proposition, but knows in a general way about grazing sheep over large areas of land. These lands of the company could not be utilized for grazing purposes in any other way than as stated by Mr. Kimball. Where the majority of the lands has been bought up in the eastern half of Jackson County and the western half of Klamath County, the lands that remain would naturally be poor soil, because the heaviest timber grows on the best soil mostly; that is invariably the rule. When one gets timber, he gets fair soil; when one gets poor soil, he gets poor timber. In that country down there where the yellow pine grows, is clay soil and shale, being broken rock. There is a good deal of it rocky. Some places it is all clay.

Q. Is it or is it not productive after the timber is removed, or is it fit for anything, if you know?

A. Yes, there is people in all of that country there in different places, scattered settlers there, that have a little creek bottom, and they farm what they can, and work up on the sides. Sometimes they raise a little on that other land outside of the creek bottom; sometimes they don't.

Q. When you speak of these people living in there, you refer to small settlements in the little valleys and creek bottoms?

A. Yes.

Q. Are there any settlers on the even sections within the limits of these timber belts?

A. Along the river.

Q. But they are only on the lower streams?

Objected to as leading.

A. River and streams. After they get up the creeks they have to irrigate, but along the river bottom it is wet enough so they don't have to irrigate.

Q. What are these river bottoms? Are they small or large?

A. They are small tracts.

Q. When you speak of small tracts, how many acres would you speak of as capable of agricultural uses even along the river bottoms?

A. Along the river bottoms; oh, there is possibly, in twenty-five miles there, or twenty miles, get outside of the timber area there—take it from Klamath Lake, the lower end of Klamath Lake——

Q. I mean within the limits of this grant, now—within the thirty-mile limit of the grant, and not including anything that is outside of the grant?

A. I don't know just where your grant comes, where it is located in regard to Klamath Lake.

Q. Look at the map, Defendants' Exhibit 259, Mr. Jacobs, over here. Here is Medford.

A. Here is Klamath Lake here. That is outside.

Q. This map shows the indemnity limits of thirty miles, and the place limits of twenty miles, and in green shows the unsold portion of the company's lands in Jackson County. Now, the question is, where are any settlements within the limits of that grant, on the even sections, if there are any, in the unsold portion?

A. Oh, there is two or three halfbreeds live in there.

Q. Two or three halfbreeds—pointing to what place, Klamath River?

A. Yes, I expect some of them is on that river.

Q. In the Klamath River country?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, now, the Klamath River has no valley, except small and narrow?

A. Very small, narrow valley.

Q. How wide?

A. Oh, that valley there is in the neighborhood, probably—in that one place, two or three halfbreeds have probably got forty acres that they cultivate in there.

Q. Are there any settlements in the Jenny Creek country within the limits of this railroad land?

A. There are two or three families live where the old stage line crossed Jenny Creek, and upon the head of the creek there are some other people, right in here.

Q. What kind of settlements are they that they have?

A. They are keeping cows up in there. At the upper end of that Jenny Creek is a poplar growth brush, and it is quite easily cleared, that is, three or four hundred acres up there that could be cleared at a reasonable cost.

Q. Where do they range their cows?

A. They range unfenced land, the whole territory. It don't confine the cattle to their own range.

Q. Suppose a settler was to go in there and get a quarter-section of this unsold railroad land at $2.50 an acre from the railroad company, taking the quarter-section according to legal subdivision of forty acres in a string or in a square, whichever way it was best for him, and he was expected to confine his way of making a living to that quarter-section, was not permitted to range his cattle or his stock over the unenclosed lands outside, and was expected to have this quarter-section used for every purpose that it could be used, either for grazing or for raising garden, or horticulture, or grain, or hay, or any agricultural or horticultural purpose, I wish you would state to the court, from your knowledge of these unsold lands, whether or not such a settler, under such circumstances, could make a living on any quarter-section there, or any considerable number of them?

A. Well, there possibly could be picked up a section of land on the head of Jenny Creek that would support life.

Q. That is to say, out of this total area, you think there might be as much as a section that could be gathered together?

A. I think maybe.

Whereupon witness testified that the balance is timber lands. There are places there where it is covered with loose rock, quite large, washed off, had very little timber on it. It has no value as agricultural land. He does not think that he stated the per cent, that he thought of the total which would be agricultural in the Jenny Creek country in the timber area, and not including lands that are comnig under the irrigation ditches, within the limits of the grant, in the unsold portion. Including land that might be irrigated, he thought that two per cent could be used for agricultural purposes. He cruised some land in Coos County, and in the western part of Douglas County, and above Eugene; but he did no cruising on the Siuslaw River in the western part of Lane County; he might have on a little tributary to it, but not down on the river. He cruised some lands as shown on one of these maps, pointing to the lands southeast of the Umpqua Forest Reserve and west of the head waters of the Millicoma River, and his recollection is they were in Townships 23, 24 and 25 South, Range 10 West. He found that land to be rolling, quite well up, good elevation, and young growth of timber, that was about twenty years old, as he understood it. It was fir timber and he did not believe that this land was chiefly valuable for anything except timber. It was a timber proposition. He cruised most of the lands in Townships 21, 22 and 23 South, Range 1 West, and some in Townships 22 and 23 South, Range 2 West; that land is a timber proposition. Practically none of that land colored in red is suitable for agricultural purposes. When the timber is removed it may be suitable for grazing land. The even sections and the unsold lands of the railroad company in these various localities, where these lands of the Weyerhauser Timber Company are situated, is of the same general character and chiefly valuable for timber. Taking both localities, there is practically very little of these railroad lands that would be valuable for agricultural purposes. The soil in the Coos Bay country possibly might be a little better after the timber is off than it is up in 1 West; but the amount of agricultural land there included in that timber area there, is very limited, what would be called agricultural land is almost a negligible quantity, probably one per cent. There is some of that timber land, when the country becomes settled up and the timber is worked off, could be worked into small orchards and grazing, and general farming; and he would say that sixty per cent of the land that he examined, possibly a little more, after the timber is cut off, extracted, cleared and grubbed, and the stumps blown out, could be used for fruit purposes, and grazing, and some agricultural purposes. Take the country right through there, $100 an acre would be cheap for clearing it; he does not think it could be done for that, but that would be cheap.

Q. Don't you know that the clearing of these lands that are heavily timbered, in this fir country, would run from not less than $100 up to as high as $300 an acre?

A. I am well aware of that fact.

Q. That is the fact, is it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do they clear this heavy timber land of its stumps?

A. Do you mean after the logs are taken off?

Q. Yes.

A. With powder mostly. Sometimes they burn the stumps out with fire.

Q. Have you ever seen them use giant powder and black powder mixed?

A. Why, there is a stumping powder put up by these powder concerns for that purpose—put up a stick for that.

Q. Do you know what it costs per acre in this heavy timber for powder alone?

A. Well, I have bought powder and blowed out an acre or two, but I couldn't tell you exactly the cost of it.

Q. Have you any idea as to an estimate of what is would cost on this heavily timbered land just for powder alone, to say nothing of labor?

A. I should think it would be worth $10 an acre.

Q. You don't know?

A. I have no actual knowledge of the present price of powder, nor a very clear recollection of what we paid for it at the time, quite a number of years ago.

Q. Well, now, let me ask you, suppose that an actual settler was to go and apply to the company for 160 acres of this timber land that you are acquainted with, within the limits of this grant, belonging to the railroad company, and would be permitted to buy it at $2.50 per acre, and settle on it intending to make it his home, and was expected to make a living on this 160 acres without the right of pasturing on the outside lands, but to put that land to any use that he could, I wish you would state to the court whether or not there is any considerable number, or any of these quarter-sections that could be made a home of, from which a man could make a living under those circumstances?

A. There is very little of it. The Government land that lay contiguous to this land, that was taken for homesteads, had small patches of timber destroyed on it, and the people stayed there until they could sell the timber proposition and leave it.

Q. Now, then, applying your knowledge and experience to the quarter-section of railroad land that I speak of, what would be the experience of a man who would go in there and try to make a home on a quarter-section and be confined to it?

A. He would starve out.

Q. Why?

A. Because he couldn't make a living.

Q. Why couldn't he make a living?

A. Unless he had capital enough to start with. Take a man with $5,000 to $7,000, he might go into that heavy timber there and make a living.

Q. He wouldn't make it on the land; he would make it on the money he would put into it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Isn't it a fact he could go out in the valley and buy, with his $5,000 or $6,000, land cheaper than he could clear it up.

A. It would be the best proposition for him to do.

Whereupon witness testified that a large part of his work of cruising these lands was done along about 1903 and 1904, something of that kind; and these timber lands began to move on the market about that time, which was about the time when the Weyerhauser people began to buy these lands. There was very little market for timber before the Weyerhauser people commenced buying on the Coast. They made the market. They alone made the market. The fact that they came in here and commenced buying extensively induced other people to come. The first two or three years after the Weyerhauser people were here, there were not so many other people buying, but the number of buyers increased rapidly after the Weyerhauser people began to buy, and the number is still increasing. These timber people come chiefly from Wisconsin, Minnesota and Michigan. There are places in these timber lands, in its native state, where there is considerable sword-fern or what are called brakes. The old burns are mostly grown up to ferns first, and then brush comes in. It takes a good deal of land, in its present state, to support an animal anywhere in that country. He knows of pea-vine on that land, and there are places, isolated places, where the condition would be favorable, there is pea-vine on it. But pea-vine does not usually come into an old burn. There is some pea-vine on some of this land. The pea-vine is good feed in the spring and summer; but there is not enough to make it of any particular value as a feeding proposition.

Q. There has been some testimony in this case that there was a good deal of grazing up there over these lands, in the shape of pea-vine, for cattle, and things of that kind. Would there be grazing there on a 160 acres, or would a man have to have several thousand acres to graze over?

A. He would have to let them roam at will over the country.

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified, that he worked for the Weyerhauser people when they commenced buying here; and has worked for them since that time, six years steady. He has been employed by the Weyerhauser people since about 1900; and has worked, not all the time, since that for them. Some of the time he has done work for the Government on the Yakima watersheds. He has been cruising, making it his business, for the last fifteen years. He has been working in the timber business and cruising for thirty years; he is now fifty-four years old and has been in the timber business since he was twenty years old.

Q. These lands of the Oregon & California Company included in this map, so marked, that you have examined, have been noticed by you in cruising the Weyerhauser timber?

A. Yes. Wherever we go into a piece of timber we take notice of the surrounding country, the general formation and the amount of timber to be found.

Q. Other than the lands in the vicinity of the Weyerhauser tracts, you have not examined?

A. Only as we go through getting to those lands, now, traveling through the country.

Q. Just as you would casually go through? You made no special examination?

A. Made no special examination, unless there was a big burn. If there is a farm or anything in the vicinity of the land we are buying, or a clearing, we make a note of it.

Whereupon witness testified that it would be hard for him to describe accurately, by sections and ranges, the lands of the Oregon & California Railroad Company he had examined. He has no memorandum of his work there. There is quite a lot of that work that was done under other parties. They had done a lot of work that does not show on that map. Defendants' Exhibit 316. Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 316 he has done a good deal of work in Township 40 South, Range 5 East. They had headquarters at Pokegama, and worked there, got their supplies there, and worked on Jenny Creek, and up Jenny Creek. Jenny Creek, as shown on Defendants' Exhibit 316, No. 1, runs south through Townships 39 and 40, Range 4 East. He has done work in Township 39 South, Range 5 East; and was cruising in 39-6 East at a place called Buck Lake, and was cruising in there. He has done a little work along the Klamath River in Township 40 South, Range 6 East. The Klamath River runs through that township diagonally.

Q. Yes, I will permit you, Mr. Jacobs, to refer to that memorandum book, refreshing your mind as to the locations.

A. Section 9, 21 South, Range 1 West; Section 10, Section 12, Section 18, Section 26, Southeast quarter of Section 28, Section 32, Section 34. That is all in that township.

Mr. Fenton: What township was that?

A. 21 South, Range 1 West. In Township 22 South, Range 1 West, Section 2—not all of the section—551 acres, Section 4, Section 6, Section 10, Section 12, Section 13, Section 18, Section 20, Section 22, Section 26, Section 30, Section 32, Section 34. That is all in that township.

Q. What township is that?

A. 22 South, Range 1 West. 23 South, Range 1 West, Section 4, Section 8, Section 10. That is all in that township. 22 South, Range 2 West, Section 4, Section 6, Section 8, Section 12, Section 26, Section 28, Section 30, Section 32, Section 34. That is all of that township I have cruised. And 23-2 West, Section 6, not all of it, 216 acres; Section 20, Section 22, Section 26, Section 28—480 acres; Section 32, Section 34. That is all of that township. 22 South, Range 3 West, Section 12, 211 acres; Section 22, 240 acres; Section 24, 280 acres; Section 26, 320 acres; Section 28, 80 acres. That is all of that township. 23 South, Range 3 West, Section 2, 121 acres; Section 6, 405 acres; Section 14, 40 acres; Section 10, 240 acres; Section 18, 320 acres; Section 22, 320 acres. That is all in that township.

Q. That book that you refer to, Mr. Jacobs, that you have taken these sections down, you have recently inserted those?

A. Yes, I took them down.

Whereupon, witness testified, that the Weyerhauser Timber Company gets a water power site once in a while, but its business is timber and lumber, and it is not engaged in agricultural pursuits, or acquiring agricultural lands for the purpose of exploiting them or of engaging in farming. He does not think there are much cheaper methods of clearing lands than blowing the stumps; that is the cheapest method there is of clearing land. One cannot haul them out as a stump there, but will have the dirt to get off the roots, and that costs about as much to get rid of the stump as it does to get it out of the ground, it has to be dug out. As a usual thing, if the land is any good, it is clay soil, and one has to get that off the roots before they will burn. If they are shot out it is clear and it is all ready to burn. They pull stumps, with stump-pullers, and use donkey engines quite extensively, with pulley blocks; but take fir stumps and it is not a successful proposition. There is a char-pitting method, and also boring and burning stumps. He has seen machines for this purpose, and that is another method that is used. They have devised during recent years, a number of new methods of removing stumps from the land and clearing them, but contractors clearing railroad right of way all hang to powder, and use the cheapest method there is known. In clearing for railroad purposes powder is used on stumps to remove the stump. It might be used to remove a log, too, but not to remove the dirt; the way the railroad contractors shoot the stumps off, it doesn't blow the dirt right off the right of way; and he doesn't think the use of powder has anything to do with blowing the dirt off the right way. He has taken stumps out in street work; during the hard times in 1892 and 1893, they did some street contracting, and that has been his experience, although he has cleared lands too. He never did very much of it in this country for agricultural purposes. They did not have any serious difficulty with timber where he was brought up on a farm in Wisconsin, on the Mississippi River. The timber was scattering, and the stumps, they let stay in a good many years, because they could plow right along on their burns. The country was a hardwood proposition, a different proposition from this. It was what is called a hardwood country. Most of the clearings that he has seen in the western portions of Oregon and Washington, and he has seen a good many in the valley, were in vine maple, some alder, and timber of that kind. There are spots where they have got into the fir timber, but the majority of the farms that were cleared are not fir timber. From present evidences in the Willamette Valley a good deal of it was covered with a dense undergrowth, but he would judge from the looks of it there was a good deal of open country, too. In testifying concerning these lands he has referred to their present condition, as to their agricultural possibilities, with the timber on them. A burn does not necessarily kill the soil; that depends a good deal on the condition of the ground at the time of the burn and of the timber standing on the ground. There will be a few small isolated places where the soil will be destroyed, kind of vitrified; but that is rare, and it does not apply generally. He has never been employed by the Southern Pacific Company, or the Oregon and California Railroad Company, with reference to their lands. This suit is the only thing he has ever had to do with them. He has cruised over a lot of railroad lands; that is, he took preliminary runs through them for the Weyerhauser people; lands that they did not buy, he just made a casual examination of them generally, to see whether they wanted the lands at the price. The value of these lands have constantly increased during the years buyers have come in, and the timber and land have both increased in value. He does not know what the Weyerhauser timber holdings are in Oregon, and would not like to state approximately what they are; he has never figured it out himself. The greater portion of these timber lands have been obtained from the railroad company and through the use of scrip in the even sections. The Northern Pacific Railway Company located the timber lands in Oregon and Washington with Northern Pacific scrip and then sold to the Weyerhauser people. The Weyerhauser people did not use any scrip, they bought the land; they paid more for the scrip land than they did for the patented land. Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified, that he did not read the description of all lands that he had cruised and as shown on his memorandum; he has some more, and practically the same conditions would apply to them. Whereupon, on recross examination, witness testified, that the lands he referred to are in Coos County, and that he cruised in Section 2-24 South, Range 10 West, 601½ acres; cruised 578 acres in Section 4-24 South, Range 10 West; Section 5 of the same township and range; Sections 6, 7, 8, 10, 12, 14, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 34, Township 24 South, Range 10 West; Sections 2, 4, 7, 8, 10, 12, 14, 18, and 24, Township 25 South, Range 10 West. The divide there is what they call the North Fork of the Coos, between that and Coos Bay. That is on the Pacific Ocean divide; the water runs into the Pacific Ocean or Coos Bay. The soil in those townships is not so good as it is further south. It would be agricultural land when the stumps are out, quite a per cent of it, but it is not as good as it is further south, around the south part of the bay or harbor. Whereupon, on redirect examination, witness testified, that there are a few people who went in there along the bottom lands along the creek, took up homesteads and lived there, had some cows, and made a living selling butter; that was not timber stuff; that was vine maple they settled on down on the little streams. No one wants a homestead in the timber land there as a farming proposition. There are some homesteads in the timber lands, he thinks, in there; they got some vine maple land, that is easily cleared. There are no homesteads in that timber land where he was. The even sections there were scripped by the Northern Pacific Railway Company. Timber men own, generally speaking, that timbered land now, where the title has passed out of the Government.

Whereupon W. T. GRIEVE, called as a witness on behalf of the defendants, being duly sworn, testified; that he is thirty-five years old, is assessor of Jackson County, has lived in that county since 1889, and has followed the business of farming, running stock, timbering, and official business since he was fifteen or sixteen years of age. Between thirteen and fourteen years ago he was deputy assessor, and after that he went to farming again; and for the last four years he has been the main assessor of the county. His father, John Grieve, was assessor when he was deputy, and he was deputy two years, and is now in his fourth year as assessor. He has lived in Jackson County about twenty-three or twenty-four years, and is acquainted with the unsold lands of the Oregon and California Railroad Company in Jackson County. The first introduction he had in regard to these lands was the second year—he would not swear positively whether it was the first or second year when he was deputy assessor —William S. Crowell up to that time was the Probate Judge of Jackson County—his father raised the assessment on all the Oregon and California Railroad lands at that time. He was acting as deputy, accompanied with a notary public, and rode through all the out districts even after the assessment was made. He had to ride the out districts, that was his part of it, to ride the out districts as deputy assessor. After this was done Judge Crowell ordered him to take a notary public and go among the farmers in these railroad lands and get affidavits from them as to the actual value of this particular tract of land, which he did. He refers to a controversy between the company, in 1896, when Judge Crowell was County Judge, which resulted in some litigation as to the assessment of the land grant in Jackson County. He was instructed by Judge Crowell to procure this information. After he was deputy assessor, and prior to that time, he had always lived the bulk of the time, the bulk of the time operated in the out districts—that is, out along the creeks and rough districts. He ran cattle on these lands. He had examined these lands for his own personal information; and had located timber lands through the county; and also since becoming assessor, he had looked into the matter of this land business very carefully. He could not state that he had been over every section of these unsold lands in Jackson County, but he had been over every district, and every portion of each district where there would be any question; that is, he has practically seen all of it. To which testimony of the witness complainant objected as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and it was agreed that this same objection should be deemed as taken to all the testimony of this witness relating to the character of the lands within the limits of these grants, settlements thereon and public land entries thereof. Whereupon witness testified, that in ascertaining the value of these lands, in looking at it, considering it, and living there, he has been able to ascertain the general character of these lands, what it is good for and not good for, what is covered with timber and what is not covered with timber, etc. He does not know that he can state just exactly how many acres there are of this grant, if any, that are practically of no value, and without any timber values on them, but if he remembers right they figured that up pretty close, and he believes that the amount was something like one hundred and ninety to one hundred and ninety-two thousand acres, something like that, close to that, that they considered worthless, as far as any farming was concerned. In certain districts of the county there are steep mountains, which are very steep, especially on the Applegate side is the steepest, and there is no timber on a lot of that; it is too steep for farming, unless one would terrace, and it would be impossible to do that; then it is very rocky, they have got some very rocky land there. On the Applegate side there is what is called chaparral on the lowest hills there, and there is some live oak shrubs, but no large live oak trees; there is this kind of brush, and live oaks and laurel, and manzanita; higher up there is the red rooting brush, and what is sometimes called slickleaf, and snow brush, and there is some vine maple. These worthless lands, of which he speaks, are all of a volcanic nature. There has been at times a good deal of mineral prospecting, within the limits of this grant, in Jackson County, and that is very true in regard to the west side of Jackson County; there is one mine in Township 31, Range 1 East; outside of that, on the east side, there is but very little; in fact there is no mining on the east side of Jackson County.

Q. What working mines are there on the west side of the county and anywhere within the limits of this grant, on the even sections or elsewhere, or on the railroad sections, where they have land that is unsold?

A. They are mining some, I guess, on railroad land that has not been sold; but I don't think there is any big operating mines.

Q. You mean prospectors?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is it called? What kind of mining is it called?

A. Well, pocket-hunters, they call them. Of course, there is several ledges of quartz. It is quartz and placer. There is the Opp mine. That is quartz. They have got a stamp-mill there, I believe ten stamps. There is Braden mine, close to Gold Hill. That is one of the oldest mines they have there. Then there is several small quartz mines around close to Gold Hill. Then in above Woodville they have mostly all placer, on what they call Jump-off-Jo Creek. Then on Sterling Creek they have a placer, and on Forest Creek they have a placer. And on Footes Creek, at the mouth of Footes Creek, there is a dredge known as the Champlin dredge, and on the head waters of Foote Creek they have small placers.

Q. What kind of mines are these—what mineral?

A. Gold.

Q. These pot-hunters, or pocket-hunters for gold, have any of them succeeded in locating any claims that they have developed and worked?

A. That is, you mean?

Q. Commercially, I mean.

A. You mean on the grant lands, or on any lands?

Q. On any lands on that side?

A. Well, the pocket-hunter, you know, he digs out a pocket, and that is about the end of it. They have succeeded in digging out some very rich pockets.

Q. These pockets, are they uniform, or are they transitory and scattered?

A. No, they are scattered.

Q. And do they last?

A. No, as a general rule, they never last. I never have known one yet to last.

Q. It is known, then, as a pocket mining country?

A. Yes."

Whereupon witness testified, that outside of the mining that may be in it, the only value of the remaining 251,000 acres would be for the timber there is standing on it, and possibly for what grass grows on it, that is, for grazing. The largest majority of the timber of this remaining land is fir; that is, the bulk of it. It will probably run, he should judge, taking it as a whole, the Oregon and California Railroad grant would not exceed twenty-five per cent pine, including sugar and yellow pine, which is above eighteen inches at the top. The balance of the timber would be red and yellow fir. The best portion of the timber is situated in the Jenny Creek, the Big Butte, Elk Creek, Evans Creek, Footes Creek, and there is some on the head water of the Applegate, but it is considered that Applgate timber is rather light. For the districts that he has stated, he would be safe in saying that the timber would average 20,000 feet to the acre; and that is of commercial value, and is what he has testified to. It would be very hard to say, taking the whole thing, valleys and all, within the limits of this grant, referring to the 251,000 acres of the unsold portion, covered more or less with timber, what per cent in its present state could be used for any agricultural or horticultural purposes; and the reason why, is that to make it farming land it would necessitate the removal of some of the timber off of it. There are places that one would find openings, natural openings, small openings, but to go in and pick up a quarter section and take it as it comes, one would have to remove timber to get any kind of farming land and farm it. Taking the possibilities of this 251,000 acres on an average, as to each quarter section, if the timber was cleared, the land adapted to agricultural use, or that could be used for agricultural purposes, would not exceed one-eighth, which would be about twelve per cent. These agricultural parcels would be in spots. Take the Big Butte district, there is probably a township, close to a township, in there, that one might say would be all farming land, if the timber was off of it; that is to say, if the timber was cut and removed and the stumps grubbed out, could be utilized for some farm purpose; grazing, or vegetation, or grain, or something of that kind. It is not alfalfa land, it is a clay subsoil there. They plow it, but it is not a success, it is not alfalfa land, that high land; but other stuff, they have grown hay and grasses on it.

Q. These small agricultural spots, where are they with reference to these streams that run up into the foothills and mountains?

A. That is, you mean, whether they are right along the streams?

Q. Yes.

A. Or whether they are scattered away from the streams?

Q. Yes, that is what I mean. What is your knowledge on that subject?

A. Well, the bulk of them, the large per cent of the land that would do to farm, of this character, probably could all be put under water, the largest portion of it could be put under water, but it is not along the streams. It is scattered away from the streams.

Q. It would have to be irrigated, then?

A. Yes, it is necessary to irrigate that land. Of course, it grows crops without irrigation, but then it is better to have irrigation.

Q. Something has been said in this testimony, or in the record in this case, by some of the witnesses, about grazing over these lands during a portion of the year. I want to ask you this question: Suppose that the company should sell to some so-called actual settler under the act of April 10, 1869, at the rate of $2.50 an acre, a quarter-section of this land in this 251,000 acres, and the settler should have it in legal subdivisions, not necessarily in a square, but in forties, and he should be confined to making his living, by grazing the land or putting it to any useful purposes, on his 160 acres, I will ask you to state to the court whether or not such so-called or pretended actual settler, under these conditions, could or could not make a living for himself or family on this 160 acres?

A. He couldn't do it unless he had something else to fall back on to make a little money on; he coudn't go on and make a living at first.

Q. What do you mean by having something else to fall back on?

A. Some income. He coudn't move onto a quarter-section there and begin to make a living for him and his family at once—he couldn't do it.

Q. Why, Mr. Grieve, couldn't he do that?

A. Because the property is not in condition to do it. It takes too much to clear it. You have got too much to go through. In fact, I have tried it—I know it can't be done.

Q. Now, something has been said in this case about large sheep drivers or sheep owners, owning from 1500 up to 20,000 head, leasing these lands, or leasing lands of this character, and ranging over these lands, over a section of four or five hundred thousand acres. Now, what is the fact, if you know, as to whether these lands could be used in that way, and how large an area would have to be grazed over in order to be practicable?

A. It would depend, of course, altogether on the bunch of animals you had in your herd. There is in Jackson County what we call spring range, which gives out—that is on the low foothills; that gives out about May—the last of May or first of June, not later than that. Then they have to drive to the higher lands for their summer range. Now, they would have to range over quite a territory. With the brush and timber there is on this land, it is a very hard matter to state just the number of acres that it would take to support an animal in that country; because there are places that there are openings in, of course, that there would be no brush, and it would be all grass; and then in the brush there is pea-vine and stuff, and there is a large amount of grass that grows in there, that is good feed. And there's some districts—in the white pumice district there around Prospect, there is absolutely not a spear of grass grows on it for a township.

Q. Well then, as a practical question, a man who would want to use this land for grazing purposes profitably, would want for, say, 1000 head of sheep, approximately, about how many acres during the season that he could range them?

A. This land is not like the Government forest reserve. There they go right into the summits of the mountains in the reserves, and it would take thribble the amount of this land that it would on the Government reserve land for the same amount of sheep.

Q. Why is that?

A. Well, you have got more timber to contend with, for in the Government reserve, when they lease a man their grazing lands, it is all in these glades, these open glades, on top of the mountains, in the larch timber or in the white fir, as we call it, and there isn't a man in Jackson County that runs sheep but what goes to the high mountains for his summer range onto the reserve. I don't know of a man in Jackson County, outside of one in the south that has his residence in California—he has the Weyerhauser people's tract rented there, and he grazes sheep on that; there is some of that in Jackson County—outside of that, there isn't a timber man in Jackson County that has got his timber lands under a lease to any stock raiser, because there is not grass enough to pay a stock man to pay the price that they will want for the range.

Q. The Weyerhauser Timber Company, I understand, get at the rate of five cents an acre from sheep men on their lands, under their lease, per annum. That would be $8.00 for a quarter-section.

A. Yes.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any of these lands within the limits of this grant being leased, or some quantity of lands being leased for grazing purposes at all?

A. No, I have not.

Whereupon, witness testified, that ranchers or farmers who happened to live along these little creeks pastured these railroad lands, but they did not, to his knowledge, there is not one of them, who pays any rental for any grazing lands. The railroad company owns the land and pays the taxes, and these ranchers have the range. The fine fruit country in Jackson County, famous for Rogue River apples, is located in the heart of the Rogue River Valley. The meridian line cuts the fruit district, the main valley, very nearly in two. That fruit district runs up from Ashland to Woodville. Ashland, he believes, is in Township 39 South, Range 1 East, and Woodville is in Township 36 South, Range 4 West; that runs diagonally there across. He supposes Rogue River Valley covers probably, well take and consolidate it, would probably be four or five townships. The valley is about fourteen miles wide in the widest place, and it narrows up about Ashland, a little south of Ashland, he supposes, it would be, not over three or four miles wide there.

Q. Now, what is the fact, if you know, Mr. Grieve, about there being a range of bare hills, that have no timber and not much of anything else on them, east of the valley, on the east side of the Rogue River Valley?

A. That is what we call the foothills.

Q. Yes, what is that covered with?

A. That is covered with white oak trees, and these scrub black oaks. They are all scrub trees—there is no merchantable oak. And poison oak, and chaparral, and stuff like that, that comes in.

Q. I have been riding through on the train, and didn't see any fruit on there.

Mr. Rabb: I object to the attorney testifying.

Q. I am making a question out of it. What is the fact about that?

Mr. Rabb: Objected to as leading also.

A. Those low foothills there, there is white oak, and there is black oak, and poison oak brush, and chaparral, and manzanita on them, and there is no particular value to them.

Q. The fruit lands, then, as I understand, are not situated on that character of land?

Objected to as leading.

A. In some cases, there is some of those hills are the same character of land as they are a little lower down. They run those orchards up about as far as they can get them on those foothills, and that is the same character of soil as there is on top. But you couldn't farm it there—it is too steep and rocky.

Q. In the west side of Rogue River Valley, around Jacksonville, what is the situation as to the character of land in the foothills, beyond the valley part?

A. That is a free soil,, on the west, around Jacksonville, is a free soil; and take it due north of Jacksonville, it is granite formation, and they even get—they have a quarry out there, and they are getting some granite out of there. And take it around Jacksonville and south of Jacksonville, the soil is free and red, a red soil. And take it east of Jacksonville, between Jacksonville and Bear Creek, that is the black loam land, pretty near all of it, except some spots. It is very spotty.

Q. This that is east of Jacksonville, and towards Medford, and on either side of that space, isn't that part of this good fruit land?

A. Yes, sir; the best there is in Rogue River Valley.

Q. Yes. Now, I have been told, and I think that it is generally known, that some of this fruit land around Medford, when the trees are six and seven years old, and are set out to Yellow Newtowns, and what is the other standard?

A. Spitzenberg.

Q. Red Spitzenberg apples, that the market value of it is $1,000 an acre, or like that. What is the fact about that?

A. That is very true. They have sold for that, and they even have sold for $2,000 an acre, from $1,000 to $2,000 an acre. The Burrell people sold at $2,000 an acre.

Q. You refer to the Burrell Investment Company, of Portland?

A. Yes.

Q. Where are the lands of that company situated, that they have devoted to fruit culture?

A. They are situated in Township 38, Range 1 West, and maybe in 1 East. I don't know whether it is in 1 East or not.

Q. Are they in the valley?

A. Yes, sir; they are in the main heart of the valley. They are south of Medford.

Q. How far from Medford?

A. About four miles.

Q. How long has the Rogue River Valley been settled, from your knowledge, and from your knowledge of the history of that country?

A. I cannot give you the exact dates on that, but it is one of the oldest settled portions of the State of Oregon. Jacksonville, I believe, is considered among the oldest towns in the state.

Q. I call your attention to this map, Defendants' Exhibit 259, which shows in yellow body, Gold Hill, Tolo, Sams Valley, Beagle, Eagle Point, Agate, Medford, Willow Springs, Jacksonville, Phoenix, Talent, Ashland, and, according to the legend on this map, all that country in yellow consists of lands lost to the grant by adverse entries, that is, by donation land claim settlements, homesteads, or other settlements, in the early days. State to the court whether or not that yellow field there practically represents all of the agricultural and fruit lands of Jackson County?

A. It does.

Q. I notice on this same map Applegate Creek, which heads west of Jacksonville, and appears to run northeast out towards Wilderville, and then finally gets into the Rogue River, I think, somewhere near Grants Pass, does it not?

A. Yes, it heads due south of Jacksonville.

Q. I notice along that stream a body of yellow shown on this map. State to the court whether or not that yellow represents practically all of the agricultural land along the Applegate Creek, and Williams Creek country.

A. It does.

Q. I call your attention to the fact that on this map along Butte Creek, and Lake Creek, Little Butte, and up Antelope Creek, this same yellow field extends shown on this map. I will ask you if that does not show substantially all of the valley land or agricultural land along those streams in Jackson County?

Objected to as leading.

A. It does.

Q. I notice in this large yellow field in Jackson County occasional fractional sections of land in green, which on the map is supposed to indicate, according to the legend, the unsold lands of the Oregon & California Railroad Company, in some places there would be a forty and other places a quarter-section, other places almost a section with a 40 out that is yellow. What is the character of that land that is situated thus in the low lands of the Rogue River Valley, or in that yellow field? What kind of land is that—this unsold railroad land?

A. There is some of that, one piece right here, around here at the mouth of Bear Creek, that is first-class stuff.

Q. How much is there of that?

A. Well, it seems to me—I cannot give you the exact acreage in that farm, but it seems to me it runs about 200 to 240 acres, something like that. That is under lease to somebody there—the company owns it. Now then, this, after you get back here on this side——

Q. Pointing to the east side of Phoenix?

A. Yes, this is the east side here. This is sticky. This is all sticky land here.

Whereupon, witness testified, that he means by sticky land that which is generally called gumbo; that is, land that is all run together. One cannot walk through it, it all sticks to his feet when it rains; it is not free soil. They farm this land. The desert is between Eagle point—Agate is right on the edge of the desert, which extends from Antelope Creek down into the forks between Bear Creek and Ashland. That desert is hard pan land, and is used for the purpose of fruit. They are developing it now. The Rogue Lands, Incorporated, have begun to develop it; it has never been cultivated before in the main desert, only on the edges. This company has run up in the desert and they are developing it by putting water from Little Bear Creek. They have brought a ditch from Little Bear Creek, and put in a ditch there and are selling water to the farmers. They take a drill and drill down through the subsoil of rock on that desert there, and put in two shots of giant powder down about eight feet, blowing it up, crushing up that rock, and when they do that they put in a tree. Then they went to work on about probably an acre and a half there, blasted it all over, ever so often, and planted alfalfa on that. It has not done very well even then, but it is growing. They got a stand, but he does not think it is a success, the alfalfa part of it; it may be, it has not shown. There is lots of that yellow field, speaking of Defendants' Exhibit 259, that is spotted. The reason why it won't make good fruit land is that they have the hard-pan to contend with. Hard-pan is land that is cemented together in strata. There are two stratas there that they have got to go through, and that is the reason they went eight feet. There is only about three, he guesses, right under the surface there is a hard-pan, about eight inches down; and then about four or five feet, five to eight feet, he thinks, that the other stratum runs; and they blasted through the first stratum, which was not a success; and then they had to go down through the second. It is a Spokane company that obtained this water-right on this desert, and brought up the desert and is trying to develop an irrigation section to be sold; they bought that several years ago and have been developing it with this water on the land in the dry season, setting their trees, and then they have been selling it. They are just young trees; they had one orchard there, the first one they planted, they went through the first stratum of this bed-rock, or hard-pan, and they pulled that all out; it was not a success; the trees died. There are some good fruit lands around Eagle Point; they grow Yellow Newtown and Spitzenberg apples there, principally along the creeks. He cannot state exactly how many carloads of these commercial apples are shipped annually from the Rogue River Valley; they expect this year to ship out a thousand carloads, but they won't do it. They are shipping some to European countries and some to New York. They depend on New York and Chicago. He cannot state definitely in regard to the amount of sales of pears, the number of carloads; it would only be hearsay, but he knows that there are a lot of pears shipped, and they are the best there is, they claim. He could not state what they get f. o. b. for their pears at Medford which are shipped to New York. The market is largely New York and Chicago. He does not know exactly what they get for the Yellow Newtowns and Spitzenbergs shipped to Chicago and New York and elsewhere in the east, but he believes that they figure close to four cents a pound, which, figuring fifty pounds to a box, would make close to $2.00; about $2.45 to $2.50 somewhere close there; it is close to four cents a pound or better. These apples and pears go out on the Southern Pacific from Medford; that is, they are started from Medford on the Southern Pacific, and are shipped from Medford to New York by rail; that is, to New York and Eastern points. He cannot testify what the grower gets for delivery on the car. He can tell what he is doing with fruit. He purchased apples last fall from a man in Ashland by the name of Barnhard, who charged him four cents a pound, figuring fifty pounds to the box, and who said he was charging him just what he got at Ashland. There are a lot of peaches grown at Ashland, and some grapes grown at Jacksonville. There are some vineyards there; there are no large vineyards; there are some that they make a commercial business of at Jacksonville and Medford. There is one man at Medford by the name of Demmer. They are annually shipping considerable peaches from Ashland; and they have now planted peaches more extensively all over the valley for what they call fillers. That is where a man sets out an apple and pear orchard, he has to set his trees so far apart; they figure that there will be about seven or eight years wait on an average for pears; they put these peaches between the trees, and in three or four years they come into bearing; then when the apples and pears come into bearing then they grub out the peach trees, so they are called peach fillers. They have not irrigated in the Rogue River Valley until very recently, but they do now. They have put water onto the Snowy Butte Orchards. It makes considerable difference as to the fertility and production in the Rogue River Valley land, whether one has water. The blacksoil, or black land, in Jackson County, between Jacksonville and Central Point, is what they call the alfalfa land; it grows anything, but that is alfalfa land; it is very deep soil, and has no clay subsoil. Some of it has been set to orchard, but they have found, as a general rule, that land is too strong, and makes too much wood growth; and in some cases, such as the Snowy Butte Orchards and the Hanley Orchards, they have grubbed some of their orchards up, the orchard is subjected to blight, and they have put it back into alfalfa. They ship wheat into the Rogue River Valley. They do not produce any wheat there. They ship in all the grain that is used there. They ship in barley, oats and even potatoes. There was more grain there prior to the time when they went into fruit, but they have always shipped in grain, instead of shipping it out. Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified:

Questions by Mr. Rabb:

Q. Mr. Grieve, do you remember having a conversation with Harry E. Laughlin, Special Agent of the General Land Office, March 16, 1912, at the court house in Jacksonville, Oregon, with reference to these lands?

A. What is the name?

Q. Harry E. Laughlin.

A. There has been agents in there, but I cannot recall that name. There has been several agents in there. There has been Government agents and railroad agents, you know, in there, but I haven't kept track—first one comes and then the other— and I don't know, I couldn't state as to that, as to the man's name. I wouldn't want to swear to the man's name.

Q. I hand you this document, Mr. Grieve, and ask you to examine it and state whether or not that is an affidavit executed by you on the date that it purports to have been executed.

A. Here is one here 5 East, they have got it. That don't include that. This is my signature right here. I remember this. There must have been a mistake when they put that 5 East down there. I don't remember any 5 East being there. This 5 East here—I don't know nothing about that.

Mr. Fenton: How is that?

A. There is 5 East marked here.

Mr. Fenton: The question is, did you sign the document?

A. Yes, I signed this document; but this 5 East—I don't know anything about that.

Q. This document that I have handed you has your signature on the margin of the first page.

A. Yes.

Q. And at the end of the statement?

A. Yes.

Q. In this document, is it not stated——

Q. Is it not stated, "I. W. G. Grieve, a citizen of the United States, 35 years of age, residing at Jacksonville, Oregon, where I am County Assessor of Jackson County, Oregon, being duly sworn, depose and say: I have been county assessor for about three years last past. I have lived in Jackson County, Oregon, for the past twenty-four years; and prior to becoming county assessor, I spent about seventeen years in the stock business, and about four years in locating people on Government land. During my residence in Jackson County, I have lived at Central Point, Prospect, Jacksonville, on Little Butte Creek, on Big Butte Creek, and elsewhere. I have ranged cattle on almost all the out-districts of said county; and through ranging cattle, locating people on lands, hunting, performing the work of county assessor, etc., have become very familiar with the lands in all parts of said county. I have had experience in farming; and by having lived most all my life in farming communities, have become familiar with agricultural conditions, particularly in said Jackson County, Oregon. I am very familiar with the lands now owned by the railroad in the following described townships; and I estimate the number of quarter sections thereof which are suitable for settlement purposes, that is, which would support a family, at the percentages stated below:

"Those which drain into Trail and Elk Creeks and the upper Rogue River, namely, Tps. 32 S., Rgs. 1 W., and 1 and 2 E. W. M.; Tps. 33 S., Rgs. 1 W. and 1, 2 and 3 E. W. M.; Tps. 34 S., R. 1 W. and part of 1 E., and 35 S., Rgs. 1 W. and 1 E., 20 per cent.

"Those which drain into Big Butte Creek, namely, Tp. 34 S., Rgs. 2 and 3 E. and part of 1 E.; Tps. 35 S., Rgs. 2 and 3 E., and part of Tp. 36 S., R 3 E., 40 per cent.

"Those which drain into Little Butte and Antelope Creeks, namely, Tps. 36 S., Rgs. 1 W. and 1 and 2 E., and part of 3 E.; Tp. 37 S., Rgs. 1, 2, 3 and 4 E., 20 per cent.

"Those which drain into Evans and Sardine Creeks and tributaries, namely. Tp. 33 S., Rgs. 2, 3 and 4 W.; Tp. 34 S., Rgs. 2, 3 and 4 W.; Tp. 35 S., Rgs. 3 and 4 W., and the portions of Tp. 36 S., Rgs. 3 and 4 W., which are north of Rogue River, 20 per cent.

"Those drained by Sams and Beagle Creeks, namely, Tp. 35 S., Rg. 2 W., and part of Tp. 36 S., R. 2 W., 50 per cent.

"Those which drain into the Rogue River on the south, and into Bear Creek as far south as Ashland, namely, part of Tp. 36 S., Rgs. 2, 3 and 4 W.; Tp. 37 S., Rgs. 1, 2 and 3 W., and part of 4 W., and Tp. 38 S., Rgs. 1 W. and part of 2 W., and 1 E., 50 per cent.

"Those which drain into Jenny and Dead Indian Creeks and those south of Ashland, which drain into Bear Creek, namely, Tp. 38 S., Rgs. 2, 3 and 4 E.; Tp. 39 S., Rgs. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 E., and part of 1 W.; Tp. 40 S., Rgs. 1, 2, 3, and 4 E.; Tp. 41 S., Rgs. 1 2, 3 and 4 East, 30 per cent.

"Those which drain into Applegate Creek and its tributaries, namely, part of Tp. 37 S., R. 4 W.; Tp. 38 S., Rgs. 3 and 4 W., and part of 2 W.; Tp. 39 S., Rgs. 2, 3 and 4 W., and part of 1 W.; Tp. 40 S., Rgs. 1, 2, 3 and 4 W.; and Tp. 41 S., Rgs. 3 and 4 W., 15 per cent.

"Taking all the quarter sections together which I have estimated above as suitable for settlement purposes, I estimate that they will average twenty acres of plow land to the quarter section; and I know that practically all of the railroad lands in the territory above mentioned is good grazing land.

"I consider the above estimates as conservative; and I know that the climatic and soil conditions of the lands in Jackson County, Oregon, are favorable for agricultural purposes, and fruit growing."

A. They have got there, they have got my initial wrong in the beginning there. It is all lead pencil—I don't know. I know that is my signature to it.

Q. That was a correct reading of this document, wasn't it, Mr. Grieve?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Fenton: The document speaks for itself, and is the best evidence.

A. That is all right—I don't deny. But this "W. G."—that is not my initial. I didn't notice that. I couldn't swear whether it was "W. G." or "W. T." at that time that he put down there. Of course, this is my signature here. I remember the document.

Q. The statement that I read was contained in this document?

A. Yes. We talked that over—I cannot recall the man's name. There has been so many in there, that I cannot—I don't know now.

Mr. Fenton: The question is, is that you signature to the document?

A. Yes, that is my signature. There is no question about that.

Whereupon complainant offered said affidavit, referred to in the testimony of the witness, as part of his testimony, marked Government's Exhibit 120; to which defendants object, unless offered for the purpose of impeachment. Whereupon said exhibit was received in evidence, so marked, and is hereinafter set out and described, and made a part of this statement of the evidence, and identified as such. Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified:

Q. In whose handwriting is this statement that you signed, Mr. Grieve?—Government's Exhibit 120.

A. It is the handwriting of the party that was there at that time. I cannot recall his name. What did you say his name was?

Q. Government's counsel didn't read you the name. Did you hear the name?

A. Yes, sir; I heard the name. He told me the name there, but I cannot recall it.

Q. Harry E. Laughlin.

A. There has so many been there.

Q. "Harry E. Laughlin, Special Agent, G. L. O."—General Land Office. The 16th day of March, 1912. How long were you talking with Mr. Laughlin before this statement was written?

A. If I remember right, the gentleman that came in, whether his name was Laughlin or not——

Q. That doesn't make any difference what his name was.

A. I cannot swear. He came in in the morning—I believe it was in the morning he came in, or some time—I think that I was busy at that time—and he wanted to know if I would give him some idea in regard to the O. & C. Lands; and he came back.

Q. How long a time were you talking to him?

A. I think he came back in the forenoon. I don't suppose he was in there—he wasn't in there to exceed an hour, I don't believe, if I remember right. It wasn't long, anyway.

Q. Then how long after this conversation with him, which you think may have been an hour, was it that he came back with this affidavit?

A. That was when we had the conversation. He came in and asked me, and I told him he would have to come in later, if I remember right, and then he came back; and whether he wrote that document there or not, I cannot state, or whether he had it written out when he came in.

Q. Whose language is used in this affidavit? Whose language is this that is used there—his or yours?

A. That in regard to the townships and ranges, I think it is mine.

Q. I mean, whose is the other languarge, aside from the mere description?

A. He wrote that out, if I remember right.

Q. For instance it says here, using the words "suitable for settlement purposes, that is, which would support a family." Now, whose language is that?

A. Well, he wrote the document. He asked me them questions as he went along, you know, and of course he was the one that wrote the document. As to whether I put that in there, I couldn't swear to that.

Q. Well, what do you mean—what did he tell you was the meaning of land that was suitable for settlement purposes, if he did tell you?

A. That is, he wanted an approximate estimate on it. I told him I couldn't be exact on that, because that is something that was very hard to get at. We had no cruise.

Q. What do you mean by the use of the words "settlement purposes?" Just tell the court, in your own way, what you mean by that.

A. Well, that would be land that would actually be level enough to till, and it would be land that contained timber and everything, just as the land stands now, in its raw state. That was the information he wanted when he came in there.

Q. Did you believe land suitable for settlement purposes would include timber land?

A. Yes, that included the timber land, that included all lands, that had everything on it; that is, as it is right today.

Q. What I am getting at, have you included in your definition of land "suitable for settlement purposes" lands that were timbered, but the timber of which could be cleared and grubbed and the land utilized in that way for settlement purposes?

A. Yes, sir; yes.

Q. Now, when you say, "Taking all the quarter sections together which I have estimated above as suitable for settlement purposes, I estimate that they will average twenty acres of plow land to the quarter section," you mean twenty acres of plow land after the timber is cleared?

A. Yes, sir; after the timber is cleared.

Mr. Rabb: Objected to, as the witness has previously testified that the statement related to the character of the land in its present state.

Q. Well, you mean in its present state with the timber on it?

A. Yes, with the timber on it.

Q. But you didn't mean by the words "suitable for settlement purposes," that a man would go out there and settle on a piece of timber land, and then make a living off of it just as it was, with standing timber on it?

A. No, no. It is simply that this could be—there could be this much plow land covered to a quarter section.

Q. That is, it is possible to obtain it by clearing the land; not otherwise?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't mean that every quarter-section would have twenty acres of plow land on it? That is, twenty acres of land that had timber that could be cleared, that would be suitable for settlement or agricultural purposes—that every quarter-section would have that?

Mr. Rabb: Objected to as not a proper question.

A. No, that was as a lump sum. That was an aggregate. That was the question that was put to me at that time.

Q. Did this examiner, this special agent, tell you what he wanted this for?

A. I don't believe that he did. I don't believe that he told me. There has been so many of them there. There has been several in there.

Q. Did he tell you anything about this suit between the Government and the company, this man Laughlin?

A. I cannot recall that, because some of them have, and some of them have not. Now, if I met the man, if I met him face to face, I would know the man.

Q. And it has in this, "I consider the above estimate as conservative, and I know that the climatic and soil conditions of the lands in Jackson County, Oregon, are favorable for agricultural purposes and fruit growing." Now, what does that mean? All the lands, of everybody in Jackson County?

A. That means all the lands—that means climatic conditions in Jackson County.

Q. And includes the Rogue River Valley?

A. Includes all of it, yes. It is stated there—the townships and ranges given there even in the valley.

Q. I understand; but he uses the expression, and makes you use it, "I know that the climatic and soil conditions of the lands in Jackson County, Oregon, are favorable for agricultural purposes and fruit growing. Did you mean by that statement to include all the lands in Jackson County, including the Rogue River Valley?

Mr. Rabb: Objected to upon the ground that counsel is assuming facts not shown by the testimony of the witness.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you asked by the attorneys or counsel for the Government, or any one representing the Government, to be a witness in this case?

A. No, I was not.

Whereupon, W. E. BALL, called as a witness on behalf of defendants, and being duly sworn. testified, that he resides at Toledo, Lincoln County, is forty-eight years old, is county assessor of Lincoln County, and has been such for nearly five years. Lincoln County was created and cut from Benton County in 1893, he thinks it was. He is familiar with the unsold lands of the Oregon & California Railroad Company situated in Lincoln County, and the company owns in that county, according to his recollection, 15,906 acres. His duties as county assessor caused him to investigates these lands as far as he could. He has followed the usual travel through trails and roads running in through that country, and taking observations in a general way of the lands; and he thinks he viewed, at least he intended to view, substantially all of the lands. He knows what is merchantable timber when he sees it. The character of the timber that generally grows on these lands is second growth fir, which predominates in the timber in that country. He has a little memorandum he took off of his books before he started to make the assessment, which will refresh his memory as to the character of these lands. To which testimony of the witness complainant objected as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and it was agreed between the parties that this same objection should be deemed taken to all the testimony of this witness, relating to the character of the lands within the limits of these grants, settlements thereon and public land entries thereof. Whereupon witness testified, that he thinks he can remember substantially. The portion he considers where the old growth predominates is 480 acres, in Township 14 South, Range 9 West, and there would be about 6,000 acres, or a little more, of young fir timber, or what he calls second growth, and that land is chiefly valuable for timber. This second growth timber is considered merchantable. In a general way the balance of the land is called hill land; but in these hills are some bench lands, some small bottoms, in places through it. He would call that hill land which is steep, practically worthless outside of the timber, and he thinks there are perhaps six or seven thousand acres; portions of this six or seven thousand acres could be good for goat range perhaps, if cleared. It has salal, alder, vine maple and some fern mixed with the salal in places on it. There are some tracts of this six or seven thousand acres, in places, small tracts of it, that could perhaps be used for agricultural purposes; and he would say that scattered through this six or seven thousand acres, fifteen per cent of it could be used for agriculture or horticulture. These parcels are all scattered through the six thousand acres, and are small benches and small bottoms on creeks, scattered pretty generally through these lands. Of the balance of nine thousand and some odd acres, about three thousand acres are what they term better land than the hills he has been describing. It is better because it is nearer roads and settlements, and a little more level in its character—a little better land. But this is not all in one body. This is scattered through this remaining nine thousand acres and over. They term it a little better land and assess it a little different. It is not scattered all the way through, but it is not all in one place; it is nearer to settlement, nearer to roads and is a little more level as a whole. It is covered about the same, except he forgot in the first place to say that there is some young fir scattered over in places, some small trees, all over this country. This 3,000 acres, to which he refers, would need to be cleared of brush and timber —he thinks, it would. He has had a little experience in clearing lands, not that kind of land, but in clearing lands, as he is a farmer himself, or used to be, before he got into the assessor's work. He does not know exactly, but his judgment would be that this land perhaps would cost to hire it cleared and put in cultivation from $25 to $50 an acre. This land in portions of it is rough; there are portions of what they term bench, which is practically level; there are portions of all this land which is rough hills; of this 3,000 acres, as near as he could judge, there would perhaps be 25 to 30 per cent of it that could be utilized for agricultural purposes, or for fruit and things like that. The balance of the nine thousand and odd acres, after taking out the 3,000 acres, is covered by second growth timber and old growth, and they value it principally for its timber, and it is chiefly valuable for its timber. He would say that of the total of 15,906 acres, 1,500 to 2,000 acres are agricultural and horticultural, thus scattered and in its present condition. These small tracts making up this 1,500 to 2,000 acres would range from five to fifty acres in a place. There is none of this land cleared so far as he knows. He never saw any of it cleared, and there is none of it, in a state of nature, that is fit for agricultural or horticultural purposes, until it is cleared; that is, he does not think so; he never saw any. He means that there is about 1,500 to 2,000 acres in all that could be made useful for agriculture or horticulture. It would be about ten per cent of the whole 15,906 acres.

Q. Now, suppose that the company should have an applicant under this Act of Congress of April 10, 1869, to purchase 160 acres in legal subdivision all together—I mean in a string of forties, or in a rectangle or square, as the land might be selected, at the price of not to exceed $2.50 an acre, and in a quantity not exceeding 160 acres, and the applicant bought it for a home, for settlement purposes, upon which to live and make a home, I will ask you to state, from your knowledge of this land and the conditions in which it is at the present time, whether or not such person, if he were confined to his quarter-section thus selected, and not allowed to use the balance for grazing, was expected to make his living on that piece of land for himself and his family, and make a home of it—whether in your judgment a man could find a quarter-section that would be suitable for a home, for actual settlement, upon which he could make a living?

A. Yes, he could find some. There is some that he could make a home of.

Q. Out of this 1,500 or 2,000 acres?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But with that exception, what would be the success of trying to settle this land?

Q. You may answer now. Supposing the settler was confined to the quarter-section?

A. I don't think it would be a good business proposition for him to undertake it on this land.

Q. What is the fact, in your judgment as to whether or not anybody would undertake to make settlement and homes on this land, eliminating this 1,500 to 2,000 acres, and whether it is practicable?

A. They might some undertake it, but I doubt of its being practicable. I don't think so.

Whereupon, witness testified, that there was a fire through that country, commonly known as the Yaquina Bay fire, years ago; the old settlers say there were two fires, which one of them burned this part he does not know; one in 1858 and the other in 1868. They burned a great scope of country. There are some burned stumps standing there yet in places. This burned area is the same country which he has been describing as hill lands. It was originally timbered land, principally, he thinks. There is some indication in this burned district of reforesting; in places it is covered now with a young growth of fir. It would, he thinks, if reforested scientifically, if seed were scattered over it, in his judgment, ultimately go back to good fir timber; and if reforested it would be chiefly beneficial for timber; and it is in the timber belt of the Coast Range of mountains. Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified, that he had been assessor of Lincoln County nearly five years; this is the fifth roll he has made, which he is now making. They did not cruise the timber in Lincoln County for the purpose of assessment; they have no cruisers. He gets the best information he can through deputies and through his own observation. He tries to get deputies who knew conditions and knew the country in each locality; and in this particular case, of these railroad lands, the first year he was assessor, he sent a deputy through this country to survey these lands and mark out on the plat what was timber and what was not. He assessed them that year from that knowledge as a deputy assessor, and witness has the plat in the office now which that deputy marked. The information he has other than this is general, and his own observation in going through the country and talking with the people in through there. He never personally made an examination by running the lines, or segragating these railroad lands, and never attempted to cruise the lands, or make an examination on the ground, except in passing along the traveled trails and roads; and to some extent he has based his opinion as to the character of these lands upon the reports made to him by men that have worked under him. He does his work on their reports. Lincoln County is a hill county, and these lands, he thinks, lie on the western slope of the Coast Range. Practically all of those lands on the west slope of the Coast Range have red soil and grow vegetation profusely, due to some extent to the moisture on that side of the range. Lincoln County is not very much of a dairying county yet, they have started in on it. The dairying business is more extensive, perhaps, north of there in Tillamook County, but they are starting in the dairying business in Lincoln County. The lands they farm in Tillamook County, with few exceptions, are bottom or bench lands; the hill land of Tillamook County is not farm land, so far as he knows; he never heard of it. A greater portion of these lands in Lincoln County is now set with some kind of small timber. There are some lands in Lincoln County not covered with timber, tide lands and some lands along the coast, that have simply salal, no timber. There is very little logged off land in Lincoln County; there are some old burns that are being cleared, very little, if any, logged off lands, because they have but very little in Lincoln County, and no logging is done there. The only railroad they have is the road running from Corvallis over to Toledo in that county. He classified these lands by getting information for the office of what portions were tillable, and what portions were bottom and could be tillable, what portions were rough, and what portions were timber lands; but on the roll they say so many acres of land worth so much money, and do not classify them on the roll. They added these different character of lands all together in the office, and set it out on the roll as so many acres of land worth so many dollars, without classification. Fruit does pretty well in that country. It is a sparsely settled country. They have family orchards. There is no merchantable and no marketable fruit raised for market; very little of any kind of fruit in Lincoln County; fruits and berries do well there. He recognizes the photographs shown in Government's Exhibit 121, entitled "Toledo, Oregon." These two photographs are pictures taken of a sawmill in Toledo, and showing a hilly background, with some timber on it. It is a photograph of Toledo, with the hills in the background, and is situated in Lincoln County. Whereupon complainant offered said documents and photographs in evidence, as Government's Exhibit 121. To which defendants objected on the ground that the documents or photographs do not relate to the lands in suit, or similar lands, and is therefore irrelevant, incompetent and immaterial, and so far as the article is concerned, is hearsay. Whereupon said exhibit was received in evidence, and is hereinafter set out and described, and made a part of this Statement of the Evidence, and identified herein as Government's Exhibit 121. Whereupon, on redirect examination, witness testified, that he did not confine his knowledge of these lands altogether to these reports made to him by his representatives in the field; he has seen the country, and thinks the whole of it; and has been through the country several different ways, in the settled parts, where there are roads and trails through which he could get through, he should think a territory covered by one-half of these lands, perhaps, but maybe not on each piece of land, but through the country and he is satisfied that he knows the character of these lands. Referring to Government's Exhibit 121, to the picture, "Glimpse of Woodland Scenery in Vicinity of Toledo," his best judgment is that that is the Siletz River, north of Toledo, and most of it is a timbered country. There is lots of fine timber in the Siletz country. He does not recognize, or locate, the picture "Bottom lands near Toledo are especially productive." The bottom lands around or near Toledo, or in the vicinity of Toledo, are principally tide lands. The statement in this exhibit "Vast timber resources. Directly tributary to Toledo there are, at a conservative estimate, between 15,000,000,000 and 20,000,000,000 feet of merchantable timber," is overdrawn, how much, would all depend upon what one would consider tributary to Toledo. Practically all of the timber that is near Toledo is on the Siletz; and Toledo is nine miles from the Siletz River; and if they counted the Siletz country as tributary, that would be a good estimate. Very little of that timber could be delivered at Toledo, except by rail. They would have to build logging roads; and the same thing is true of the mills on Yaquina Bay. There is a short road, perhaps a mile and a half long, running up the slough. They haul these logs to tidewater and float them to the mills. This road does not tap the main body of timber, however; it does not reach them. Toledo claims seven or eight hundred population, and is the county seat of Lincoln County; Toledo is on the Yaquina River, which empties into Yaquina Bay at Newport, which is at the mouth of Yaquina River and Yaquina Bay. The Corvallis & Eastern Railroad runs from Corvallis, through Toledo, to Yaquina Bay. There is about half of Lincoln County that is timbered with merchantable timber. He has seen these folders, marked Government's Exhibit 121, but he has never examined them very closely; he does not know that he has ever seen one just like this one, but he has seen some of them. Whereupon, on recross examination, witness testified, that he thinks the timber in Lincoln County is due north from the western border of these lands on the Siletz River, in that vicinity there; a little west, principally north. Stock raising would be, he thinks, the main industry of the people in Lincoln County. They raise sheep, goats and cattle. They raise Angora goats to quite a large extent. He thinks that Government's Exhibit 121, purports to be issued "under the co-operative Community Plan of the Southern Pacific Lines in Oregon. Wm. McMurray, General Passenger Agent." He remembers seeing one like this one, and examined it a little, and thinks this is the same.

EVIDENCE IN REBUTTAL FOR COMPLAINANT

Whereupon MICHAEL KEBELBECK, called as a witness on behalf of complainant being duly sworn testified, that he was born in Bavaria, Germany, and is fifty-four years old, coming to the United States when he was twenty-four, and is living now at Cottage Grove, Lane County, Oregon, and has lived in Lane County twenty-four years. When he first came to Lane County he bought eighty acres of land west of Cottage Grove; was there awhile and then worked for the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company about fourteen or fifteen years logging, and then got a place on the Coast Fork south of Cottage Grove about seven miles. During the time that he has lived in Lane County he has become familiar with the character of the land in the vicinity where he lives. He worked for the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company east of Saginaw at a place called Bear Mountain in sections 2, 8, 3, 9, 15, 16, 17 and 21. They have a mill in section 16 now. He worked all around there in that country and up and down the flume, from there down to Saginaw, they sent him east and west and north and he looked at the timber and which way the road comes out to log and one thing and another there. He was also back a little at Fall Creek he logged there several years. He worked at Wendling five or six years and then at Deerhorn up the McKenzie River for three years on sections 21, 27, 22 and 28 in that country there. He worked in Wendling six or seven years. When he was in Bavaria he farmed. He had worked there on a farm all the time and made a living there. When he came to Oregon he bought land here and then switched over to logging, but now he is going back to farming again. He is familiar with the general character of the soil in Lane County, in these different communities and knows part of township 20, range 4 west and has land in that and then in township 19 in Saginaw and then in Wendling, he believes in 17. He was through there. In township 20, range 4 west is where he located his eighty acres. He knows out there sections 26, 28, 34 and 35, some settlers back in there. He had a little ranch first in section 25 and knows all that through there. He prefers the McKenzie country. Wendling is good soil too and it is pretty good soil really all through there. These different sections mentioned by him are in township 20 south, range 4 west. He is not acquainted with any of the lands purchased by the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company from the Railroad Company in that vicinity, that is, in township 20 south, range 4 west, but is acquainted with the railroad lands in Lane County.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. I will ask you whether, from your experience in farming, that land is valuable, or will be valuable for agricultural uses after the timber is removed?

A. Well, it will be. It will be, because I tried myself—I was in Fall Creek. I grubbed out a rod square in one place, I had a rod square, and in one place

I had 20 feet square. I dug out a place, and put a fence around it. My wife was along, and my two boys were along—wanted to get out and go wherever I went to. So we went and grubbed a piece of land, grubbed the roots out—salal brush and everything—grubbed it out in the fall, and put it in in the spring; and I had the best garden that ever a man could see anywhere. The boys, they come down from McKenzie or from Wendling, come up and said, "Well, Mike," they said, "you beat them all." And if I hadn't done it myself, I would never believe it. I had lettuce that grew up, just swift up, and radishes, and anything—turnips—anything I put in. It didn't need the water like it does down in the valley. That keeps moist up there, that soil, better than down in the valley. And then I had apples in winter, and I put them in the ground, the seed, and one year they grew that high (illustrating). The second year they grew six foot high, and I had 71 apple trees on one little space, and I know they grew. The fruit grows better up there, about 1000 feet up from the valley, than it does in the valley. It is better fruit. Its leaves are wide open green all summer, and down in the valley they curl up. And it don't need so much irrigation up at the top. Some way the soil don't dry out as quick as it does down below.

Q. Do you know whether the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company itself has used any of its land for the purpose of growing an orchard, or hay?

A. Not of orchard. But Booth-Kelly Company told me at first in Saginaw, they sent me up some seed, orchard grass and timothy, and I had to sow it, burn and sow it. Had to burn first, burn the slashing, and then sow it; and that grew fine. As well as in Wendling they told me I should sow some, and I did. And at McKenzie there is the best crop of hay anywheres, in section 21. It is three and four feet high. You couldn't see hardly at all walking in it. That is the best I ever saw anywhere. It is on the MeKenzie. Well, at Wendling, too. The grass grows good in the burn, grows fine. Of course, after it kind of runs out, you want to grub it and work it good, and it will grow again.

Q. Well, now, how does that land there compare with similar soil that you have seen cultivated in Bavaria, as to quality of the soil, and rainfall, the way the land lays—whether level or rolling, or hilly, and all other conditions?

A. This soil seems to me stronger than where I had to work and grub in the Old Country. I can raise a heavier crop, and better potatoes. I don't know why, whether it is the new land, while that is old land, farmed a thousand years or something, and here, why, it is new. But here I can raise better stuff on the same thing than I can there. I don't know why it is—whether it is because that is old, or whether it is because this is new and everything here. But I can raise better stuff here than I can there on the same condition, the same ground.

Q. Is it just as hilly over there in Bavaria as this land is here?

A. Well, some is hillier. Some is hillier, but we had to climb up and work it, though.

Q. Well, do they work land of that same kind over in the Old Country?

A. Yes, sir, we do. Yes, they do.

Q. Now, Mr. Kebelbeck, these different quarter sections of land that you know of that were purchased by Booth-Kelley Lumber Company from the railroad company, and the railroad lands that are still left and held by them in that general vicinity there where you are acquainted, I will ask you whether, in your judgment, a man could make a home on those quarter sections, and make a living for himself and his family?

A. Well, I know they can. I know they can, except I would take out some mountain pinnacles. There is a rock point up in there, and there is a mountain over there they call Oshkosh in Wendling; or there is, say, Bear Creek mountain—it comes right up steep. But outside of that, I will take any quarter section and make a good living on it.

Q. Well, now, how much land is covered by these mountain tops that you spoke of?

A. Well, those mountain tops I was speaking of, the pinnacle of it, I don't think it is more than about 160 acres.

Q. In each case?

A. In each case of that mountain what I would take out. I would not like to really tackle to farm it there.

Whereupon witness testified that he tried to buy some land from the Oregon and California Railroad Company near Cottage Grove. He left the place twelve years ago which he sold. About fourteen years ago or such a matter there was a forty back of his eighty, water he used for the house came out there, and he thought he had better buy it before anybody else bought it, so he would get the water for his house use. He applied to the Railroad Company to buy that forty and it replied that it was not for sale but that if it was, they would let him know. He wanted to get more land there, because there was a nice place on it like his, below on the flat. He wanted to extend his field further and it was good upland outside of the spring, good grazing land and some patches on it that could be grubbed out and worked and farmed. This was about fourteen years ago. Afterwards he moved to town and wanted to buy a piece of railroad land in section 35, a forty looking towards Cottage Grove but the Company would not sell it. It was not on the market they said. He is familiar with the land between Cottage Grove and his farm in section 32, township 21 south, range 3 west and with the land from there on to the divide on the west. He went over there once with his wife on a trail; that is pretty good land. He went from his place over to Brumbaugh Creek, Louis Geruh had a homestead out there. He believes that in every quarter section of the land except the mountain tops in that vicinity with which he is acquainted, a person could find about forty per cent, he could plow and there are lots of other things that could grow on the rest, without plowing. There is grazing land and it could be used for all kinds of things without plowing. He thinks it is safe to say there is about forty per cent that could be plowed, in his judgment. They plow steeper land than that in the Old Country and have a hill-side plow which plows all one way. He was at the mills of the Southern Pacific Company at Marcola but was not very far back. The Wendling mill lies further up. He went through from there to McKenzie and saw men working but he did not go out in the woods much. The land around Marcola is good, is all right. It is not very hilly what he could see from the railroad and he went back to two mills there. It was all right as far as he could see. Where they were logging it was not very steep. He is acquainted up at Saginaw a whole lot, quite a few sections. He started in on section 9, then on sections 17, 5, 3, 8, 11, 10, 16, 21 and 15. He is acquainted with those sections up there in Saginaw all around the mill and cruised the timber. He is not exactly a timber cruiser but Booth-Kelley Lumber Company sent him and the superintendent of the Company out to look at a mill site on section 16 and the superintendent required them to cruise through the timber all through that country. In addition to these sections in these different townships or around these different mills referred to, he is acquainted in a general way with that country in that general vicinity and the other land in that general vicinity is just about the same general character through there as the land that he examined particularly. He is a naturalized citizen and not interested in any of these lands in any way. His place is in section 32, township 21 south, range 3 west on the Coast Fork, which was an old donation land claim and his deed goes back to 1879 he believes. He never worked for the railroad company to speak of. When he first came to Cottage Grove he worked a few days on the section and then Japs were employed and he had to quit. This work for the railroad was when he first went in to that country twenty-three or twenty-four years ago and it was only for a few days, and with that exception he has never worked for the Oregon & California Railroad Company, nor for the Government.

Whereupon on cross-examination witness testified that he had never taken a homestead and does not think there is much left in Lane County to homestead. The bulk of the land that he has been over and examined is mostly timber land with fir and hemlock and is saw timber. The fir, hemlock and cedar is the principal stand, but the most is fir. It is good timber to buy and a good place to make an investment in timber land, and is chiefly valuable for timber. It is good timber and would be best. He is pretty well acquainted around Saginaw, which is on the railroad. The land that he knows around Saginaw is about a mile and a half or two miles east and northeast from Saginaw and is timber land. His eighty that he owned near Cottage Grove is in Section 25, township 20 south, range 4 west, near a place called West Veatch about, three miles straight west from Cottage Grove on railroad land. It was timber and was a little ash timber and he has owned it about twelve years. It was railroad land, because he had to send $93.00 to the Railroad Company when he bought, as the land was under contract at that time and he made the last payment. The Railroad Company had this contract with Hamilton Veatch. The other railroad land that he wanted to buy, was a forty just west of that. He had the north half of the northeast quarter of section 25 and he wanted to buy a forty that adjoined that on the south but did not offer the Company any price because he did not know what the price was. This was about fourteen years ago. This forty was principally timber land. A man by the name of F. F. Miller bought it from the Railroad Company and there is a house on it now. He bought it about six or eight years ago. Wendling is on a branch of the Mohawk about twenty-two miles from Eugene and the country is a little rolling. It is good timber, pretty good timber there; around Wendling there are farms here and there, where the timber comes down, but not above Wendling any more, not since they logged. There are no farms on this timber land in the timber, it is just wild timber. The land is chiefly valuable for the timber, but if it is cleared off it is good for farming too. If he had to hire the land cleared and blow out all the stumps it would cost him $75.00 an acre, maybe $50, maybe $75. The heaviest timber where the stumps are eight or ten feet through at the butt might cost him a little more. He believes he could clear that land if they would give him a contract for $75.00 and the heaviest for $100.00 an acre. The big trees on this land average from a foot and a half up to five feet. In the best timber there are some fifteen, twenty and thirty trees per acre, but he does not think there are one hundred trees on any acre. Not many of these trees are six feet through, but there are some. He has never grubbed out any stumps that large or blown them out with powder, he has grubbed out oak grubs a little but not any big trees, and there is a whole lot of roots under the ground in these lands and one could not plow it, without taking these roots out. They logged off some lands in section 21 on the McKenzie, right across from Deerhorn Postoffice, and burned the logs and seeded the land down; this hay that he spoke of was on this logged off land; there must have been 120 acres, possibly 160 of timothy and orchard grass which was used for pasturage. They did not pretend to mow the hay, the hay was growing in the stumps and there were fifteen or twenty stumps to the acre. This land was logged off by the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company, who bought the timber from another party and had a certain time in which to log it off in section 21, and that in sections 22 and 27 belonged to the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company. He has never tried to make a living on 160 acres of this timber land, but tried to make a living on his eighty, which is on a bench. Cottage Grove is one of the oldest settled portions of the Willamette Valley and the land around Cottage Grove, he understands, was taken up as donation land claims and there is a donation land claim close to the railroad section that he is in. He has been told that that donation was taken under the law of 1850—they all took it up around there at that time. He has a place on the Coast Fork close to the river of 108 acres which he bought. He does not know whether it is railroad land, but believes that it is part of a donation claim. It is on the Coast Fork of the Willamette River and is comparatively level land, about half of it is timber, what is on it, is saw timber, but there is not enough of it to sell the logs. There is just enough on it for family use for generations to come. There is about 45 acres under cultivation which he rents. It is used for raising wheat and oats and potatoes. He did not exactly cruise for Booth-Kelly Lumber Company, but that company had him run out their lines where he got the timber out and one thing and another. He first owned his eighty acres, and when he got pretty good wages from the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company he sold it and moved his family to the timber with him. He sold that eighty about twelve years ago for $750.00 and since that time he and his family had been living out in the timber at the mills of the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company, for whom he had been foreman since he left his farm, until he quit.

Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified that after the timber is taken off of these lands he could make it good plow land, a good home. The ordinary settler does not hire people to take out the stumps in clearing land, they go at it in a different way, space by space, clearing an acre a year and another acre or two or three and keep on that way—that is the way. They cannot spend $200.00 or $300.00 or $1,000 a year. It is pretty hard to start, but it is better than any other thing and a man can go out and make a living and by and by a nice living. He is not working now for the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company; he left its employ July 4th last. He is living in Cottage Grove now, where he has his home, and he believes he is going back on the place some of these days and farm—that is on his place over on the Coast Fork. If a person grubs land and grubs it down ten inches below the top that is sufficient to farm. The Booth-Kelly Lumber Company have been asked a few times to sell some of their logged off land, but as far as he understands, it is not for sale. Some one wanted to buy 80 acres and they would not sell. People cannot get hold of these lands, and cannot buy them. It is not for sale. He heard that Booth-Kelly Lumber Company did not want to be bothered with a small tract of land to sell, that is, they wanted to keep it one way or the other. It would injure them if they logged off 80 acres in front or 160 acres and some one got farther back, it would injure them to log through. They do not want to sell now or until further on. If they would sell now, supposing they would make a cattle ranch out of it as they thought at first, there would be cattle in there at Saginaw and if they would do that it would spoil their ranch. If they want cattle range, they want a great big portion of land in one piece—that has had something to do with it. He does not think they have to sell and he does not really know whether they do not want to sell isolated tracts because they would have to haul their logs across it.

Whereupon witness further testified.

Q. About how many quarter sections of this railroad land and Booth-Kelly land, of this same general kind that you have spoken of, do you know of, that in your judgment would support a family if properly farmed? About how many quarter sections do you think you know of down in that country, of the railroad land and the Booth-Kelly land, that would support a family if properly farmed?

A. Well, really, as far as I went over it, I never found anything yet that four families couldn't make a living on a section of land. I never found it yet, outside of those pinnacles there on the top of the high mountain. I went over a whole lot of sections. I went in Saginaw and in Wendling, and in Fall Creek, and I went over a good many sections of land, and I never found it yet. I was out last week from Cottage Grove, on section 1, and we found a space up there of several acres, right on the top, with a flat ash swamp on it, fine black ground. And there is what I found on section 27. I looked over some timber, wanted to buy it from Booth-Kelly, on section 27, on the left hand side. I found there was a nice swamp up there, too—leaf grass about that high (illustrating), black ground, ash, and maple, and things through it. You find most in every quarter section, you find some springs and some good land. That part, the land is all right—a person can make a living on that.

Whereupon O. J. LAWRENCE, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he lives at Zion, Lane County, Oregon, and has lived there six years; prior to that, he lived for fifteen years at Aberdeen, on Grays Harbor, Washington, and prior to that, in North Dakota, near Bismarck. He was brought up on a farm. While at Grays Harbor he was in a logging community, but he was engaged in the mercantile business. There was very little farming—just little truck patches here and there at Aberdeen. He observed the uses that could be made of logged off timber land while at Grays Harbor—saw quite a bit of it, and also has considered the subject since he has been a resident of Lane County. He is familitr with a part of the lands in Lane County. In the particular section where he lives, he was deputy assessor last year, and had to do with assessing the timber lands in certain townships, and went over them, while discharging his duties as deputy assessor. He became quite familiar with four townships while so engaged. He is familiar, in a general way, with the lands surrounding these four townships, and has hunted more or less there. The four townships to which he refers are townships 19 and 20 south, 1 west, and township 18 south, 1 east and 1 west. During this time, and in the manner mentioned, he became familiar with and assessed railroad lands in these townships. In township 20 south, 1 west, he presumes that nearly one-half are railroad lands, and very little railroad land in township 19 south, 1 west. He does not know anything about railroad lands in 18 south, 1 east. He has seen some of these lands that have been sold by the railroad company in that general vicinity. He has examined some of the lands owned by Booth-Kelly Lumber Company in these townships, that is, in 19 south, 1 west; that is, he knows they sold a section there at one time, which is a part of the old wagon road grant on the middle fork of the Willamette. His observation has extended into the so-called foothills of the Cascades there. He is familiar with the lands which have standing timber upon them, and also the logged off lands, and has made an observation as to the value of these lands for agricultural or horticultural use after being logged off.

Q. I will ask you to state whether, in your judgment, lands in the vicinity that you have described, including not only the railroad lands but the intervening even numbered sections and lands that have been sold, can be used for agricultural or horticultural purposes after the timber has been logged off?

A. They can.

Q. I will ask you to state what is your judgment as to whether a quarter section of that land is capable of maintaining a family by subjecting it to agricultural and horticultural use?

A. I think it would be very difficult to find, in that territory that I have gone over, a single quarter section that would not support a family. I know of one such quarter section, and that is the only one that I ever observed there. That is just broken rock. It has quite a bit of timber on it, but there isn't any farming land on it.

Q. What township is that in, if you remember?

A. That is in township 20 South, 1 West. It is a part of section 2.

Q. Your full name is Orange A. Lawrence, is it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon witness testified that he applied to the railroad company to purchase the northeast quarter of Section 17, township 20 south, range 1 west, of these unsold railroad lands, and he examined the land before he applied to purchase it. It is a very fine piece of land.

Q. Is that land of such a character that it could be settled upon, and improved, and cultivated so as to support a family?

A. Yes, sir, it is very fine, a very fine piece of land. It has one table-land on it of about 40 acres, that is covered with timber, of course, very good timber, but it is fine land. It would make just the finest kind of a place after the timber was removed; and it has nice running water on it, and the soil will grow anything there that a person would want to raise there—splendid grass and all kinds of berries, and plums and apples do finely on all of that land.

Q. State whether or not you applied to purchase that land intending to settle upon it and make a home of it.

A. Yes, sir, that was my intention.

Q. From your knowledge of the character of the land and its value for agricultural and horticultural use, would you be willing to take it without the timber?

A. Well, I would if I were a younger man; but, of, course, at my age I think I might trade it to my young brother, and let him work at it.

Q. But would it be valuable for a home with the timber removed?

A. I think it would.

Whereupon witness testified that he had made experiments to test the value of that land for the purpose of growing fruit, berries, and other farm products, and had some very fine fruit that he raised this year. He has never raised very many berries. They raise currants, which do very nicely. His neighbors raise all berries, and they cannot be exceeded as far as he has seen anywhere. When he first came onto the place he grubbed out six acres and set out apple and cherry trees, and a few other varieties, but of those he has seven hundred trees, apples and cherries, mostly apples, and they have all done very nicely. They commenced to bear this last year, and the quality of the fruit, he has never seen any better anywhere. They traded for a place when they went out there, and it was on that place, because he had a few acres opened up on it; and he traded some merchandise stock for this place in section 4, township 20 south, range 1 west. There are many other persons in that same township who have applied to purchase lands from the railroad company. He is one of the interveners and cross-complainants in this suit, represented by Mr. Lafferty, his attorney. The land he has applied to purchase is described in the bill of complaint as the northeast quarter of section 17, township 20 south, range 1 west. He has become acquainted, since living in that general vicinity, with other lands in a general way, outside of these four townships, and is quite familiar with the farming lands. He is twenty-five miles from Eugene, and he always drives over to the county seat, and he always compares in his mind the two classes—timber lands and farming lands, and their relative values. They raise up there—on lands that have been farmed twenty years, on high hill land, as high as five tons of hay to the acre, and he has never seen anything like that down in the valley. He refers to township 20. His neighbor raised hay that went five tons to the acre, vetch and oats. The quarter section he applied to purchase is in the same township and the same kind of land. He has given thought and study and has had experience upon the subject of removing stumps —clearing land for cultivation after it is logged off. He did that the first season he was there—employed a man and cleared six acres. If it were gone at, at the right time of the year, and in the right way, with proper appliances, the land could be cleared for $40 to $50 an acre, by the char-pitting method. It might be sometimes advisable to use a little dynamite to give the fire a chance to get under the stump, to have a stick of dynamite to make a hole with, and the fire will do all the rest of the work. A stump fired in that way improves the land very much. He felled a tree in his field there and burned the log, and at least twice as much hay grew where that log was burned—a great deal higher hay grew there than on the other land around it, and places where the stumps are burned out could be used just the same. The finest kind of grass grows there, and a tree can be set out there and it will do very nicely. If one does not burn it, the tree will very likely die, that is, if you do not use any fire there the ground seems to lack heat or something that the fire supplies, and anything grows right there.

Q. Even after these lands were logged off, and somebody else got the value of the timber, would they or would they not still be valuable for purposes of settlement, making a home, cultivation, and supporting a family?

A. I regard all of that land as having a great future. I have studied along that line quite a good deal, and I think it has a very great future. I think it will be very much more valuable for agricultural purposes, considering all the advantages that it has—plenty of good water every place pretty nearly; and the soil is fertile, and there is quite enough of it that can be plowed for to maintain a family, and the rest of it is all good grazing land, and I think it has a great future and is very valuable.

Whereupon witness testified that it would be necessary to remove the timber from this heavily timbered land before it could be used for agricultural or horticulural purposes. The trees will do very little good in timber, and it must be removed, and they must have sunshine before any real growth can be had—referring to grain, berries and fruit. Grass will grow in the timber, but will grow a good deal better where the timber is removed. Stumps don't make any difference—it grows just as well.

Whereupon on cross examination witness testified that he applied, through Mr. Lafferty, to purchase the northeast quarter of section 17, township 20 south, range 1 west. They went to the railroad office and told them that they desired to buy that particular tract of land, as he had settled on it, and made, as they regarded it, the necessary improvements, and they tendered them the money, $400, with whatever taxes might be coming to them, and tendered the gold. He did not sign any written tender prepared by Mr. Lafferty, or some timber locator, but went in person with his money, and made the tender to a person who seemed to be the head bookkeeper of the office. This was approximately three or four years ago. He had built two cabins on this land, in the woods. In building these cabins he put up a frame and split out cedar shakes, and covered them in that way. He did not hew it out of the split timber, but peeled the young trees, which makes a very nice frame. He moved into the cabin and was there until he broke his leg, when he had to quit for awhile. He lived in the cabin something like six months. His family was there occasionally. He did not sleep there all the time, just there part of the time, off and on. He had the other place he was keeping up, in section 4, about a mile from this place for which he had made application. He traded for the land in section 4, consisting of 160 acres of timber land, and paid what they called $2500 in merchandise. It had a few acres cleared and an old house on it. The land had been taken a long time before, but he does not know how it was entered, but supposes under the homestead act. He does not know whether it was a donation or not. His neighbor, David C. Matthews, told him that that part around there had been settled thirty-five years. The closest place to railroad from this place would be Goshen, seventeen miles away.

Q. How did you come to pick out this northeast quarter of section 17, Township 20 South, Range 1 West?

A. Well, I had looked around a good deal through the woods, and that is pretty level land?

Q. Well, didn't you pick it out because it had fine merchantable timber on it?

A. Well, of course, the merchantable timber would help to prepare it for a farm. I suppose that is a consideration.

Q. Now, Mr. Lawrence, don't you tell the court that the fact is you selected that quarter section because it was one of the best quarter sections of timber-land there were in that country?

A. No, sir.

Q. Isn't it, as a matter of fact, the best quarter section of timber in that neighborhood?

A. No, sir.

Q. It is about as good as any, isn't it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, why didn't you pick out one that was better?

A. This one was right handy, and it is good farming land.

Q. But it was good timber, wasn't it?

A. Very good.

Q. Did you have a cruise on it?

A. No, sir, never had a cruise.

Q. Did you know what the county's cruise on it was?

A. No, sir.

Q. What is the county's cruise on that quarter section?

A. They never gave me time to cruise it, but they said to go over it and report in a general way about what it was worth.

Q. How many thousand feet, board measure, per acre is there on that quarter section?

A. Oh, I would have to approximate that.

Q. Well, approximate it?

A. Well, there is forty or fifty thousand.

Q. Per acre?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, that would make it a good valuable quarter section of timber-land, wouldn't it?

A. Very good.

Q. What is it actually worth today as timber-land?

A. Well, I am offered claims that adjoin it for $3,000 a quarter.

Q. It was actually worth $3,000 for the timber that was on it when you applied to purchase it, wasn't it?

A. That would be my judgment, although we didn't have to pay so much as that.

Q. Didn't you really select that, Mr. Lawrence, because it was good timber-land?

A. Well, if there had been just that land there, and one that had no timber on it with equal soil, of course, I would have taken the farm land.

Q. Yes, I know, but it was covered with timber. You took it primarily for the timber, didn't you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You never expected to clear that land yourself, did you?

A. Well, I expected to hire it cleared.

Q. How old are you?

A. 54 years old.

Q. And did you expect to go there, and take your family, and clear an acre a year, and make a living?

A. Oh, no, I didn't have to do that.

Q. Now, isn't it actually the fact that you applied to purchase that because it was valuable for timber now —right now?

A. No. If it hadn't been valuable for farming land, I should not have been interested in it.

Q. Well, wouldn't you have paid $2.50 an acre for it for the timber that was on it, and never expect to live on it?

A. Oh, yes, I would at that time.

Q. Yes, and wouldn't you have been glad, and thought you had made about $2600, if you could have got it?

A. I certainly would have been glad, because I could have sold it for more than that.

Q. More than $2600?

A. More than $2.50 an acre.

Q. Well, you know that it was worth at that time $3,000 for the timber that was on it, don't you?

A. Well, I don't know about that. They were buying timber at $1600.

Q. I understand; but you don't want the court to understand that you wanted that for a home for yourself at once?

A. That is what I wanted it for. That is, I might not always want to live there, but I thought it was capable of making a great property.

Q. Yes.

A. And I had means so that I could hire the development done, and if I didn't live there all the time, I could have a place, a beautiful place, to go when I wanted to.

Q. You were advised by Mr. Lafferty that it was necessary for you to go out there and build your cabin, and live there awhile?

A. No, we did all that before we ever knew about Mr. Lafferty.

Q. Who advised you to do that?

A. Why, I advised my neighbors that we had better all do it.

Q. What was the idea?

A. Well, that is what the law required, as I understood it.

Q. You had to make some kind of a settlement?

A. Yes.

Q. How long were you going to keep that settlement up?

A. Well, we hadn't decided on that point.

Q. Just so you made a settlement of five or six months—then you expected to go away and leave it?

A. Oh, no. We hoped that we would receive such encouragement as would lead us to make all the improvements that the land ought to have.

Q. How long since you lived in your house that is on there—that cabin?

A. Oh, I haven't lived there steadily since I broke my leg. That is two years ago.

Q. Have you lived there at all since that time?

A. I have been there, and stayed there.

Q. How many nights have you stayed there?

A. I don't remember.

Q. As a matter of fact, Mr. Lawrence, you have not been there within two years and stayed over night on that place, have you?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. One night?

A. I have been more than one night.

Q. Did you sleep in the cabin?

A. Yes.

Q. What have you got in the cabin that you slept on?

A. I have got a bed.

Q. A bedstead?

A. Certainly. Spring bedstead, mattress.

Q. Did your wife go there and stay with you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You would just go and stay by yourself?

A. Well, my girl was there awhile—we stayed.

Q. How long—two or three nights?

A. We didn't stay very long.

Q. How much did you have cleared there around that cabin?

A. I had very little.

Q. What did you plant on that land, if anything?

A. I planted some garden stuff.

Q. What was it?

A. Radishes and onions, and planted some trees.

Q. What became of the trees? Are they growing yet?

A. They are growing yet today.

Q. You didn't put out any fire though, to plant them in, did you?

A. Well, I burned a little around there.

Q. You had to burn this soil before it would support a tree, didn't you?

A. Well, they didn't do very good, because I didn't have fire enough—I hadn't burned enough to make it do good.

Q. And the tree didn't really do any good, did it?

A. The trees have not done very well, because they have not had sunshine enough.

Q. Now, your onions and lettuce, and stuff of that kind—just a little of that, wasn't there?

A. Yes, there wasn't very much.

Q. Just about like they would do on these homesteads, where they take them out in the mountains for the timber that is on them?

A. Something like that.

Q. Now, this soil that you speak of being such fine soil—it has to be burned over once so as to give life to it, doesn't it?

A. Well, I don't know about that. Of course, if you remove the timber it gets the sunshine, and the sunshine will produce vegetation.

Q. I understood you to say in your direct examination, that this land would not produce, would not support a tree—I mean an apple tree or a domestic tree, a fruit-growing tree—until after it was burned over?

A. Well, that, I referred particularly to where the tree stands. That ground under the tree is packed hard, and nothing else does well on that place, that particular place where the tree stands, until it had either sunshine or fire.

Whereupon witness testified that he had lived in the vicinity of these lands a little over six years, and these lands are considered pretty heavily timbered as compared with the other lands in Lane County. These lands have never been cruised by the county. He got the amount of timber on these quarter sections for the purposes of assessment when he went over them. He is a pretty good judge of timber—and has been buying and selling it for fifteen years. He made no segregation of the character of the land as to being agricultural, timber, or otherwise, but just estimated the value of the property. One would have to consider the land as well as the amount of timber, and he did put a value on that land for its agricultural purposes, but did not segregate the two values, but had them in mind, that is, its agricultural possibilities and its timber. He never assessed logged off lands, and does not know that the timber was the principal element upon which the county was assessing the property.

Q. Now, you say that these logged off lands, you think, could be cleared for $50 an acre?

A. $50 an acre?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, sir, I am hiring it cleared today for $40.

Q. What kind of land?

A. Heavy timbered land.

Q. Where is it?

A. Section 4.

Q. How many thousand feet of timber did that land carry before it was logged off?

A. Oh, it will carry 50,000 to the acre.

Q. And do you take the stumps out?

A. Everything has to be taken out ready for the plow, and fenced, at $40 an acre.

Q. How deep do you take the roots out?

A. Well, down so the plow won't hit them—about eight or ten inches.

Q. Well, then, when Mr. Booth testified that these lands would cost from $50 to $500 an acre to clear, your judgment differs from his?

A. I don't think he was well informed.

Q. You know Mr. Booth, don't you?

A. No, sir.

Q. R. A. Booth, of Booth-Kelly Lumber Company?

A. I have heard of him. I don't know him.

Q. These other people that you say have made applications to purchase in this same township, who are they?

A. Well, there is R. G. Balderee, and Lake, and there were two or three Smiths, and Mr. J. F. Holbrook.

Q. All in timbered land?

A. Yes, it is all more or less timbered.

Q. And they are all intervenors in this suit, all of you represented by Mr. Lafferty?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And all made your applications to purchase, and offered $2.50 an acre, in the same way?

A. So far as I know, that was the way it was done.

Q. And all made little shacks on the place out there, and made a pretense of living in them for a while?

A. Oh, they lived—I know they lived very continuously on that land for a long time, some of them did.

Q. Are they still living there?

A. Oh, no, of course, they had to go out where they could school their children.

Q. Had to go out where they could make a living, hadn't they?

A. Oh, they could have made a living there—they have been.

Q. What can they do to make a living there? Just tell us.

A. They can raise cattle and sheep, and they can raise fruit, and it has been done there for thirty-five years, and they are still living there.

Q. Do you mean to tell this court a man could raise cattle and sheep on 160 acres of this timber-land, and confine it to that, and not pasture outside?

A. That is what I am doing now.

Q. And make a living.

A. That is what I am doing.

Q. On 160 acres of this land?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before the timber is removed?

A. Yes, sir. Plenty of pasture in the woods.

Q. How many head of cattle can you pasture on 160 acres of timber-land.

A. You can keep 20 to 30 head very nicely.

Q. Where would you get your hay to feed them in the winter-time?

A. You don't need very much.

Q. Where would you get what you would need?

A. You can always find little places that you could raise all the hay you would require for your milk cows, and the others do just as well if they are not fed.

Q. Do you mean to say to the court that a man could take 160 acres of this timber-land, fence it, and have twenty or thirty head of milk cows on that 160 acres, make a living in that way, and that they would be supported on this place?

A. I wouldn't say all milk cows, but I say twenty or thirty head of cattle. Let there be milk cows enough for the family, and the young cattle get along very nicely. The milk cows would need some roots, or something like that, to do much good.

Q. Yes. You haven't done anything of that kind with this 160 acres that you applied to purchase, have you?

A. Why, my cattle run on it a good deal.

Q. It is unfenced, isn't it?

A. No, sir, it is not fenced.

Q. That is what I mean. They rove over the whole country there, don't they?

A. Well, yes, they go where they please.

Q. They live on pea-vine, and whatever there is growing there in these mountains?

A. Lots of pea-vine and grass. There is just lots of all kinds of good food.

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.

Q. When you made your application to purchase this land from the railroad company, did you receive any encouragement of any kind from the railroad company?

A. We didn't—I didn't receive any particular encouragement, unless—I don't know—not any verbal encouragement. Of course, I observed their doings a good deal, and kind of figured on my chances and so on, but I don't think they gave me very much encouragement.

Q. Did you ever receive any notice of any kind from them after making your application to purchase?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know, or did you not know that the railroad company denied your right to purchase the land in that manner?

A. I don't know whether they objected to it or not. They didn't do it anyway.

Q. Well, now, if they had accpted your application and sold you the land, and conveyed it to you, could you have sold the timber and cleared the land, and subjected it to cultivation?

A. Why, most certainly.

Q. Well, then, when Mr. Fenton asked you what you could do with that land with the timber on, I will ask you what you could do with it if the land was conveyed to you and you had the right to remove the timber? Would that make any difference?

A. Indeed it would.

Q. How about the even numbered sections in that township 20 South, Range 1 West? Are there any settlements on them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How old are they?

A. Thirty years—twenty or thirty years.

Q. People living there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With their families?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What are they doing?

A. They are raising hay and stock and fruit, and making very comfortable livings.

Q. Any reason that you know of why the same thing could not be done on the adjoining odd sections, held by the railroad company?

A. I see the land all just the same. Now, up in section 32 it is very high—section 32, Township 20 South, Range 1 West, is a very high point of land—and a German family by the name of Kloster went there something like thirty-five years ago. It was all heavy timber, and they settled up on that high land. There is a nice little bench up there—it is rolling—and they lived there until a year or two ago. The hill was so high that—the lady is a cripple, and she didn't like to walk up and down the hill; but you can see all of that Lost Creek River basin from there—you can get just as nice a view as you can from some of those high peaks; and they have always raised the finest fruit up there, the quality is unsurpassed any place I have ever examined it; and the hay this year, they raised three or four tons to the acre. I was through it in June—it is a very rank growth. And it is clay soil, and just like all of the hill land around there.

Q. From your knowledge of that general country in there, Mr. Lawrence, I will ask you whether, in your judgment, the best way of developing that country is to sell it in large blocks to large timber companies, and use it simply for the taking off of trees, and then when the trees are removed to reforest it, and permanently withhold it from cultivation? I will ask you whether that is the best use that can be made of that land, having in mind the development and settlement of the country, from your knowledge of the general nature of the soil, and all of the conditions that enter into the question?

A. Why, from what I know of the country and its possibilities, from what I have seen done there, I know that, in my judgment, the best way would be to let people have it that will make homes of it and develop it; and some of the very most beautiful homes in Lane County will be up in that part of the country. I have been of that mind for quite a good many years, and have told my neighbors that.

Q. Now, did the refusal of the company to sell this land and convey it to you in any way influence your action in making further improvements upon the land?

A. No, sir. I just kept up the improvements just the same. I hoped that they would change their mind or something; if they had it under consideration, that they would finally give us the land.

Q. Well, suppose that the railroad company had accepted your application and sold you the land, and conveyed it to you at the time you applied to purchase it, what would you have done with the land?

A. Well, I had it in my mind to make a beautiful place of it, a valuable place, as all of those places can be made valuable, and the timber there would help to do that; it would clear the land, probably, and make it quite easy to make a fine place.

Q. Well, why didn't you do that?

A. Why, I didn't understand that we would be allowed to cut very much of the timber. I understand that they had been stopped from doing that. In fact, one of the gentlemen that took one of these claims was ordered to get off the land by the railroad's attorney; and they sent a man up there to see what he had actually cut off; and we didn't want to go too far. We thought we showed good intention by doing what we did. And the trail—to get a good road into those claims, some of them, is a matter of quite a good deal of work; and I have got a road that you can go over with an automobile to my cabin. Perhaps I would have to remove a few trees—they are always falling across the trail; we would have to get them out every month or two. With that exception, you could go right today to my cabin with an automobile.

Q. I will ask you whether, in your judgment, these lands would have been settled, cleared, improved, and reduced to cultivation, and made homes of, if the railroad company had sold them to settlers who applied to purchase them?

Mr. Fenton: Defendants object to that as something the witness could not possibly know, and as a mere surmise on his part.

A. Well, I have lived in seventeen states—I have lived in North Dakota, and I have seen what people had to do there to make a living, and the disadvantages they have to contend with; and when I think of that, and places where people do live and get along, I think that they certainly would be very well off if they could have a chance to make homes in there, and they would appreciate it so much that it would be taken up in a day, if it were known, that land for the purpose of making homes.

RE-CROSS EXAMINATION.

Q. Mr. Lawrence, I show you two photographs, "Defendants' Exhibit 270," purporting to show a photograph of your cabin on the northeast quarter of section 17, Township 20 South, Range 1 West, looking north, and a like photograph looking northeast, and will ask you to state whether those are fairly good protographs of those cabins as they were on the 15th day of May, 1908, four years ago?

A. Is this representing the same cabin?

Q. Yes, same cabin, different view.

A. That is a fairly good view. That is my best cabin. I have got one that ain't quite so good as that.

Q. On the same place?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the idea of building two cabins?

A. Well, the other one is built on the best land, but I had to go across a big gulch to get there, and I didn't take time to make a road to get across there.

Q. How far away from this cabin?

A. It is more than a quarter of a mile.

Q. Did you furnish both cabins in the way that you speak of having furnished?

A. Well, I furnished the other one, and then I removed the contents over to this one.

Q. There is where you intended to make your home, in this cabin?

A. Yes, sir, this is where I intended to make a home for awhile, anyway.

Q. Do you see any place there where an automobile could travel in front of that cabin, or around there, to get to that?

A. Well, here is a little kind of bad hill there; but right up on top of that hill there is a good road. Of course, it would be a little difficult right in here for a hundred yards.

Q. You notice that picture shows some fine timber just behind the cabin, doesn't it?

A. No, it is poor timber.

Q. I mean it is heavily timbered?

A. Oh, it is a lot of brush there.

Q. Did you locate that on this good agricultural land that you speak of? Is that the place?

A. No, I just built that cabin there for convenience, but the other cabin was located on the choice land.

Q. Well, how did you come to put this over there? There is where you wanted your garden, and your settlement, and your improvements?

A. Well, there is a good place right behind there, that could be easily cleared out there—that brush there.

Q. How far back?

A. There is five or six acres there that could be nicely cleared out, and make a nice little place for fruit.

Q. Where did you plant your tree and your onions?

A. Over where the other cabin was.

Q. You didn't plant any here, did you?

A. I planted a little garden there, but it didn't do much.

Q. I wish you would take a pencil, and mark out with a cross there where you made your garden, on this photograph.

A. You can't see it here.

Q. As a matter of fact, you cannot see that human hand has ever stuck a spade or a hoe or anything else in the ground there, can you?

A. Well, you might not be able to see it, but I can see where I have dug ground.

Q. Just put a cross there where you have dug around for garden purposes.

A. I have dug around here in front of the house, down below here. You cannot see it, but it is down below this pitch here.

Q. Just mark out in front of the house where you have attempted to make any garden.

A. There is a little place right in there. You cannot see it on this picture.

Q. In front of the house.

A. Yes, there is a place burned off there.

Q. How big a space is it?

A. It is not large, but I just had a little garden there.

Q. Was it as much as a foot square?

A. Oh, it was half as big as this room.

Q. You say there was a space in front of that cabin half as big as this room, which is about 20x30 feet, where you planted any garden in front of that cabin?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you plant it? What year?

A. Now, I wouldn't be certain about that. I think it was the first year I took it.

Q. What year was that?

A. Three or four years ago.

Q. Wasn't it in May, 1908, that you made your application to purchase?

A. I wouldn't be certain without referring to the papers.

Mr. Townsend: The complaint shows the suit was filed April 7, 1908.

Q. You filed your suit immediately after you made your application to purchase, didn't you?

A. I believe it was filed soon after.

Q. Yes, and you built your cabin just before you filed your suit?

A. Quite a little bit before.

Q. Well, six weeks before?

A. Something like that.

Q. And you had made your garden just before?

A. Oh, I don't know. I think the garden was made later than that. We had to do quite a bit of burning there to expect to receive any returns on our labors.

Q. Why did you have to burn?

A. Why, it is all brush. You try to open up that land, and you will have more brush covering the ground. You have got to get rid of that brush.

Q. What is the elevation of this place where this garden is?

A. Well, now, I would have to guess at that. I would say it was a thousand feet above the level of the sea.

Q. What is the nearest stream?

A. There is a little creek down there a couple of hundred yards, or a hundred yards from the cabin. Lost Creek is the nearest logging stream.

Q. How far away is that?

A. It is a little over a mile.

Q. Can you log from these premises to this creek?

A. Why, yes, the grade is very favorable for logging.

Q. And you took that into consideration when you took this land, did you?

A. Oh, that was all talked up to me when they sold me the land.

Q. Who sold you the land?

A. Mr. William Whitney.

Q. Who is William Whitney?

A. He is the gentleman that lived on the place.

Q. Well, I mean this quarter section—this railroad land?

A. Oh, I thought you meant the other.

Q. No, this railroad quarter section is favorable so it could be logged to Lost Creek?

A. That whole tract in there is quite favorable for logging.

Q. You considered that when you made the selection of this quarter section, didn't you?

A. No, I never thought of it.

Q. Didn't enter your mind at all?

A. No, I don't know that it did in particular.

Q. Well, did it in general?

A. Oh, if I thought about it at all, I would have thought that whole country there, that the whole basin is quite favorably located for logging.

Q. And you knew that when you made your application to purchase?

A. Well, if I had thought about it, of course I would have known it.

Q. Didn't you think about it?

A. Never gave it any particular consideration. I wasn't thinking about that.

Q. You were not thinking about the timber on this land at all?

A. Oh, that was a valuable asset to clear the land, to make it a home. Of course, I would have to think about it.

Q. You thought about it a good deal, didn't you?

A. Well, I thought about it some.

Q. Just name the seventeen states that you have lived in, Mr. Lawrence.

A. I was born in New York state. My people moved to Wisconsin, and lived in North Dakota, lived in Ohio, and we lived in Indiana. I didn't live very long in some of those places. I peddled, and when I peddled I lived in the states when I was in them. I have not had a home in seventeen states, but I have been in that many in that way.

Q. I understood you to say, in answer to counsel's question, you had lived in seventeen states?

A. I meant by going through the states, I had.

Q. You had a home in eight or ten, hadn't you?

A. I have had a home in New York, Wisconsin, North Dakota, Minnesota, Montana, Washington and Oregon.

Q. And have you followed the mercantile business all that time?

A. No, sir, I used to teach school, used to peddle, kept books; did a little of everything.

Q. What have you been doing in Lane County the last six years?

A. Farming.

Q. On this piece of land in section 4?

A. Farming and buying and selling timber.

Q. I mean this section 4?

A. Oh, I improve all of that property as fast as I can.

Whereupon witness testified that he had been buying and selling timber in Lane County in a small way—didn't have much means. He bought a section of Booth-Kelly Lumber Company, part of it was timber, in section 25, township 11, range 1 west, which he has yet. It is not logged off, and part of it is pretty good timber, and it is in logging territory. He paid $4000.00 for it—does not know why the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company sold it. It is good saw timber. One-half of the section has been burned off. What timber there is, is good saw timber. He did not buy the land for the timber, but thought about its farming possibilities whenever he would go over it. It is very fine. The timbered half of it would have a stand of 50,000 feet to the acre. He offered it for $1.50 per thousand, but could not find any buyers. He had an offer of a dollar, which would make $50 an acre. He paid $4,000 for the section, and was offered $1.00 a thousand for the timber land, which would go 50,000 feet to the acre, and he wanted $1.50 per thousand. It could be logged off. He had another claim there and was offered $20,000 for the 800 acres, but he does not know what purpose the gentleman had in mind. That half section that he said was burned off is right up on the top of a high mountain, very precipitous, and there is a man by the name of Tom Malloy who lived up there close to Zion, who had a beautiful place, but no road to get to it, but could raise all kinds of stuff there. The whole half section owned by witness there, which is burned over, is the same kind Malloy left his premises and went where it would not be so hard to get in and out. Malloy could make a good living, but if he raised anything there he could not get it out very well, and would not have any market for it. He could not haul it out very well; he could have fixed the grade all right, but his sister gave him a place on Fall Creek and it was an easier problem for him.

Whereupon on redirect examination, witness testified he bought this section from Booth-Kelly Lumber Company three or four years ago and they gave him a deed, which is recorded. This land is in section 25, township 19 south, range 1 west, and $10.00 is the consideration named in the deed. He did not buy this all for himself, and he does not own it all himself. He told an Eastern friend of his about the matter and that he thought it would be a good thing for them to buy it together, and his friend said to go ahead, if his judgment approved, and have it cruised. He had it cruised and it did not come quite up to his expectations. His judgment was that it was a good buy and he bought it. He has never seen the land, although he and his friend own it together today. He also bought 160 acres in section 24 adjoining this, making 800 acres altogether, for which 800 acres he was offered $20,000 two or three years ago, in a lump sum, and when he says that he was offered $1.00 a thousand, he means it figured out about $1.00 a thousand. When he said he wanted $1.50 a thousand, he told the party he wanted $30,000 for the tract.

Q. Now, have you understood that the railroad company would prevent the persons who applied to purchase this land, and, for instance your own quarter section in the northeast quarter of section 17, Township 20 South, Range 1 West—would permit you to reduce it to cultivation and remove the timber for that purpose?

A. No, sir, I did not. I certainly thought they would not do it. I thought we would get into trouble, and we had some talk among ourselves about that.

Q. Well, then, does what you have done with reference to that land truthfully represent what you could and would do if the railroad company would convey the land to you, and permit you to subject it to the use to which it is susceptible?

A. Well, of course, there would be an element of risk there, that I would take in going on, and I didn't feel like doing it. I thought I had done enough to show my good intention. If I could get the land, why, I would do all that was required, and make what I thought I could make out of it. I think those places would be worth five times as much when the timber is off, and they are in such a state as they can be put in; and I have investigated this land business quite a bit, and figured on its possibilities, and what they do over in the Walla Walla country with their lands there, and considered the altitude, and what it was capable of raising. I think that some of those townships there that we have been talking about, particularly Township 20 South, Range 1 West, has got possibilities that are equal to anything that Walla Walla has got for raising wheat for fall sowing. It does not do good for spring sowing; but fall sowing, it is excellent for rye, or wheat, or oats; and part of it is at such an elevation that the snows protect it in winter, and I believe that it will be just a wonderful place.

Whereupon on recross examination witness testified that he has seen the wheat, rye or barley growing on some of these timber lands there. His neighbors have raised them, just little patches here and there of this wheat, oats and rye. They have raised quite a bit of it, something like two or three acres on a place. That was on a piece of ground that was very heavily timbered at one time, but cleared off by some of these people. It grows better on the hills, on the rough lands. These spots are right on the hills. All the land of that German family he mentioned, is of that kind, is apple land and will raise hay and anything there. There is about twenty acres of hay on this German place, right on top of the hill, formerly very heavily timbered—the same as he has. They burned the timber up and did not sell it. The German family have lived there twenty-five years—raised a large family. He thinks they must have taken the land as a homestead in section 32. He does not know whether it was a homestead or donation. They only tried to clear about forty acres of the 160 that they own. They cleared that forty acres more or less perfectly, and have been about twenty to twenty-five years in clearing the same. There is a man and his wife and six children, who have no trouble to get a living. They raised the stuff on the ground there and have cows and sheep. They did not dare to let their stock go too far over the country. They kept sheep and it was really dangerous to let them go very far on account of cougars, so they confined them to quite a close range to their place, but the cattle went further out, quite a ways. The whole country around there was open and they had access to that range for four or five miles in every direction, but they did not need it for their cattle, and their sheep were kept closer at home under surveillance, and he presumes they went over the land near by. They had twenty or thirty head of sheep, something like that, and sometimes ten or fifteen or twenty head of cattle, and two or three head of horses. He does not think they marketed any produce anywhere. They could have sold butter and milk, but he does not know whether they did or not. They did not sell any cream that he knows of, but they may have done so. Their nearest neighbor before he went in there, was about a mile, and the nearest school house more than a mile, and their nearest post office a mile to a mile and a half, called Zion Post Office, established before he came there, but since has been moved.

Whereupon on redirect examination, witness testified that this land of the German family spoken of, is in the southeast quarter of section 32 township 20 south, range 1 west, but they have sold all but forty acres of it for timber land to Hyland Brothers.

Whereupon on recross examination witness testified that Hyland Brothers have a saw mill, but he does not know how extensively they manufacture. They own 800 acres of timber land on Lost Creek, and 160 on the Willamette, and have quite a lot over on Fall Creek—he don't know how much.

Whereupon JAMES WHITFORD, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he is eighty-three years old; by occupation a timber cruiser; resides at Cottage Grove, and is employed by the Star Lumber Company. He has worked for the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company, and lived in Oregon ten years last spring. He has been in Lane County, and from Columbia County through to Josephine County. He has cruised mostly in Lane County, back and forth, and been engaged in the timber business pretty much all this time. He has never done any farming in this country.

Q. Have you been in farming communities, and are you acquainted with the character of soil of the land that is used for agricultural purposes?

A. Well, I have seen a good deal of land here in the mountains and in different places. It look very fine. I have seen very fine growth—stuff growing.

Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, witness testified that he has looked over the lands on the Coast Fork, some of them pretty closely, and has been on the McKenzie and on Fall Creek. Parties would write to him from Minnesota to look at the lands and he would go and look at them; these lands he refers to were in Lane County. There is no difference between the even and odd sections. As a general thing one is equal to the other, as far as he can see. He has been over township 20 south, 1 and 2 west; 22—3; 23—2 and 3 west, and has a claim in 23—3 west, in section 2. He has been over these lands some. He does not think there is a section there that he has not been over, railroad and all. The land is about the same every place he has been in Oregon. Some places are more broken. Down in Coos it is more broken country, and in the Coast Range it is more broken. He has a general knowledge of these lands in the western part of Lane County, and also of the lands in the eastern part of Lane County. He has been on the McKenzie, but has a more specific knowledge of these lands that he has described by township and range, and was over these lands and the timber for the purpose of making a cruise of the lands. In making a cruise he has always noted the character of the soil, as to its agricultural uses, and made a statement whether it was good land or rocky, whatever it was. That was a part of his duties. Take the lands in these townships right through, as a general thing it would go fifty per cent farm land, if they were cleared and improved. Of course, there are hills, to be sure, but then they could all be worked. The remainder of the land when it approaches the river, that is the high knolls, where the rocks make an appearance, is grazing; but grass grows on it. That is, the remainder of the fifty per cent would be grazing, in his opinion. He applied to purchase lands from the Railroad Company about five years ago, and wanted to get a quarter section in section 15, township 22, range 3 west, in Lane County, and they said it was not on the market. The percentage mentioned by him would run generally as to all of these lands about which he has testified. He cannot see much difference. One can see where they have settled on the even sections. It is all the same. They have settled on section four and on section two in that township, and there are settlers intermingled on the even sections. He does not think there is any vacant land in that township but what is taken.

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified that part of this railroad land that he applied for, was very good timber. There was a nice bottom and flat right there on Wilson Creek, which came down through it. The timber that could be logged on it was about three miles from the river, and they can log that distance, but there was about forty acres of it upon which there was no timber at all scarcely—it was vine maple, and kind of a flat. He cruised this quarter section and called it 4,000,000 feet. That would be a good merchantable quarter section as timber land. It was better than that. He did not make any offer for the land, but only made an application for it, and they reported that it was not on the market. He did not want to buy it for the timber that was on it—he was going to settle on it. He tried to get a homestead on it one time, but could not get it as a homestead. The reason he did not pick out a quarter section that was all open instead of one that had timber on it, was that he could not get it in his time. All that was open, was taken. Most of the land with which he is acquainted is most all fair timber land. Some of it is better than others. He has never sold any timber, but has been a cruiser of timber lands; cruised for Charles Ladd of Portland, out in North Yamhill, and cruised there for the Carlton Lumber Company above Fairchild's old saw mill, and found some very fine timber up there. George Perkins had a saw mill there, but it is not running now—that mill is all sold out, but he owns a lot more timber in there. The timber land in that section is the best in Oregon. It is fine land after one gets the timber off, but it is now chiefly valuable for its timber. That is the reason he bought some; he bought a lot for Ladd & Tilton, because people could not do anything with it until they got the timber off. The only way to get anything out of it is to cut the timber off. He is now employed by the Star Lumber Company, doing anything that comes along—has been cruising a little. That company has not much timber land. It is in Lane County, in 21-1. He has not done any work for any of these large timber investors in Lane County. He is a man of family, but his family lives in Minnesota; they are all married off. The timber land of the Carlton Lumber Company on the head waters of the North Fork of the Yamhill River is fine timber—fir and larch, a good deal of it larch, which is called Noble fir. He guesses that the timber lands of Western Oregon, west of the Cascade Mountains, particularly on the western slope of the Cascade Mountains and on the eastern slope of the Coast Range and the western slope of the Coast Range, including Coos, Yamhill, Tillamook, Lane and Douglas Counties, have the finest fir forests anywhere in the country, and that section is known throughout the United States as a timber country. He does not know as it is known altogether as that. They have some good valleys that there is no timber on. Men that were taking timber claims would have him go and look and see if there was any burn, see if they were all right. He does not know of any movement of Minnesota and Wisconsin people in these Oregon lands lately. They have taken timber claims, a good many of them in the timber.

Q. You speak about these settlements on the even sections—most of these settlements are in these timbered lands, aren't they?

A. Yes; but they were mostly settled years ago. One-half of them settled on homesteads.

Q. Most of those were settled by homesteads years ago?

A. Yes.

Q. The cabins have rotted down?

A. No, by gosh, some of them are living on them and making improvements.

Q. I know; but most of them have rotted down?

A. There is lots of them living on them, making a living.

Q. Did you ever see any abandoned claims in there that the timber people have bought up?

A. I have seen timber-claims abandoned, but not very many homesteads.

Q. You have seen some homesteads that the cabins were abandoned, haven't you?

A. Not but very few.

Q. In the timber districts?

A. I have seen a few over on North Yamhill abandoned.

Q. Did you see some in Western Lane County in the Coast Range?

A. No.

Q. See any in Coos?

A. I have been in Coos and been on the Siuslaw and Smith River. I have seen men that lived there for 12 or 14 years on timber claims.

Q. Most of these people that have settlements are on little creeks, are they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have a little open land, or little bottom land along the creeks?

A. Well, generally; but lots of it is up on the hills; lots of them right up on the hills.

Whereupon witness testified that the Carlton Lumber Company had about 1600 acres which he estimated as containing 650,000,000 feet; that was a good buying estimate, but it was not a good fair selling estimate. If it was estimated again it would go over that. He cruised it for the buyer and it was proper to cruise it as low as he could conscientiously.

Whereupon N. H. MARTIN, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn testified, that he is forty-seven years old, resides at Cottage Grove and has lived in Oregon practically all his life. He was raised on a farm up to about seventeen years ago. The main part of his life was spent on a farm five miles west of Cottage Grove in Lane County and he is familiar with the farming conditions in Lane County and other parts of Oregon and on the western slope and west of the Cascade Mountains. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259" his actual work in estimating timber has been in Marion, Linn, Lane, Douglas, Josephine and Curry Counties. There is where most of his work has been. He has traveled over other counties on the western slope in a general way but his timber estimating has been in those counties. He has cruised timber in township 8 south, range 1 east, the head waters of Little North Santiam. His work was also in township 8 south, range 4 east right next to the Reserve on the waters of the Little Fork or north tributaries of the Little North Fork of the Santiam. His work in Lane County has been on the Mohawk, McKenzie River, Willamette and the West Coast Fork, tributaries of the Willamette, Row River, Brumbaugh River and the Coast Fork of the Willamette. His work was scattered over these townships in 19 south, to about 6 west, meaning all the townships in 19 south, 1 west, to range 6 west, inclusive. He has not done actual estimating in all the townships but has traveled over them. He has estimated in township 19, Ranges 1, 2, 3 and 4 West, but has never done any estimating in range 5 and 6 west, but has been over 5 and 6 enough to familiarize himself with the soil and the general conditions of land in those townships. He has had the same experience as in township 19, in townships 20, 21, 22 and as far south as township 26 south to about range 6 west. In 20 south he has been as far over as 10 west, right over on the coast, 8 and 10 west and he has been in practically all of the townships south of that up to 26 south, 5 and 6 west, except 26. He has only been in 2 and 3 west in 26 south and that is as far west as he had been in that township, that is in 2 and 3 west in 26 south, that is he has been in all of the townships from 20 south to 25 south inclusive, ranges 1 to 6 west inclusive, excepting that he expects in township 20 there are ranges 7 and 8 and possibly 6 that his travels have been very limited in and he would not undertake to say that he was familiar with 20 south, ranges 6, 7 and 8 west, but has a very good knowledge of ranges 9 and 10 west. His travels in township 21 were up to range 6 west but no farther. In 22 south the same and in 23, 24 and 25 about the same and also in 26 ranges 1 and 2 west, and he has been in 20 south ranges 9 and 10 west, that is the only two townships west of 6 that he has had any experience in worth mentioning. He is acquainted in a general way with the lands in townships 20 to 26 south, ranges 7 and 8 west, but not by actual work. He has traveled through some of the country sufficiently to acquaint himself with the general characteristics of the country as to soil and timber growth and its formation. He has traveled along the Siuslaw River from the head to its mouth and on the divide between the Siuslaw and Smith River and some north of the Siuslaw on the divide and he has been in township 20 ranges 7 and 8 west and has traveled the full length practically of the two Umpqua Rivers, the south and the north fork and on the divide between the south and the north fork of the South Umpqua River. He believes the territory that he has gone over does not cover any township south of 26, as near as he can locate it from "Defendants' Exhibit 259." He has not covered any territory south of township 27 south excepting right along the railroad. He has of course traveled on the railroad and on the west fork of Cow Creek and he has been in township 31 south ranges 7 and 8 west and has done some cruising in 31 south 8 west and he has been through the township sufficiently to familiarize himself with the lands in that township and his travels farther south than that have not extended very far from the railroad. The lands just mentioned are those he cruised in Josephine County. The lands on the Santiam that he cruised were in Marion County on the Little North Fork of the Santiam. The lands that he cruised in that territory would run 30 to 40 per cent agricultural land. The other land that he traveled through going and coming to his work was about the same, as near as he could tell.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. State as to whether or not, Mr. Martin, a sufficient amount of tillable land existed on each 160-acre tract, described as I have mentioned, that would be sufficient to maintain a man and his family, if he should settle on this land.

A. There is very few quarter sections in that locality but what would support a family.

Q. Now, in the Douglas County lands, in 19 and 26 South, in the ranges that you have mentioned in your testimony that you were acquainted with, what, if any, material difference exists in those lands? That is, are they of the same general character?

A. The character of the land is better in that range than the other, for the simple reason that the climatic conditions are better. It is in a lower altitude. The ground is more of a red soil, but lower altitude; and, with the exception of a few steep hills and small rocky points, it is better on an average than the Little North Fork locality.

Mr. Fenton: Little North Fork of the Santiam, you mean?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do those same general soil conditions exist, and-climatic conditions exist, as to all the lands that you have mentioned in Douglas County, that you are acquainted with?

A. Practically the same in Lane and Douglas.

Q. What percentage of 160-acre tracts, described in 40-acre subdivisions contiguous, would be susceptible to settlement and the support of a family, of the lands that you have mentioned in Douglas County, in your opinion?

A. You mean 160 acres in 40s?

Q. 160-acre tracts in contiguous 40-acre subdivisions; not by a legal quarter section.

A. Simply adjoining, you mean?

Q. Simply adjoining 40-acre tracts?

A. Well, the sections, of course, vary in the townships. The average will run 25 per cent, or better. In many sections you will find forty acres that every foot of it can be farmed—reasonably smooth—and others you will find steep places, that would be too steep; but on the average, taking the whole range here, it will go better than 25 per cent. But the climatic conditions are better, as I said, than in the Little North Fork of the Santiam territory.

Q. You mean, there would be more than twenty-five per cent of agricultural land?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what percentage of the 160-acre tracts described the way I have mentioned would support a family, would be suitable for settlement, of these lands in Douglas County, that you have covered by your testimony?

A. You mean, what per cent in the range from 1 to 6 West, of each quarter section?

Q. I mean, what percentage of 160-acre tracts, dividing the land covered in your testimony into 160-acre tracts, what percentage would be suitable for settlement purposes; that is, that a man could go on, and make a living on, as settlers commonly do on lands?

A. Well, there is very few of the 160-acre tracts mentioned in that territory but what could be settled, and would make a living for a family. There would be a few exceptions. While the other 160-acre tracts nearby would run a higher per cent, I estimate that it will all average about thirty or forty per cent. Some will run low and some high.

Q. In speaking of 30 or 40 per cent, you are speaking of the amount of the land that can be cultivated in the quarter section, aren't you?

A. Yes, in each quarter section.

Q. Now, Mr. Martin, upon what do you base your opinion that a family could go on these quarter sections and make a living? State in your own words.

A. For the simple reason that the soil is of good reasonable depth. Some of it is dark, some of it is red soil, and observations have shown me that it will produce, being settled by people in different localities, growing crops—observation of growing crops and climatic conditions; the fact that a great deal of it is not covered with real heavy timber, and some of it, that that has heavy timber, as a rule has fairly good soil, capable of producing different varieties of crops.

Q. In your travels and in cruising over this land that you have described, did you find settlers or people living and making their homes on any of the lands in the even numbered sections?

A. I have, in a great deal of this territory, found settlers dotted around through the country; not very many in some places, but they would be scattered around. In running the lines in my work, I would unexpectedly come onto a settler up on a ridge, a little home.

Q. Were those settlers confined to land lying contiguous to and along streams?

A. Not altogether. The first settlers were located on the streams, naturally; but others located on the high lands.

Q. You mean the ones that came later, do you, by "the others?"

A. Yes, as a rule.

Q. Now, in this territory that you have covered by your testimony, Mr. Martin, are the lands located along the streams generally taken up?

A. Yes.

Q. By the early settlers?

A. They are.

Q. Where would a man seeking a place to settle have to go to in order to find land to get at a small price?

A. He would have to go onto the ridges, what we call uplands.

Q. Are there any benches through this area?

A. There are—very often find a flat ridge, top of a ridge flat, and containing 30 or 40 acres in a tract; others smaller benches. From the streams up, you will find benches up to the top of the divide in many localities.

Q. When you speak of ridges, Mr. Martin, you do not mean a pointed peak, or a ridge that comes to a precipitous point, do you?

A. No.

Q. Please describe what you mean by a ridge.

A. By saying a ridge, I mean a rolling country, that is not high, not steep and rough. I mean a gradual slope—rolling country.

Q. Did you ever locate anybody on these railroad lands?

A. No, sir. I refused to. I was asked to do so, but I did not want to take people's money.

Q. They have requested you to assist them in getting locations?

A. I expect a hundred persons have asked me to locate them on railroad land.

A. Different persons along the Willamette Valley.

Q. Mr. Martin, you testified that there were but few quarter sections in Douglas County, in the lands that you have described, but what would support a family. Now, what do you mean by that?

A. Well, I mean, you take in a township for basis, I mean that in each township, on an average, there is not more than half-a-dozen in each township, but I would consider would support a family.

Q. That includes even and odd numbered sections, does it, Mr. Martin?

A. It includes all the territory in the township.

Q. Well, in Josephine County this land in 31 South that you have mentioned, how would that run as to settlement, as to the susceptibility to settlement and the support of a family, as compared with the Douglas County lands that you have mentioned?

A. Well, it is not so good there. The land is rougher there. It does not run as high a per cent of agricultural land as in Douglas County, the part that I traveled over. It is rougher, although the soil is very good; but it is steeper, and not so good soil as in Douglas and Lane Counties.

Q. Well, how many 160-acre tracts in each one of those townships in 31 South that you have mentioned, would be susceptible to settlement and the support of a family?

A. The work that I did in the two townships only covered three quarter sections in one and four in the other. I traveled over other ground making preliminary examinations, but did not cruise only the seven quarter sections, in 31 South—7 and 8 West.

Q. How much of the township did you become acquainted with, Mr. Martin, in your cruising and in your travels?

A. About half of each one.

Q. From your knowledge of this land, what percentage of the 160-acre tracts described as I have mentioned in my previous questions would be susceptible to settlement, suitable for settlement, and would support a family?

A. I think about fifteen to twenty-five per cent of the ground that I traveled over in these townships.

Q. Do you mean that about fifteen to twenty-five per cent of the land is susceptible to cultivation?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, how many quarter sections in these townships, not quarter sections by legal quarter section but by 160-acre tracts, lying contiguous in 40-acre legal subdivisions, would support a family, that is, would be suitable for settlement?

A. Well, I would estimate that about that per cent of the quarter sections that I traveled over would support a family—from fifteen to twenty-five.

Q. That is about one-fourth of them—tyenty-five per cent?

A. Yes, from fifteen to twenty-five per cent; hardly a fourth.

Whereupon witness testified that the most part of his work of cruising was in Lane County, and his testimony with reference to these lands which he has mentioned as lying in Douglas County is applicable to the lands in Lane County. They are very much the same on the Douglas County side of the Calapooia Range, they are a little steeper, but the soil is good. The slope is more gradual on the Lane County side, it is more smooth on the Lane County side of the Calapooia Range, to a certain range on the east. When one goes up towards the Cascades it gets higher and rougher, but from 20 south to 6 west the land will average smoother on the Lane County side than it will on the Douglas side. In townships 20, 21, 22, 23 and 24, along there, the soil conditions are very much the same, only the land is steeper on the Douglas County side. There would not be any material difference as to the number of 160-acre tracts that would be suitable for settlement in Lane and Douglas Counties.

Whereupon on cross examination witness testified that he is forty-seven years old and raised on a farm following stock raising and farming until about seventeen years ago. His father had a pre-emption west of Cottage Grove and came to Oregon in 1857. His father's place was west of Cottage Grove. Cottage Grove is in the center of the upper end of the Willamette Valley and is one of the oldest settled sections of Oregon, and there were many donation claims taken around Cottage Grove, and as the settlement increased the foothills were taken under the homestead and pre-emption laws. Some of the railroad land that was lying in the valleys and foothills has been sold, a good many years ago, and also most of it close in the valley has been sold and that in the foothills around Cottage Grove very near the railroad has been sold. There is timber on a large portion of the unsold land. The demand for timber claims commenced about 1900, and there might have been some demand for timber as early as 1894. Local people did not pay much attention to these timber lands when the demand first arose. His observation is that about 1900 there were a great many eastern people who came out and took timber claims. All kinds of people. There have been homesteads taken all along as far back as he can remember and after the timber demand became active he observed that a good many homesteads were taken away back in timber country and some built cabins and commuted, paid up after fourteen months, got their patents or final receiver's receipts and moved away. A great many of the individual holdings have passed to the large timber owners. The timber and stone act of 1878 was applicable to Oregon and he knows that a great many quarter sections were purchased under that act, which required no settlement and limited the amount to bona fide purchasers to 160 acres where the applicant could swear that he had gone on or seen the land. A great many of these timber claims thus acquired under the timber and stone act passed into the hands of large timber dealers.

The two largest companies that he worked for were the Storey-Bracher Company and Honore Palmer., the son of Mr. and Mrs. Potter Palmer. He cruised a good part of two years for the Palmer people and a longer time for the Storey-Bracher Company and then for other similar concerns or private individuals in different localities. It is his understanding that Honore Palmer represents himself in making these investments, and he is the son of one of the millionaire families of Chicago. He has met Mr. Sumner, his financial representative, and supposes that he is the business manager in the field and looking over these cruises with him and determine whether they would buy or not. He knows that Sumner bought some lands in the vicinity of Eugene near the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company holdings, and witness helped estimate the timber on them. He forgets now whether there were 1,000 or 2,000 acres in one place. It might have been 1900 acres. He would not be positive. He heard that they talked of building a large mill there, and logging railroad to connect with the railroad operated by the Southern Pacific Company. He could not say that he selected these lands, before they were bought, and that he selected them on water sheds so that they could be successfully logged to one place. As a rule he never asked many questions of these people. They put their data before him and asked him to cruise in certain townships and sections and he went ahead and did the work without asking questions. He asked very few questions. He cruised also for Honore Palmer on the Coast Fork of the Willamette River, which is about thirty miles from Eugene in the Calapooia Range, a spur of the Cascade Mountains, which spur is at right angles to the Cascades. The elevation of the Calapooia in that locality is not very high, but is rather a low divide, from 1,000 feet on up reaching as high as 2,500 feet. The Calapooia crosses Douglas County and a part of Lane County at right angles to the railroad and connects the Coast Range with the Cascade Range and streams that head in the Calapooia are mountain streams and are swift. He would not classify them with Cow Creek, they are not as swift as Cow Creek. The headwaters of the Umpqua River, North and South Umpqua rise in the Cascade Range, and the Umpqua goes to the Coast. The Calapooia River heads in the Calapooia Range and empties into the Umpqua and is a part or stem of the great Umpqua River. He cruised several thousand acres for the Storey-Bracher people, but could not say how many, but thinks perhaps 6,000 or 7,000 acres. He worked all one summer and fall in one place that he remembers of and cruised a strip two miles wide through two townships in the Calapooia Range but never figured it up to say just how many acres, but it runs into thousands. This was in Douglas and Lane Counties, mostly in Lane County. J. O. Storey is one of the main men in the Company; his associates are Bracher Brothers, he thinks, one or two of them. They are from Michigan or Wisconsin or some of those eastern states, and they have been operating in timber lands in Douglas and Lane Counties several years. He first began work for them five, six or seven years ago. He could not say how many acres they have in their holdings all together, but he has cruised for them nearly 8,000 or 10,000 acres he would think. He has cruised for Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa people probably 1,500 acres for them in particular. He has not dealt in timber land very much. He took one homestead in section 30, township 23 south, 1 west in Lane County, but he did not prove up. He claimed his homestead about a year. It had some very good timber on it. He relinquished it to the Government and another party took it up immediately. He had an understanding with the party who succeeded him that he would relinquish to the United States who was to make his filing and he received no consideration for his relinquishment. The party in whose favor he relinquished proved up and the quarter was sold to timber people, there was a timber claim under the timber and stone act put on this homestead, when he relinquished to the United States. They filed under the timber and stone act and paid $2.50 an acre for it. It was several years after the man got his final receiver's receipt until he sold to a timber concern. The party had not lived on the land at all, she got about $2,000 for the land. This was perhaps six or eight years ago, but he could not say. The last knowledge he had, the Storey-Bracher Company, he thinks, owned that land. He is not positive but he thinks they were the last owners.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Well now, the locating business of so-called settlers on these timber lands has been pretty active in the last four years, hasn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it is still active, or has it rather quieted down?

A. It is rather quiet now.

Q. About the time this suit was commenced, did it become active, in September, 1908, that was?

A. You mean locating on railroad land?

Q. Yes.

A. I presume it was at that time. I am not positive just when this suit commenced.

Q. Do you know how they did that? These men that were doing the business that you declined to do. How did they do it?

Mr. Robb: Objected to as not proper cross examination.

A. Well, I suppose that they would represent that they would go and look the ground over, and then negotiate with people to locate them on it for so much a quarter, and put up notices, have the people to put up notices, and they would form in associations in different parts of the valley, and have an attorney, and locate land that way.

Q. How much did they charge—these timber locators—for picking out a quarter section and getting somebody to make an application to purchase and locate?

Q. You may answer if you know what the ruling charge was.

A. I think the price ran from $25 to $200, perhaps.

Q. Now, isn't it true, Mr. Martin, that these timber brokers or locators did a thriving business for about three or four years there, and got a great many people to make applications to the railroad company, tender them $2.50 an acre, and charge them for locating on these quarter sections?

A. I think that is true.

Q. The record shows here about seven thousand interveners, all of whom claim they have done that. Is that the way this business was done, as far as you know?

A. I could not say as to the number. I have not looked the records up. But there was a great many that were supposed to locate on these lands.

Q. Would these people go out and build a cabin or shack on the quarter that was selected, and stay there a night or two, and then go away?

A. I never saw anyone living on the ground, but I have seen their cabins in my travels that they built. A great many would not build cabins—just put up notices. I would see their notices as I traveled through the country.

Q. Now, what kind of land was it generally that these people had these cabins on and notices posted, timber or otherwise?

A. More or less timber all through the country.

Q. Wasn't it, as far as you could see, about the best timber that could be picked out on these railroad quarters?

A. Well, the location that I observed as a rule covered about all the railroad land in the country.

Q. In other words, they just plastered this railroad land with these notices and attempted locations?

A. I have seen more than one notice on the same claim.

Q. Now, what were they after—the timber that was on the land?

A. I couldn't say.

Q. Well, the land was chiefly valuable for timber, wasn't it?

A. Not as a rule.

Q. Well, wasn't the timber merchantable that was on it?

A. In some places it was.

Q. Well, as a rule these locations were mainly on the unsold railroad land—all on the unsold land, wasn't it?

A. Why, I would think so.

Q. And the unsold land of this company in the counties where you have been and cruised, was timber land, wasn't it?

A. A great part of it was.

Whereupon witness testified that one dollar a thousand feet board measure is the highest price he knew of a quarter section of timber lands selling for in Lane or Douglas County in the last four years, and that was the stumpage price. He knows of quarter sections of land that would run very close to twenty million feet board measure and at a dollar a thousand stumpage that would be $20,000 for a quarter section, but he has not known of any particular quarter section being sold at that price in that locality. He does not think that the market price of stumpage on these timber lands in that County would average as high as a dollar a thousand. The last land that was bought in Douglas and Lane Counties of which he has knowledge, he thinks, sold, a majority of it, at about fifty cents. He thinks it was gathered in large tracts and the small tracts were grouped together. He does not know of any timber companies which are offering to sell stumpage for fifty cents. He does not believe he knows of any large holdings offered for that price now. He does not believe they are very active at present in buying, there seems to be a little lull, which may be on account of pending graduated single tax measure. Some localities of these lands which he has cruised in Douglas and Lane Counties in 160-acre tracts in legal sub-divisions would in his judgment be twenty-five per cent agricultural, others higher. He thinks thirty to forty per cent. By agricultural he means land that is in good localities with good climatic conditions, low altitudes, smooth enough to cultivate, the soil being good, clear of rocks and such as that.

Whereupn witness testified:

Q. Well, you don't mean that these timber lands are agricultural do you—claims that would go twenty million feet of fir timber—you don't mean that is an agricultural tract, do you, in your classification?

A. I mean that many of the best timber lands are on good soil.

Q. Well then, you would classify a quarter section that had twenty million feet of good saw timber on, if the soil was good, and if it was sufficiently level that it could be plowed over after the timber was removed and the stumps cleared, you would classify that as agricultural?

A. I would.

Q. So that when you say lands are agricultural, or a certain per cent is agricultural, or a certain per cent of quarter sections is agricultural and capable of supporting a family you mean after the timber is taken off, that it has a soil that could be used for some agricultural purpose? That is what you mean?

A. Yes, I classify it as agricultural lands, for the simple reason that it is capable of producing, after the timber is taken off, producing different kinds of crops.

Q. Have you ever had any practical experience in living on a quarter section of this timber land that runs twenty million feet to the quarter, or that is commercially valuable for timber, and tried to make a living on it?

A. I have lived on land very similar. I did not live on land that grew that heavy timber. But I have passed over many of them.

Q. Have you ever known of anybody up in that country that had a quarter section of timber land, that concluded to and was clearing it, rather than sell it for the timber that was on it?

A. Yes, I know of quite a number.

Q. Just name anybody that you know that is on a timber quarter, that is in good faith going ahead, cutting down the saw timber, grubbing out the stumps and burning up the logs, and making any considerable progress in making a farm out of it, instead of holding it for the timber. Just name them. Give the location too.

A. Well, in township 22—well, I would say 21 or 22 south, 4 west—I am not positive now. It is in section 12. Mr. Aaron Kelly was living on a quarter there, doing my work in that vicinity—but he is dead now—clearing up part of it, raising different kind of crops on it.

Q. How much did he have cleared on his quarter section?

A. Oh, probably from five to ten acres.

Q. And what did he do with the balance of the 160 acres?

A. He hadn't done anything with the balance at that time.

Q. How far from the railroad was that?

A. About two or three miles.

Q. And how long had he owned this quarter section? How long had the title been out from the United States?

A. He had been on it a few years—I couldn't say how many.

Q. Do you know whether it was a homestead, or pre-emption, or timber claim?

A. I think it was a homestead.

Q. Had he got his title?

A. No, not at that time.

Q. Then he couldn't cut the timber on it, could he, except for domestic use?

A. Only for his own use, that is all.

Q. Did he have a family there with him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what kind of crops did he raise?

A. He had hay and different kinds of garden.

Q. Was he on a little stream?

A. Well, no; he was on a bench, upon a hillside.

Q. Did he have any living water, running stream there?

A. A spring, I think.

Q. Now, did he have any stock?

A. A few.

Q. What kind of stock?

A. Cattle, and perhaps a few horses.

Q. How many cattle did he have, would you say, approximately, now?

A. Well, I couldn't say.

Q. Forty or fifty head?

A. I think not that many.

Q. Were they milk cows or simply beef cattle?

A. Some of them were milk cows.

Q. And was he doing a stock business?

A. He had a few stock, was living there, making a living, and——

Q. Did his stock range out?

A. I simply meant he appeared to be making his living there for his family.

Q. Did he range his cattle over the unenclosed lands outside? Did they go over wherever they wanted to?

A. Those that were turned out could range wherever they wanted to.

Q. Didn't he turn out every one of them, except a few cows that he kept in his enclosure for milk?

A. I think perhaps most of them ran on the range.

Q. How many horses did he have?

A. Not very many.

Q. He had just a team, didn't he?

A. I presume two or three.

Q. He probably had a pony that he rode when he ent to town?

A. He didn't have to ride. He could go on a agon.

Whereupon witness testified that the nearest good ading point of this party was at Cottage Grove, about x, seven or eight miles away, southeast, between the outhern Pacific railroad and the Coast Fork of the Villamette. Comstock and Anlauf are on the railroad nd this piece of land was on the Lane County side west f the road and runs pretty close to 1500 feet high from 200 to 1600 feet, along there. Some of it was very fine mber, but some of it not heavy. The territory of which e is speaking is not in the Comstock locality but across he Calapooia on the Lane County side. It has not been ut off but is in its virgin condition, but is in the same eneral character of land. The way he went in when e cruised these timber lands on the Santiam, on the Lit-le North Fork of the Santiam above Mehama, he does ot know what the exact distance according to air lines ould be from Albany, but they were quite a ways east nd north from Mill City and above Elkhorn, on the estern slope of the Cascades, next to the Cascade For-st Reserve. The settlement, as a rule, in that locality, as not on the best timbered lands but on the ridges and ivers. Some of them were old settlers. Some had not een there many years. One would find an occasional abin that was not occupied, but not so very many, they ere mostly occupied. On the even sections in these timbered lands the settlements extended all the way along the two streams, the North Fork and the Little North Fork, and on both sides of the divide, the low divide between the Little North Fork and the North Fork, and on the other side of the divide, between the Olalla and the Little North Fork very close up to the summit, and he would presume there were a dozen settlers actually living on their quarter sections in that region that he saw, and in most instances they were men with families. He thinks the settlements in the timbered areas with which he is familiar in Douglas and Lane Counties were greater in some of the other localities than that, in proportion to the area he covered. Eliminating the settlers down in the valley in the foothills of Lane County where he has described the sections or territory where he had cruised he would think there would be five, maybe more, to a township, and there is not much difference as to the lands that he has cruised in the eastern part of Douglas County, they were about the same; he thinks the settlement was a little thicker on the west side of Lane County on the Siuslaw as a rule. There was a good deal of settlement on the Siuslaw, Smith River and the Umpqua. The Siuslaw heads near Cottage Grove about twenty-two miles from Eugene and runs from the western part of the county on west to the coast. It does not run through the eastern part of the county. He does not think the timber on the Siuslaw is quite as good on an average as on the Nehalem. Many parts of the little valley along the Siuslaw is covered with heavy timber. Some of it has no timber, some of it is open. He knows the Siuslaw Gorge through which the Willamette Pacific Railroad Company is building a tunnel and he understands it requires tunnelling to get a railroad through; some places of the Siuslaw River are in a gorge and some places the land is flat on each side of the river for a ways. There is a great deal of land in that section that is timbered. A great deal of it has been burned off. Most of the burned areas was once covered heavily with timber and is reputed to have been burned prior to the coming of the white man, about sixty or seventy years ago at least. The burn is a very large one. He measured one fern sixteen feet high in that locality. The soil is red and dark gray and affords a great deal of food for cattle in that locality. It grows pea vine, gourd vine and clover grows very fine in there when it is sown. Some of the burns are cultivated, but not a very great proportion in that locality. Most of the burn is in a state of nature as left by the fire to the growth of small brush and stuff, such as he has mentioned. The elevation is a great deal lower than 2500 feet. It is not that high as a rule in the Siuslaw country. When one gets up on the high ridges between the streams one gets that elevation, but a great deal of the country is lower than that. He only knows of the purchase of the large timber holdings by the Johnson-Wendling Company in the Siuslaw country this year by reading about it. He has cruised a great deal of the timber during the last twelve years and before that worked some at surveying and different things. He never cruised Douglas and Lane Counties for assessment purposes. The three methods which he uses in cruising are what are known as single, double and four times running through. He plats the ground, marks the streams and takes the elevations. He writes out his reports in the evening after he gets through his work on blank forms. In his reports he reported anything about soil conditions. With reference to noting the topography of the lands that he cruises, that depends upon the instructions that he receives. He marks the streams in all places and in a majority of cases the people employing him ask for the character of the land. A great deal of the lands he is employed to cruise are timbered lands. As a rule he gets the heighth of trees, while cruising, from measurements of down timber. In some places on these timbered lands the timber is fully matured and in others it is younger and still growing. After the tree becomes fully matured it begins to decay, not so very fast on the start, but as it gets older it decays faster. He knows of some of the full grown timber offered for sale on the Forest Reserve, but thinks that the United States asks $1.50 per thousand for fir timber but they have not been making any sales that he knows of. There are certain restrictions that they compel a person to comply with in the logging of these grounds, and he does not know whether they are too strict or whether it prevents the sale or not. He could not say whether it is the price or the regulations as to the method of leaving the land that constitutes the objection.

Whereupon on re-direct examination the witness testified that lands containing a stand of 20,000,000 feet to 160 acres are very unusual. There are very few of such lands in Douglas or Lane Counties and there is only one that he knows of in these Counties that is that heavy. He has never seen another claim that had that much timber on it. The timber growth is not uniform or the same in all places. It is very irregular. The timber is not generally heavy as a rule. There is a great deal of light timber, open spots and then one will find a heavy forty possibly, a heavy quarter, but not every section. There is more or less light timber and open spots, some of which would be easy to clear. Since the demand for timber became brisk a comparatively few years ago, there has been an increased demand for agricultural land and for lands that could be cultivated and he has had many applications for land suitable for homesteads in the vicinity of these lands about which he has testified. A great many of these people told him that they wanted these lands for homes, that is these people who sought to engage his services to find them agricultural lands. The demand for lands for homestead purposes in the western part of the State of Oregon is quite general now and has increased during the last ten years. Very little of the public lands are left. It has practically all been taken up. In some cases he knew that these abandoned cabins in the timber of which he has spoken were on homesteads, others he had no way of knowing and he did not inquire, but in some cases he knew that they were on homesteads. He does not think it has been the general practice of the citizens of Oregon to file homesteads on lands and immediately abandon them, after making proof and sell them to a timber company. There were very few of these abandoned cabins. He knows some of the parties who have filed on homesteads and then abandoned their cabins as he has mentioned. He wishes to say in regard to these abandoned cabins that a very large proportion of them, the majority of these cabins that have been abandoned, the land had been bought by companies, the people sold out, moved to towns, a great many of those who were bought out went to towns. They did not just get up and leave the lands, they sold their lands after they had made their proof, but that was unusual and there were very few of these abandoned homes that he found. He knows of the scrip locations on these lands and knows that scrip was used on a number of even sections, quite a good deal of scrip. Practically all of the streams in this country have their sources in the mountains. 2500 feet elevation on the Calapooia Range is the highest point. The largest burn he knows of in the Coast Range in Lane or Douglas Counties is between the Siuslaw and Smith River and is the burn mentioned containing this high fern. It does not contain very much merchantable timber, but small growth growing up with a small growth of timber. The old settlers claim that the Indians burned this land over in the early days, burned this off every year and kept it burned off. This main big burn was burned off more than fifty years ago, he thinks, although he has no actual knowledge, and no one else he thinks has any actual knowledge when it was burned. The land about which he has testified has increased in fertility but he does not think there has been any material change as to the mountains and the general susceptibility of the land to settlement since this grant was made. The remainder of these lands about which he has testified besides the per cent of lands that could be tilled, could be used for grazing land. The soil is very good on a great deal of it, but the steeper part of the mountains would be too steep to plow, but it would raise good grass. Fruit would grow well on this land, if it was not too steep to be cultivated. As far as cultivation is concerned it would grow good fruit. He has surveyed for the Government in Township 20 south, 10 west on Smith River in Douglas County. He thinks the ridges divide there at that point and the line follows the Siuslaw a ways and then jogs up on the ridge.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Now, Mr. Martin, there has been some testimony in this case, as to the reforestation of this land after the timber is removed. What, in your opinion, is the best use that could be made of the land after the timber is removed from such as is covered with timber?

A. I will say that I have worked for the government on the reserve, and I would say that the agricultural products from this land would be much more valuable to coming generations than the timber by being reforested.

Q. How long would it take to reforest this land? That is, for the timber to attain such growth as would make it merchantable timber, if you know?

A. It takes about two hundred years.

Q. What has been the effect, Mr. Martin, of the sale of this land to large timber companies, and the withdrawal of the lands from the general public market, if you know?

A. It has retarded the settlement of the country, kept back the development of the territory by people not being able to settle on the land.

Q. Are these lands close to transportation?

A. A great deal of them are.

Q. Situated as the railroad lands are in alternate sections, what, if any, effect would that have with reference to the settlement of the even numbered sections?

A. It has retarded the settlement, of course, of the other land to some extent.

Q. In what way, Mr. Martin?

A. Well, on account of causing a more thinly settled locality, you know, in developing schools and such as that, and highways, roads.

Whereupon, on re-cross examination witness testified that what is commonly known as lieu land scrip has been used a great deal for the purpose of acquiring these timber lands in the even sections, in the territory with which he is familiar; he has used some of it himself. J. W. Parrish has used some and he knows by hearsay about the large companies using it, and he knows it has been done according to general information. The last scrip he used for this purpose cost $8.75 per acre. The Northern Pacific Railway Company has located some of these timber lands in the even sections with scrip, it was in lieu of the Rainier mountain country in Washington, scrip that was given them on land in the Rainier Mountain country. It was put into a reserve, they could locate this scrip on Oregon lands and they got the scrip in lieu of lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railway Company under the Act of July 2, 1864, and could locate the scrip in Oregon and they located a lot of these lands in Douglas and Lane Counties. He could not say exactly how many acres they had scripped in Douglas County on the even sections of these timber lands. Their holdings in the Umpqua Reserve and Cascade Reserve are quite large. The dividing line between the two reserves is the watershed between the Willamette and Row rivers, two tributaries of the Willamette and there are several thousand acres they have scripped, and they have scripped also in the even sections within the indemnity limits of this railroad grant in these counties, but he does not know as to the odd sections. The brown lands shown on "Defendants' Exhibit 259" unavailable for indemnity selections within forest or other reserves from township 17 south nearly the whole distance down to 31 or 32 south in the indemnity limits, designated as lost to the company by reason of being appropriated, or withdrawn, or under reserve, is similar to the land adjoining it in the twenty mile strip and he does not know the exact number of acres in Lane County which the Northern Pacific Railway Company has scripped. He did know the cruise, but has forgotten now, it was a large amount. He did not directly cruise for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, but did work for them under other people, under the cruising party a short time. He arrived at the time it would take to reforest a piece of this timber land, which he says would be two hundred years, by calculating the growth of the timber in different localities, counting the grain to get the number of years it requires to get a certain size to make it merchantable timber and he figures that some of these largest trees may be two hundred years old, or more than that. The oldest tree that he can remember, in these forests, using the accepted method of arriving at the age of trees, is something over two hundred. There are some second growth fir trees in some parts of the Willamette Valley that are not over fifty years old and are eighteen inches through at the butt. The growth of such a tree depends upon the density of the forest, where it is thicker, it does not grow so fast.

Whereupon witness testified :

Q. Do you remember seeing a forest east of the railroad, between Woodburn and Gervais, on the east side of the track as you go south, that forty years ago was just little fir trees, not much higher than the ceiling of this room, that today are seventy-five feet high, and the trees, many of them, are eighteen inches at the butt, and they stand so thick that the sun very rarely penetrates into that grove?

A. I don't know of that particular grove, but I know of others similar.

Q. I call your attention to that grove because it is along the railroad, and well recognized, and known by everyone who is interested in reforestation?

A. Yes, sir, I think I have noticed the grove.

Q. Well, now, those trees, while not desirable for large mill timbers or mining timbers, will make saw timber for most uses, do they not?

A. To get timber of that size, that should be cut and used to advantage, it has got to be in what they call old growth, very thick, and where it grows tall and slow. The young growth that comes up fast don't make good timber. It don't make good lumber.

Q. That is to say, the timber at fifty years of age is not so good for all purposes as trees that are one hundred years old.

A. No, it is not good, as a rule.

Whereupon upon re-direct examination witness testified that timber that grows rapidly usually is trees that stand by themselves, and are swell butted and the grains are coarse. The other timber is tall and small and the grain is fine and much stronger and takes on a good finish, while the other is hard and coarse grained, and has not the strength the other has. It is considered waste to cut it at that stage. This Northern Pacific scrip, he thinks, can be located on unsurveyed land and was largely located on unsurveyed lands in Oregon. He has no actual knowledge that Northern Pacific scrip has been located on the ten mile indemnity limit of this grant.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Now, Mr. Martin, if a settler would go on this land, taking a 160-acre tract, how could he make a living? In what manner?

A. Well, when he first settles on the land, when it is covered with brush and timber, in order to make a living for the first few years, he could put goats on it, and raise them at a very good profit. 160 acres of most any of this land will keep two hundred head of goats. Their food is nearly entirely brush, browse off the young brush and vegetation—requires very little feed for them in the winter in the low altitudes, and the returns on the wool and increase are very profitable.

Q. Is the goat industry carried on to any extent in the vicinity of these lands?

A. The goat industry is scattered all over Lane County and Douglas, as well as farther north.

Q. Now, would they require any food, other than the growth on the land, during the winter season?

A. I have wintered 225 head of goats several winters with less than five ton of hay. Other winters, when they have a little soft snow, why, it requires some feed for a few weeks. A few tons of hay will carry two hundred head through very easily.

Q. Would these people have to buy their hay?

A. Well, they can raise it.

Q. Is their land situated in 160 acre tracts, sufficient land to raise hay that would support a herd of goats?

A. There are very few of these 160-acre tracts but what have light patches of timber and brush that can be cleared easily. The heavy tracts of solid timber over 160-acre tracts, over the entire lot, are very scarce. It is spotted all over the country. And there are always little benches of light timber and brush that can be cleared, and bottoms, small bottoms on the head waters of the streams can be cleared very cheaply, and produce good hay—any kind of agriculture.

Q. Are there many of these spots scattered through the timber of Lane County, that you have spoken of?

A. They are all through it—scattered all through it; some of them quite large—forty acres sometimes.

Q. Would the income from the raising of goats maintain a family?

A. It will.

Q. Support it?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon on re-cross examination, witness testified:

Q. Suppose you had 200 goats on each quarter section of this land, would you have the land all fenced to take care of them?

A. It would depend on whether I had to or not.

Q. I know, but suppose that you had to enclose your premises, to confine your pasturage to your own quarter section, and everybody had 200 goats, on each quarter section, do you think that would be at all practicable, Mr. Martin?

A. I think it would support them easily.

Q. What do these goats raise or produce that is marketable?

A. Well, an increase in the stock.

Q. It is called mohair, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they raise about how many pounds of mohair to a goat, the best goats that they have in this country?

A. Well, it ranges all the way from 3½ to 5 pounds to the head, owing to the grade.

Q. It takes a mighty good goat, doesn't it, to bring five pounds of mohair?

A. Not a very good Angora to raise five pounds.

Whereupon witness testified that he does not know how many goats there are in Lane County. He knows of one man near his town that owns over five hundred head. He supposes that Polk County is the best goat county in the State. He has heard that there are a great many goats in that county. He knows that goats eat fir, they prefer hardwood browse but would eat the young fir. He has had them to eat it in his own range. They prefer vine maple and hard woods of that description, they really prefer a variety; they browse on all kinds of brush. They will even eat poison oak, and he has slashed in ground and had young brush start, fir brush, very thick on the ground, and put them in the pasture and cleared it entirely with goats. They would kill it out. They are used to grub any kind of land. They prefer hard wood browse. The average clip of mohair is more than two and a half pounds per head. Every city and town in his locality buys and ships mohair; a greater part of it is sent to London. The price ranges from twenty to forty-five cents per pound and he thinks the average for the last few years has been in the neighborhood of thirty cents per pound, maybe a little more than thirty cents per pound, so that if a man had two hundred goats and raised five pounds to each, that would be one thousand pounds of mohair, which at thirty cents would be worth $300.00.

Whereupon, on re-direct examination, witness testified that if one takes a mixed herd of goats that is usually raised by the rancher he would raise abount one hundred head as the natural increase, worth from $2.00 to $5.00 a head, owing to the grade, and he always sold his best goats at $5.00 a head. For the finest breed of goats, the blue ribbon variety, one would pay several hundred dollars for some of them. These fine goats eat brush just the same as the others. He has no interest in this suit other than as a citizen of the State of Oregon and did not volunteer to come down here but was subpoenaed.

Whereupon, upon re-cross examination, witness testified that he was interviewed by the Government's representative at Cottage Grove and made a written statement of what his testimony would be several months ago and later was subpoenaed and brought here as a witness.

Whereupon A CREASON, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, and being duly sworn, testified: That he is fifty-six years old, resides at Roseburg, Douglas County, Oregon, and has lived in Oregon, most of the time in Douglas County, for thirty-three years. Roseburg is near the center of the county, a little north of the center. He has been principally engaged in the stock business since he came to Oregon, and has owned and operated quite a bit of acreage in that county. He has had no experience in the lumber or timber business, other than to buy lumber needed for building purposes, or for fencing. He never owned anything that he figured as timber land, except a quarter of a section in 27-1 West. He has been handling cattle and sheep principally, but some horses in his stock business, and raised them to sell. One of his stock ranches consisted of 1,071 acres and adjoined the City of Roseburg; another, about nine miles east of Roseburg, consisted of 665 acres, another about two miles north of Roseburg consisted of 361 acres, and another consisted of 628 acres, eleven miles west of Roseburg, in Township 27-7; he has some other small pieces scattered around the country. He went to Douglas County in 1879, and he thinks the railroad was constructed to Riddle or Glendale at that time, but he would not say positively as to that. For a distance of forty miles south and twenty or twenty-five miles north of Roseburg, he has been practically all over, and is acquainted with that territory; and has been clear across the state. He has been frequently over that country the last ten or fifteen years, but has never done any timber cruising. The territory he speaks of extends clear through to the Coast. He is a little bit acquainted in Lane County and knows some of the land in that county directly west of Eugene. He owns 160 acres in there. The railroad land adjoins that, and he has been over that; it is within the limits of the grant and he was told that it was railroad land. He has not been very extensively over Lane County, but has observed the land in that county in the vicinity of this quarter section, of which he speaks; from Albany west, along the Mohawk and Corvallis, and along through ten or twelve miles, he would say, west of the main line of the Southern Pacific, he has been through that a few times buying goats and stock, and riding over the country, and hunting and fishing some, but not as extensively as he has been in Douglas County. He has been up and down the railroad from Portland to the southern boundary line of the state, more or less, and thinks that he has become familiar with the general development of the industrial and commercial resources of Oregon in these vicinities that he speaks of.

Q. State whether or not you know the general method that has been pursued by the railroad company with reference to the disposition of its lands in these communities that you speak of?

Q. During the time that you have resided in that vicinity.

A. Very much to the disadvantage of the settler.

Q. The question is, do you know?

A. Yes, sir; I know.

Q. State what it is.

A. The country has been held back to a great extent by the settlers being only allowed the even sections, and the odd sections unimproved, disadvantages for schools, for roads, and every other convenience that would be of advantage to the development and the settlement of the country.

Q. Does that observation apply to the general territory that you have described that is within the limits of the railroad grant, or to some particular part of it?

A. To practically all that I have been over.

Q. Do you know the general character of the soil within this territory that you have spoken of? I refer now always to the land within the limits of the railroad grant, unless I otherwise designate.

A. As a whole, you mean?

Q. Yes.

Mr. Fenton: Which he has seen.

Mr. Townsend: Yes.

A. Yes, sir; I am acquainted with it.

Q. Acquainted with the general lay of the country as to elevations and other natural conditions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you acquainted then with the general question of the adaptability of that land to cultivation and the raising of horticultural and agricultural products?

A. Yes, sir; I think I am.

Q. Are you acquainted with the value of that land for the purpose of settlement and the maintenance of families of the settlers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What have you to say as to the quality of that land, considering now the character of the soil, the way in which the land lies, and all other conditions, natural conditions, as to its availability for the purpose of settlement, and the use of the land for the purpose of maintaining and supporting a settler and his family.

Mr. Fenton: Objected to as calling for a conclusion of the witness and not for specific statements of fact, and as therefore incompetent.

A. The land as a whole is very good. It is somewhat broken, but I would say 75 or 80 per cent of the whole is good agricultural land, capable of making many good homes for people that are willing to go into the frontier and hew out a home, clear up the land, take their families, and develop the country and make homes, and could make good livings.

Q. Have you had any experience with reference to the use of logged off lands for agricultural and horticultural purposes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you taken that into consideration in your previous answer as to the quality of this land?

A. Yes, sir. What I mean by agricultural land is land that is suitable for farming by the work of man cleaning the brush off, timber off, such like as that. None of it can be farmed—I say none of it—a great deal of it cannot be farmed if he had to go right into the timber and stumps to start with, because that has got to come off first. Some of it is open, ready for use at the present.

Q. It has been testified to here, Mr. Creason, that there is not a quarter section of land within this grant, referring now to the unsold lands still held by the railroad company that would support a family. Is that true?

A. Absolutely false.

Q. What proportions of the quarter sections with which you are familiar would support families, if properly handled?

Mr. Fenton: Objected to as calling for a conclusion of the witness without any statement of facts.

A. Their land as a whole, the even and odd sections that I have been through hunting and fishing and running stock, it would be hard for me to pick out an odd section from an even one, but I have some land of my own that the railroad company has land adjoining it which I have leased, or that my man on the place has leased, that I could say positively, because I have been right on the land and could name the quarter section and the forty, etc., but take the whole back a ways, it would be hard for me to say which section I was on, whether it was an even section or an odd—but take it as a whole, I will venture to say there is not a quarter section in the territory I have been over that would not make some man a reasonably good home; some better than others; but any of it he will find more or less farm land or agricultural land.

Q. Are there any settlers within that territory, speaking now with reference to the limits of this grant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, have you proceeded west from the grant to the Coast?

A. Clear to the Coast, yes, sir.

Q. State whether you found any difference as to the settlement of the country as you left the grant and proceeded to the Coast.

A. You get out of the grant limit, and you find it much thicker settled than you do in the limit of the grant.

Q. Why is that?

A. The only reason I can account for it is, it has better conveniences—they can have better roads, more settlement; can have schools where they cannot where it is so thinly settled.

Q. Well, what has brought that condition about?

A. Government lands, people are allowed to go and take it as homesteads, pre-emptions, and various ways.

Q. Well, why hasn't the same thing occurred within the limits of the grant?

A. The last number of years the railroad company has absolutely refused to sell it, or have to me, at any rate, as I have made application for it.

Q. In your judgment, if the railroad company had disposed of those lands to settlers, would the same conditions exist within the limits of the grant that you found immediately adjoining it on the west?

A. Much better, because the climatic conditions are much better on the east side of the Coast Range than they are on the west side of the Coast Range. I think it would have been more thickly settled.

Q. Now, how with reference to the sale of these lands in large quanities to timber buyers and others—are you acquainted with that general condition?

A. Not positively. I know in a general way of it being sold in large tracts.

Q. What effect, if any, has that had upon the settlement of the country?

A. Very much held the country back, on account of those people bought it and were holding it for speculative purposes, I presume, or at least they are holding it and not selling it; no settlers on that land. There are none of those large tracts that I know of that have been bought that ever anybody has allowed any settlers to go on.

Q. Now, in your testimony with reference to the availability of this land to settlement, state whether or not the same thing would be true after the timber is removed, referring now to such lands as are timber lands?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any of these railroad lands that would be valuable for the sole purpose of settlement after the timber is removed?

Mr. Fenton: Objected to as immaterial.

A. Except in a general way as I speak of, with the exception again of these tracts that I have leased, or that my men have leased. But outside of that, to go on any one section to know positively that it is a railroad section, I would not know whether it was an odd one or an even one. But as a whole, why, it would be thickly settled in places—people would be glad to have it, many people.

Q. Do you know, from your own observation at Roseburg, and in that vicinity, whether settlers have come in there and tried to get any of that land?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent and when? Describe it in a general way.

A. I know of two men about eighteen miles, I would judge, east of Roseburg, on the North Umpqua River, or close, by the name of Barker, that went in there before the land was surveyed, taking a squatter's right. Afterwards the land was surveyed, and they found that they were on railroad land. They had made homes there, they had cleared up some land, and calculated to prove up on it as Government land till it fell to the railroad company, and since that time they have never been able to get a patent to it. One of them lives in Roseburg at present. The other, a brother of the same man, is dead. They both told me——

Mr. Fenton: Objected to what the witness was told by these people as hearsay.

A. I saw them on the land personally myself.

Mr. Fenton: I do not object to that. I object to what they told you.

Mr. Townsend: Go ahead with your answer.

A. Both of them have told me that they had tried time and again to get the land, and were unable to secure it, and eventually moved off.

Q. When you saw them on the land, what were they doing?

A. Farming it, had a little stock; both of them good hard working men; had families—one of them had a family—the other, I believe, did not, but one of them I know did, because one of his sons is working for me now.

Q. Do you know whether they had any other means of livelihood than the product of the land upon which they were settled?

A. I think none whatever.

A. How long did they live there?

A. They lived there—well, it is hard to say, but I would say eight to ten years.

Q. Do you know the description of that land?

A. No, sir; I couldn't tell you the exact description, but I can give you very close to it. If I could have the map, I could show you almost exactly.

Mr. Fenton: There is a map right here, Mr. Creason.

A. (Referring to map.) It would be right in there. Before the country was surveyed they went in there. I wouldn't say what section it was in, but it is right at the old Patterson mill and a little above Glide.

Q. Now, how about recent years? Do you know whether there have been any settlers coming into Douglas County, particularly coming to Roseburg?

A. The last seven years there has been the greatest immigration of settlement that Douglas County has ever had, and the last five especially; in fact, for the last ten years, but the last settlement, people are coming all the time in the last five years, there are a great many of them that come looking for homes.

Q. State whether, in your judgment, the railroad lands situated in Douglas County, and particularly those within the limits that you have described, could be disposed of to settlers and reduced to settlement?

A. Yes, sir; very readily.

Q. It has also been testified to here, Mr. Creason, that these unsold lands of the railroad company that are involved in this suit, including the lands in Douglas County, together with the even numbered sections that intervene those railroad lands, are not good for anything excepting the growing of timber, and that the only use, practical use, that can be made of them, is to cut off the growing timber, and then hold them for the purpose of reforesting them. Is that true, in your judgment?

A. Absolutely no truth in it. It would make hundreds of good homes if they would allow people to have it.

Whereupon witness testified that his knowledge of the lands as to sections is limited to the few tracts that he owns individually; these he knows exactly, and the adjoining land he also knows; the other lands within the general boundaries, that he mentioned, but without reference to their legal subdivision, he also knows; and he knows the character of the land; and it is of the same general character all the way through, with the exception of a little bit through Cow Creek Canyon, which is the roughest section of Douglas County.

Q. I was going to ask you about that. The land is visible from the train as you go along the Oregon and California railroad there in Douglas County, how does it compare with the remainder of the land in Douglas County.

A. South of Roseburg it goes through the roughest section of the country; north of Roseburg through some of the best.

Whereupon witness testified, that he never located a man on a piece of these railroad lands in his life; he did apply to purchase some of it himself; he applied individually twice, once by correspondence and another time by offering the actual cash. He made an application for a number of friends, probably a hundred, he could not say positively, but in the neighborhood of a hundred friends, possibly more, which applications were refused. He knew the character of a part of these lands only that were applied for, and knew positively the piece that he applied for; he had seen the land. The land was of such a character that it could have been made a home of, and would support a family. He heard part of the testimony of the preceding witness, Mr. Martin. A settler when he first goes onto a piece of land, has always the hardest time when he first settles on it to make a living; but if he will go on there, raise a garden, take a little stock, for instance goats, as this man suggested, there is no reason why he could not make a living on any quarter section there is in it. It would not be a practical thing to raise goats, but to clear the land and get rid of the goats, because after the land is cleared the goat is not as much profit as when the land is uncleared. The goat is a brush animal almost wholly, or nearly so. The goat helps to clear the land very materially, in the way of taking out the small brush or any shrubbery that he can get at, anything that is within his reach. The greater portion of this land after it is cleared is good for any kind of farming that one wants to do—stuff that will grow through Southern Oregon, any kind of garden stuff, fruit and berries of all kinds. Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified, that he owns in Douglas County 665 acres in one piece, 361 acres in another, 628 acres in another, 161 acres in another, and he has sold off possibly two-thirds of the 1,071 acres which he formerly owned next to Roseburg. The farthest tract away from Roseburg is in Section 2, Township 27 South, Range 1, about thirty miles. Some of the other is in the town of Roseburg; that is a part of this 1,071 acre tract. Part of it is eleven miles west of Roseburg, nearly due west, and part of it from nine to eleven miles east, at the head of Oak Creek, which empties into the North Umpqua, about north of Roseburg, over towards Winchester. The South Umpqua River, for about three-quarters of a mile, runs through Roseburg. Part of this 1,071 acres which he owned, has been patented thirty-five or forty years, and was taken under the donation land law, many years ago, part of it, not all of it, 160 acres of this land, seven miles west of Roseburg, was a donation claim; this which is thirty miles away from Roseburg was a homestead, taken by a man by the name of Strader, witness has owned it three years. Strader first went on this homestead about nine or ten years ago, and lived on it a little over seven years before he got his patent; it was not surveyed when he went on it; there was some timber on it and some open land; he raised quite a bit of garden stuff and some timothy; there was no road to it; it is not occupied now; he bought the improvements from Strader, which was on the place, but they are not occupied; the improvements are the ones that Strader made. Witness has not made any improvements himself, but has kept the place leased to the Forest Service for two years, and occupied, he thinks, by a ranger, but could not say, but that is his understanding. He leased the whole 160 acres for what the taxes amounted to, some $14 a year, last year. All these other lands, other than the homestead, he used for stock purposes and they are more or less timbered, with fir and some oak; and are on what they call hill land. His principal business is that of a stock man, but he hasn't a great deal of stock. He keeps the 628 acres leased, the 665 acres leased and the 361 acres leased to people for stock purposes by them. As rental for these leased lands he gets part of the stock and of the produce that is raised on the lands. He leases on what is called one-third. He gets as rentals more than three per cent on the value of his land, after paying the taxes. Five per cent net, after paying taxes, is good fair profit for a farmer. Eighty acres of one of these tracts of his, east of town, was railroad land, but he does not know how long ago it was purchased from the railroad company. A man by the name of Shoemaker bought the land and he thinks it must have been sold less than thirty years ago, possibly twenty, he could not say. He does not know what Shoemaker paid for that eighty; it has good timber on it, quite a bit of it, and it is saw timber. He thinks Shoemaker bought it directly from the railroad company, but he does not think Shoemaker lived on it; in fact, there has never been any improvements on it. Shoemaker lived adjoining this tract, and used it in connection with the lands he had adjoining, and used it principally for stock purposes. There is a part of the land which he owns that would be worth two or three thousand dollars an acre and part of it not over twenty or twenty-five dollars an acre; the land north of Roseburg is valuable land. The land on Oak Creek is about nine miles from Roseburg, and the farthest is about eleven miles; and it is worth about twenty or twenty-five dollars an acre. He has about thirty acres in cultivation in the 361 acre tract, and about sixty acres in the 665 acre tract. Practically all of these two places on Oak Creek is fenced; he does not know of a forty acres that lays out open on the range. He knows of cattle men, stock men and sheep men herding their stock into the mountains or foothills on the open lands, and he does that himself. He gets permission from the Forest Service to drive his stock into the Forest Reserve. When he has them down in the lower part of the country they are in inclosures all the time. The number of acres that they run over when they are in the Forest Reserve depends on the amount of stock one wants to run as to the amount of land that the Forest Service will set aside for a person. It is hard to say how much he did have in the Forest Reserve; he had three locations where the area was quite large, but the grazing part of it, where the best grass was, was not so large. By quite a large area, he means several thousand acres. The Forest Service does not charge him by the acre, but by the head; that is, five cents for sheep and twenty-five cents for cattle; and one can go in in May and stay until November, and pay five cents for sheep and twenty-five cents for cattle for the season. He does not think the Forest Service leases any land at all. They charge for a permit; the man that runs the stock on the lands pays so much a head. He does not know of any one, outside of the Forest Service, that leases land, or gives any permits for leasing lands, except in the valleys where he lives, one would lease from his neighbor. Roseburg is one of the old settled sections of Oregon, and he thinks the Umpqua Valley has been settled for about fifty years. Oakland has between 800 and 1000 inhabitants, and is eighteen miles north of Roseburg in an old settled section. He was never around Drain a great deal. He went directly to San Francisco and made the applications to purchase the railroad lands, which he applied for, and made these applications to Charles W. Eberlein for 160 acres, being the SW¼ of Section 23, Township 27 South, Range 9 West, he thinks it is. He had been over that land before he made his application; it is rolling land and has fir timber on it principally; and he offered to pay Eberlein $2.50 an acre for it.

Q. And you did that under the claim that you were entitled to it under the act of April 10, 1869?

A. I thought I was; yes, sir.

Q. Yes, I know. Were you advised to do that by Mr. Leavengood?

A. No, sir.

Q. By anyone?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well now, how did you find out about that?

A. I knew it ever since I have lived in Oregon.

Q. You knew of that provision.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was generally known, wasn't it?

A. I think it is generally known. Any man that didn't know it, it is probably through his own ignorance. It was plain for anybody to know. It was a matter of record.

Q. Yes, a matter of public statute.

A. I think so, yes.

Whereupon witness testified, that he represented about 100 or more applicants, a majority of whom lived in Roseburg. He did not make out their papers for them, but a lawyer by the name of A. N. Orcutt, a partner of Judge Fullerton at one time, made them out. Orcutt is his attorney, but not in this matter. These 100 applicants employed Orcutt, who went down with witness to San Francisco and was present when witness made the tender to Eberlein; Orcutt was present and saw that it was well done; witness took these 100 applications with him at two different times. These applications were printed blanks; and in the blank applications they applied for a particular quarter section and offered to pay $2.50 an acre, and represented that they desired the land for actual settlement; and they claimed the right under the Act of April 10, 1869. He could not say whether there was an affidavit to these various application blanks; it was a written form and made a matter of record when he returned to Douglas County. He did not commence any suit on these applications, and is not sure whether any of these people are interveners. He does not know who located these other quarter sections applied for by these 100 people, but he knows that Charles Thoms located a few of them. Thoms might have been a timberman at that time, but he is now in business in Coos County. He knows that twelve or fifteen of these people were not charged anything for locating them, but he does not know whether Thoms charged generally. He knows that they did not generally get from $75 to $150 a piece for each claim, these that he is speaking of. He thinks a majority of them paid $5. He does not know what kind of lands these men applied for, or anything about the character of these lands, except a few of them, three or four different ones that he knows of; Simon Caro, for instance, he knew what he applied for, because his claim was quite close to his own, and he had seen it himself. Caro was a merchant in Roseburg, and he has been there thirty or forty years in business; he applied for a pretty well timbered quarter section. All this happened about four years ago, he thinks, but he could not be positive; it happened long before this suit was commenced; he thinks it would be two years before the suit was begun, which was September 4, 1908. He could not state positively if it was before or after April 30, 1908, but the records will show exactly when it was done, because the applications were made a matter of record when they returned from San Francisco. There was a good deal of agitation about that time, and he was one of those who first started it; and he certainly was active in starting it; he had feeling in the matter and wanted to see his neighbors get some of the land; wanted to see the settlers, or men coming into the country, get some of it if they could. He had no feeling against the railroad company, none whatever; but he wanted some of the land. The quarter section that he applied for is worth, in his judgment, today, five or six thousand dollars, and the principal value of it at present would be for the timber that is on it. He only knew a few of the other quarter sections applied for; they were similar to the one he made application for and about the same thing. He figured the quarter section he applied for was worth more than he was to pay for it and he thought it was worth five thousand dollars, and he offered to pay four hundred dollars for it.

Q. Now, these two settlers that you speak about going in on unsurveyed land that the railroad company wouldn't sell them, that is between Glide and Hoaglin?

A. Yes, sir; on the south side of the river.

Q. On what river?

A. The North Umpqua.

Whereupon witness testified, that this land, above referred to, was on the North Fork of the North Umpqua River, and was rolling land, pretty well covered with timber. It would be hard for him to say what these two quarter sections were worth, but he would say three or four thousand dollars. The man that lived there raised more or less garden stuff, and had some stock which roamed mostly on the hills adjoining him; he does not think that he had all the land fenced at the time; he had some of this quarter section fenced, but could not state as to how much; he knows that he had, because he was there and saw it; he had fifteen or twenty acres in cultivation on the hillside, on the slope of the hill. On one of these claims there was no creek at all; it slopes towards the North Umpqua River. The land did not lead down to the river, but led towards the river. One of these tracts was a quarter of a mile from the river; it might have run through one of them; but one of them the river did not touch, he thinks. They had access to the entire range back of them for their stock, and every person had the same. One of them had twelve or fifteen head of stock, but he does not know as to the other. He thinks that these places were from sixteen to twenty miles from Roseburg.

Q. Now, when you speak of this land being 75 to 80 per cent agricultural, you mean after the timber is taken off and the land is cleard?

A. I mean right today, it is 75 per cent of it that is good agricultural land.

Q. Well, you don't mean that it is now fit to be used for agricultural purposes until the timber is cut off?

A. Until it is cleared up, sure enough.

Q. Then, when you say agricultural to the extent of 75 to 80 per cent, you include in that these best timbered quarters?

A. I include everything that can be cultivated, that is good reasonable land for cultivation.

Q. After the timber is taken off.

A. No, after or before, just what will be good for agriculture when it is put in condition to be cultivated.

Q. You take 160 acres that is heavily timbered, how are you going to cultivate that now?

A. Cut the timber off it.

Q. That is what I asked you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You classify 160 acres of the best timber land in Douglas County as agricultural if it has good soil.

A. If it has good soil and can be cultivated.

Q. Yes, after the timber is off?

A. Certainly.

Whereupon witness testified, that he wrote to the company to try to buy some of these railroad lands adjoining him on Oak Creek, other than the formal application to which he has referred; it was the same character of land, rolling timber and brush. This was from five to seven years ago; it was some years before this agitation was started. He thinks it was before 1907, it seems to him it was about 1905, but he would not say positively. He applied for eighty acres, wrote to the general offices in San Francisco. Judge Fullerton gave him the address to write to and he wrote that he wanted to buy it and wanted to know if the land was for sale, and what they would take for it; and they replied that it was not on the market for sale. He does not know that it was Eberlien who replied to him, but thinks it was one of his clerks and he thinks the name was Henry Conlin, who was one of Eberlein's clerks. It was ordinary hill land, which could be cultivated if the timber and brush was off of it. Some of it was fair timber, but it did not have any saw timber. There was some oak and fir, young fir and a little laurel on it; and some creek bottom land, and a little ash swale on it. The first general inquiry for the purchase of timber lands in Douglas County, to his knowledge, he thinks was about nine years ago, as nearly as he can remember. The last three years it has not been very active, and before that, at times, it seemed to be very active. His recollection is that the inquiry for timber, some market for timber, developed somewhere about 1903, he might be mistaken a year or two in the date, it was between eight and ten years ago when the first timber rush began, he means when the demand began. There might have been some inquiry for these timber lands before 1902 or 1903, but he had never taken any interest in these timber lands, and did not hear of any particular demand until somewheres about 1902 or 1903; there was quite a rush from four to seven years ago. To his knowledge the best price that any quarter section of timber land has sold for, either stumpage or by the quarter section, he thinks, has been about $5,000; this was situated on the west slope of the Coast Range in Coos County on the head of Coos River. A. O. Rhodes sold that quarter section.

Q. Do you know any of these large timber investors in Douglas County? I mean, know of their holdings?

A. I have been over what was claimed to me to be part of their holdings.

Q. What companies do you refer to?

A. Booth-Kelly Lumber Company.

Q. And have you been over any of the timber holdings of C. A. Smith Company?

A. I have been on part of theirs.

Q. And the Meenah-Oregon Land Company?

A. I have heard of them, but I don't know where their lands are.

Q. The Roach Timber Company?

A. I have been on some of that.

Q. Kendall Brothers?

A. Kendall Brothers, I have been on a good deal of that.

Q. Pillsbury Lumber Company.

A. I know that.

Q. Lennon Land Company?

A. I don't know that.

Q. Bradford Timber Company?

A. I don't know that.

Q. Myrtle Lumber Company?

A. I know a little of theirs.

Q. Gardiner Mill Company.

A. I know part of theirs.

Q. Weyerhauser Land Company?

A. A little of that.

Q. A. H. Hinckson?

A. His is scattered all over. I know a little of that.

Q. Sparrow, Coach & Kroll?

A. I don't know that.

Q. Do you know any of the holdings of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, that have been scripped by that company in Douglas County?

A. No, sir; I don't.

Q. You have never been in the timber business yourself?

A. No, never been in the business.

Q. Never made any investments in timber excepting this quarter section of the homstead that you bought?

A. That is all. I did buy a piece, too, in Jackson County.

Whereupon witness testified, that the land he bought in Jackson County, three years ago, and still owns, he never saw and does not know where it is, that is, not what township and range, but he thinks it is in the northwestern part of Jackson County; he bought "unsight and unseen," as they used to say; he had a cruiser, who claimed to have seen it, a man whom he thought he could trust; he did not buy it on a cruise, and he did not get a cruise. A man had cruised it, that he knew, and he talked with him about it, and he told him that it was a good piece of land, that there was forty to sixty acres of it that would be good farm land, and it had some very good timber on it and that it would cruise about 3,000,000 feet, if he remembered right.

Q. What did you pay for it?

A. That is my business.

Q. Did you buy it three years ago.

A. Three years ago.

Q. Well, then, you decline to answer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what is it worth?

A. It is worth $2,000.

Q. One hundred and sixty acres?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon witness testified, that this land last referred to is not railroad land and he does not know whether it is in the railroad limits or not. He believes it was not a homestead; he thinks it had been homesteaded and then commuted; that is the way he understood it. There were no improvements on it that he knew of; he never saw the land. He presumes, but did not know, that it had the usual cabin of a homestead settler. Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified:

Q. You know in a general way about homestead cabins, do you?

A. Yes, sir; in a general way I know.

Q. You know also, in a general way, about the way railroad companies try to get 2,300,000 acres of land that they are not entitled to?

Mr. Fenton: I object to that as incompetent, and I think improper on the part of Government counsel.

A. I believe that is their method.

Q. Do you know of any reason why, if a man has defrauded the Government of 160 acres of land by a homestead entry, that a railroad should take two million three hundred thousand acres that they are not entitled to?

Mr. Fenton: I protest against this inquiry on the part of Government counsel representing the Department of Justice.

A. The Government never let 160 acres go, or no other number of acres, that they didn't get their money for, except they let it go to some railroad corporation.

Mr. Fenton: I move to strike out the answer of the witness as immaterial and irrelevant, and as not responsive to this inquiry at all.

Q. What have you to say as to these large holdings that have been called to your attention, of the C. A. Smith Company and other companies as to the character of the land? Is it of the same general character that you have described, or different, and if different, in what respect?

A. The same general character of land. A great portion of it is good agricultural land when cleaned up.

Q. One of the railroad land examiners and cruisers has testified here that in the whole of Douglas County there is not to exceed 600 acres of these unsold railroad lands that are agricultural in character and that can be cultivated. What have you to say as to the correctness of that testimony?

A. He is absolutely mistaken. If he has ever been over any portion of it to speak of, he knows that he is wrong.

Mr. Fenton: Defendants move to strike out the answer as argumentative, not testimony.

Q. Now, your attention has been directed to the increase in the demand for these lands for timber purposes. I will ask you whether or not there has been, at any time within your recollection, an increase in the demand for lands for agricultural purposes and for home purposes, and if so, when?

A. In the last seven years, or say for the last ten—seven especially—there has been more demand for homes, for agricultural lands, than there has for any other character of lands. Land of all kinds has advanced in the last few years. I would say, from one to four hundred per cent—agricultural lands.

Q. Now, have markets improved for agricultural products in the mean time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What have you to say as to whether the development of that country has also been held back by lack of transportation facilities?

A. Very much so.

Q. Now, this homestead that you bought from the original homesteader, who lived upon it some seven years, as you testified, and which is situated about eighteen or twenty miles from Roseburg—about thirty miles, close to thirty.

Q. Thirty miles from Roseburg, do you know whether the intervening land between his homestead and the railroad was developed in the meantime or not?

A. No, sir.

Q. To what extent, if any, did that affect his opportunity to maintain a home there?

A. It affected him very materially. He was nearly thirty miles from railroad transportation, sixteen or eighteen miles from a school, for all he had no family; no wagon roads, and most impossible for a man without means to have made roads when he had to make them all across railroad quarters or lands and others.

Mr. Fenton: I thought that land was west of Roseburg?

A. East of Roseburg, in 27-1, section 2, right on the divide between the North Umpqua and what is called the East Umpqua, or the Middle Fork. I can put my finger right on it. (Witness points to place on map.)

Whereupon on recross examination witness testified, that the homestead he bought is in Section 2, Township 27 South, Range 1 West, and is in a Forest Reserve; it was unsurveyed when he took it, but it is now about three miles inside of the Forest Reserve, or something like that. He does not think that there is any railroad land adjoining it, that he knows of, and he thinks the nearest railroad section, according to the map, would be about five miles west. He does not know how long that Reserve has been there; he knows that that was one of the main drawbacks to his getting his title to it, the forest rangers opposed it and claimed that they wanted the land for a ranger's station and that part of it was timber land. Practically all of it is agricultural land, but it was the contention of the forest rangers that it was timber land; it was finally patented to the man from whom he bought it. He did not buy it for the timber primarily, and he did not buy it for a home; he bought it for an investment. Practically all of it is good agricultural land. Part of it is already cleared of timber; and the part that has timber on it is good agricultural land after it is cleared. Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified, that there are no settlements around this land that he applied to purchase and no road into it; and he believes that he could sell it for more for the value of the timber to some of these big timber men than he could for a man to go on to make a home of, but the quarter section would make some man a good home that would go on there and clean it up. There is some good farm land on it. In his judgment, the value of that land for agricultural purposes, after the timber was removed, and assuming that the land in that vicinitly was also similarly settled up, would be eight or ten thousand dollars.

Whereupon CAL HILEMAN, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, and being duly sworn, testified, that he is thirty-six years old, was raised close to Knoxville, Tennessee, and his post office address at the present time is Wendling, Oregon; his present occupation is ranching on a small ranch. He has lived in Oregon about twenty-two or twenty-three years. He lived on the McKenzie a few years, was east of The Dalles a couple of years, and lived on the Mohawk River eight or nine or ten years. The Mohawk River is located near Mabel, east of Eugene, in Lane County, Oregon. He was raised on a good farm, and his father had a good sized farm all his life. Farming has been his occupation up to the time he was married thirteen years ago; since that time he drove team four years for the Hyland Lumber Company, and T. R. Yeager, and the Sunset Lumber Company at Mabel. His experience has been such as to familiarize him with the farming industry of Western Oregon; he has worked quite a bit of land there. He has been in contact with the people engaged in farming, to a considerable extent. He is only familiar from memory, without referring to the map, with Section 33, Township 15 South, Range 1 East of these railroad lands involved in this suit. Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, he does not know much about the townships and ranges through that country, but has ridden over lots of that country, and is familiar with all the country through Marcola, on the Mohawk, in Township 16 South, Range 2 West. He lives on Section 33, Township 15 South, Range 1 West, and is acquainted with the lands about Mabel, in Township 15 South, Range 1 West, and a few miles north of Mabel. He is acquainted with the lands in the vicinity of Camp Creek some, and has ridden in there quite a bit. He rode that country from Marcola to Camp Creek, all through there —clear through to Walterville. He is acquainted very little south of Walterville. He has been over that country to Mabel and Wendling, Walterville, Mohawk and Camp Creek, shown on Defendants' Exhibit 259, and has traveled the wagon roads and has been in the hills through there, driving cattle, but did not know, of course, whether it was railroad land. He has traveled over them a number of times, other than on the public highways. He had cattle in there, and he was looking after cattle, and gathering cattle in the fall, and all through the summer he made from two to three trips a month salting cattle. He would go north of Mabel about three or four miles, and would go through about three or four miles above Wendling. He never gathered cattle east of Wendling, that is, run cattle in there, but he has bought cattle east, clear through all over the valley, and is acquainted with these lands east of Mabel about seven or eight miles, and about three to five miles, something like that, above Wendling, and as far as Mabel, and about six or seven miles east of Wendling; west of Wendling he does not know how many miles, but a good ways. South of Camp Creek he has not traveled very much. He has a general knowledge of the entire country from Mabel, in Township 15 South, Range 1 West, to Township 17 South, Range 1 West, and gained that knowledge by traveling along the public highways and ranging cattle through that country. His duties with reference to the stock would carry him off the public highways, and over this land generally, and he is acquainted with the general character of that land, and with its agricultural and grazing possibilities, and with the growths that are on the land, such as timber, and is acquainted with the hills, and the general formation of the country. His father's farm, that he speaks of having been raised on, was at Mabel, in the same section that Mabel is in; he could not tell the description, or what section, township or range, except as they have referred to Defendants' Exhibit 259. He looked at his deed and thought his land was in Section 33, Township 15 South, Range 1 East; that is his place, which is about a half mile east of Mabel; and his father's farm is contiguous to his lands, where his father has lived about twenty-three years, engaged in farming, and he farms it all the time, every year; and that has been his occupation since he has lived there; he has raised a family. From his acquaintance with this land in the area he has described, in his judgment, fifty to sixty per cent would be agricultural land, that is, land that could be tilled, and actually cultivated. The balance of the land would be useful for grazing. The grazing land in that vicinity is good; it raises good grass. He applied to the railroad company to purchase land from them; he thought it was about seven years ago, but it is in the neighborhood of about ten years ago. This land is located in Section 33, Township 15 South, Range 1 East, where they adjoin the land he now lives on; it was a good piece of land, which he wanted to farm. At that time he had not bought the place he now lives on, but he wanted this piece of railroad land to live on. The company offered to sell him the land, but he wanted to buy eighty acres, and they said the 320 acres was for sale, at $10.00 an acre and he wanted eighty acres of it. He did not make an application for 320 acres; they did not put any price on the eighty-acre tract he wanted, and so he just dropped it. The railroad lands generally in the vicinity of his place and that of his father's farm, are good. He has been farming railroad land. He bought 120 acres of railroad land and has been farming it for five or six years; he bought that from some party other than the railroad company. He could not see any difference in that land from the other lands in that locality. There was no timber, to speak of, on the lands that he and his father have, very little. The growth of timber in that general vicinity is pretty good. He had to clear some of his land in order to farm it; he cut the underbrush, burned it, and the stumps still remain; he plowed around the stumps. It had been timbered land prior to the time he began to cultivate it. The Hyland Lumber Company bought it, and logged the timber off, and he bought the stump land. It belonged to an old gentleman by the name of Wortman, who died, and the timber had to be sold; the Hyland Lumber Company bought the timber, and he bought the land. The Hyland Lumber Company is composed of Hyland Brothers. The timber on this piece that he bought was good, but scattered and light. There had been trees growing on his father's place in patches, but there was about 100 acres of it that he did not think ever had any timber on it. There is timber growing on some of this land that he mentioned as between Mabel and Camp Creek. There are places in there similar to the places that he is farming and that his father is farming. Referring to his neighbors through the neighborhood there, there are Adams, Ernests, Hammonds, Riggs, Van Meter, Smith, Pickwitt, Arnold, Downings and a number of others, who live in that vicinity where he does, and are engaged in farming. That is a general farming community in that locality. He knows by hearsay that the railroad company owns considerable land in that vicinity, of which he speaks, and he knows that he applied to purchase some of it. Whereupon on cross examination witness testified, that he could not say how long ago the land that his father owns had been deeded by the man, or the persons who preceded his father, or when the railroad company sold it, but he thinks it was a great many years ago. It is situated on the Mohawk River, and his father has cleared about 130 or 135 acres and owns about 270 acres. He could not state whether it was all railroad land. There is quite a mountain on his father's place, about thirty or thirty-five acres, maybe forty acres; most of the land in the bottom is cleared, he thinks there are eighteen acres up on the high bench, the rest of it is on the Mohawk River bottom. He does not know whether that place was bought from the railroad company twenty-five or thirty years ago. The improvements on it are fairly good; a barn and frame house with six or seven rooms, and has a fire place and chimney.

Q. And the garden there is old, so old that you have to manure it to keep it up?

A. Well, I suppose they do.

Q. About like one of these farms down in the Willamette Valley, as far as development and age is concerned? Is that right?

A. Yes, sir. Some of it has been farmed a good many years.

Q. Some of it has been farmed so long that it really don't raise wheat very well without it is summer-fallowed, or crops are rotated?

A. Well, he has some mighty fine wheat on it.

Q. I know, but he has to have oats one year and then has wheat the next year?

A. Well, I couldn't say for that, whether he changes it around that way or not.

Whereupon witness testified, that that is good farming land if he changes the crops around. He does not summer-fallow very much. He does not sheep it though when he does summer-fallow. He has no sheep, but has a few cattle. His father never had any cattle to speak of, just a few horses; besides cattle, he has four or six head of cattle. The place witness has in Section 33, Township 15 South, Range 1 East, is just above his father's, on the Mohawk River, which runs through his place, which is just a small stream. They used to log down that stream before the railroad was built, all the logs that they had that came from that watershed, came down the Mohawk River, and went to Coburg, which is somewhere in the neighborhood of twenty-two or twenty-three miles away from his place. He owns 112 acres there, and his land was railroad land. He bought from the Wortman heirs; Wortman died and the Wortman estate had to sell the timber; and the Hyland Lumber Company bought the timber and paid $400 for it and he paid $400 for the land. He couldn't say positively how long the Wortmans owned the land, but several years though; it was not improved by them at all, but was wild land and he improved it and built a house on it. He has one acre cleared now of stumps on that land, and the stumps still remain there on the balance. After the Hyland Lumber Company logged it off, he slashed it and burned it over and sowed it to grass, and he pastures part of it, that is, he did that at first. He has about four acres only in cultivation, sown to crops, besides the grass, and he raises on this four acres oat-hay to feed his cows and horses in the winter time. He raises just a little corn down in his garden for family use, has a few head of hogs, for home use, he runs all the way from ten to fifty head of cattle and they run on the range all the way from two to seven miles from his place; he has a fine range there over seven or eight miles of country, or a good deal larger than that, and can pasture the railroad land if there is any railroad land in there, and in that way he gets some pasturage by going over a big area; they can go seven or eight miles without going through a fence, they can go a long ways, several hundred, he thinks; they can go to the Blue River and clear on through, if they have a mind to do it, which is over thirty miles. Stockmen sometimes drive in, but he does not think that they herd any during the summer months. They brand the stock with a registered brand and turn them loose, and then in the fall come and gather them up. They pasture these railroad lands just the same as the other lands.

Q. The railroad company pays the taxes on the lands, and the farmers in these boundaries get the benefit of it—in pasturage, I mean?

A. Yes, sir; we turn our stock out and let them go.

Q. Well, now, if you didn't have any outside pasture, these people that drive their herds in there in the spring and go up and get them in the fall, they wouldn't be able to do that?

A. No, sir; they would not.

Q. If all the quarter sections were fenced in there, and everybody had to confine his stock to his own quarter section, the pasturage for each man would not be as great, would it?

A. Well, he would just have to keep what the place would furnish grass for.

Whereupon witness testified, that he would not want to keep very many cattle on 160 acres, but that amount of land would keep quite a few sheep for awhile. It would keep them longer than one season, and if one don't keep the sheep too long, it would keep from 100 to 150 head.

Q. Yes, you can keep 150 head a month, but you could not keep them all summer?

A. Oh, yes.

Whereupon witness testified, that they could not run sheep and cattle together very well, they won't run together very well, and won't pasture over the same grass very well. He has never tried running hogs and cattle together, and he does not know about that. He is a farmer and has a separate pasture for his hogs. He knows that sheep won't follow cattle and cattle won't follow sheep. He could not tell how many bushels of grain he or his father had threshed on their places, witness has not threshed any. He could not tell how much his father threshed on his place this year; he had wheat and oats and he could not tell whether he hauled that to market, but he knows that he feeds some to his stock on his place and sells lots of it over the neighborhood, to fellows who live on places and do not raise any to feed their cattle in the winter time, like himself. Lots of these farmers up there come to his father's place for wheat and oats. These farmers raise lots of hay, but sell their hay and buy oats. They sell their hay to timber companies, the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company and the Coast Range Lumber Company. There are several parties on these timber lands that have all the way from fifteen to fifty acres on bottom lands and uphill land, too. Mr. Pickwitt has somewhere about twenty-five or thirty acres on that hill land. He thinks Pickwitt has owned his land twenty-three or twenty-four years. He could not tell if it was a donation claim, but he thinks he homesteaded part of it. He does not think it was railroad land. It is on the Mohawk River right there close to Mabel, just about a mile from the Mohawk River. He does not think that there is any branch that runs through this place. Mabel is a small place and there is nothing there but a saw mill; he could not say how many men work in that saw mill, but he thinks somewhere in the neighborhood of about 250 at the present time. The saw mill is owned by the Coast

Range Lumber Company. He does not know how many acres of timber they have there; the closest timber is within a mile of the mill. They get their logs to the mill by their own logging railroad. He does not think they ship any timber. He could not tell how much lumber they cut per day; he does not think they cut very much at the present time. Some of the men who work there live in their houses. They have only about, he thinks, somewhere in the neighborhood of twenty new houses, and there is quite a good many in tents, and other old houses, other shacks. The company maintains part of these houses, in which the men live, while they work, and the rest of the men live in tents and old houses. It is really a logging town; there is a store and post office there, besides the mill. He could not tell when the saw mill was established; there has been a mill there for years. It is a logging country. There is timber back aways, lots of it.

Q. This land that you speak of as having good soil, isn't it true that where there is heavy timber on this land, as a general thing, the soil is better than where there is no timber?

A. Well, that may be true, or most of it is.

Whereupon witness testified, that he thinks the market price of a good quarter section of timber would be from three to five thousand dollars, but he could not tell the stumpage value of timber in that vicinity, and does not know of any sold at this time; he has heard of it being sold, lots of it, but they give so much for the bulk of it. He thinks that Pickwitt's place was a homestead.

Q. Did you see any homestead cabins up there, where they proved up and sold out—got their titles and sold out to timber people?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What became of their cabins?

A. They burned down.

Q. Where the timber was, if the cabin was in the timber, it didn't burn that, did it?

A. Well, part of those cabins there was no timber within—oh, there was a lot of them was three or four-acre tracts; there was an opening where they had built their cabins.

Q. They had cleared out three or four acres, such a matter?

A. No, there was no timber there—never was.

Q. They built their cabins in this opening?

A. Yes.

Q. And the rest of it was timber.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after they proved up, they sold the land to timber companies?

A. Yes, sir; Booth-Kelly Lumber Company.

Q. Booth-Kelly Lumber Company bought a good deal of that?

A. I think so.

Q. And they are logging it off?

A. Well, they have logged part of it. Some of it they have not.

Q. Well, then, this land up there that is worth $3,000 to $5,000 a quarter is chiefly valuable at the present time for the timber that is on it, isn't it—at this time?

Mr. Rabb: Do you understand the question?

A. No, I didn't.

(Question read.)

A. With the timber on it, it is, yes, sir.

Q. That is the principal object that makes it sell, is the good timber on it?

Whereupon witness testified that he never made an offer on any of this railroad land, or any application to purchase any of it, other than this eighty acres that he has spoken of.

Q. How often did you go out in the summer time to salt your cattle in these woods, in the mountains?

A. Well, from two to three times a month, and sometimes oftener when I wasn't busy.

Whereupon witness testified, that the way he recognizes his cattle is that they are branded with a registered brand; other people go out and salt their cattle, too, in the summer time. They generally turn the cattle out on the range sometime in March, or April, and gather them, sometimes not until November, and sometimes not until December. They let the calves run with the cattle out in the woods until fall, and brand the calves the next spring and turn them out. Sometimes cattle disappear, but he does not know what becomes of them, that is about the only risk that they run. They get free pasturage during the summer time. Whereupon on redirect examination, witness testified, that he raised on his place besides hay and oats, cabbage, potatoes, beets, rutabagas, parsnips, carrots, corn, tomatoes, cucumbers, peaches and apples, raised practically all kinds of fruits and vegetables. He keeps a few hogs and feeds them on his place. He never measured the acres he had planted to oats and hay exactly, but he thinks there are only about three or four acres of it. The land down in that country is about the same. It is situated about the same as his own place. It is a broken country. There would be patches maybe of four or five acres that is nice level garden land, and that condition is true in reference to where his father's farm is located.

Q. Now, Mr. Hileman, what is your opinion as to whether a man could go onto 160 acres, and settle with his family on 160 acres of land, generally in that vicinity, and make a living?

A. He can go on there with 160 acres, and he can make him a living there.

Q. Does that apply to all of this land that you have testified to, between Mabel and Camp Creek, that you have been over?

A. Yes, sir. I don't think there is a quarter section in there but what a man can make a living on.

Whereupon on recross examination, witness testified:

Q. He could make a living just in the same way that you have made a living, wouldn't he, Mr. Hileman?

A. Well, a man can make a living on that piece of ground without working out.

Q. I don't mean working out, but by having stock and allowing it to run on the range in the summer time, and in the winter, why, he would have feed enough upon these open pieces that he could clear to take care of his stock through the winter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the way he would make his living until he cleared an acre more?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did you ever clear any of this heavy timber land?

A. Yes, sir; I have cleared it.

Q. With big fir saw timber?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you do that?

A. Well, I have helped dynamite them.

Q. And how big are these stumps that you have to dynamite?

A. Some of them was awful large—five or six foot through.

Q. How big are the roots?

A. Oh, they are very large.

Q. And how much of that tree, you might say, is underground—take one of those big trees?

A. I couldn't tell you, but there is a lot of them underground.

Q. Pretty near as much wood under ground as there is above ground?

A. Oh, no; not that bad. But there is some.

Q. A very large amount? Those roots go down into the ground how deep?

A. I couldn't say; but some of them, I think I would be safe in saying, five to six feet deep.

Q. A fir tree doesn't have a tap-root, as a rule, does it?

A. Some of them has; a few of them go down.

Q. But the big roots that support a big fir tree are roots that branch out?

A. Yes, a ways; and then go down.

Q. How far from the tree do those roots run sometimes?

A. A good long ways.

Q. Probably thirty feet, don't they?

A. Yes; I have taken them out further away than that.

Q. They are as big as your body, some of those roots are?

A. Not that far away; about like my arm.

Q. I mean, close to the tree they are as big as your body sometimes.

A. I don't think so out that far.

Q. Well, how far?

A. At from six to eight or ten feet.

Q. And under the ground?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Sometimes on top of the ground as they leave the tree?

A. Occasionally you will find them on top of the ground.

Q. Now, after you have dynamited a stump, what is then left to do?

A. Is to fill up the hole.

Q. Well, how big a hole does it make?

A. It makes a pretty big hole in the ground sometimes.

Q. Pretty near put a house in, couldn't you?

A. Well, a small house, you might.

Q. What do you do after you fill up the hole?

A. It is ready for farming.

Q. What do you do with these roots when you get them out?

A. Pile them and burn them.

Q. Do you use donkey engines to pull these things together in a large pile there, and have a big fire in the winter?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have seen them do that down on the Nehalem, haven't you?

A. I have seen them do that down there on the mill.

Q. Haven't you seen them do that down on the Necanicum and all this heavy timbered coast?

A. No, sir.

Q. Take a donkey engine and pull them together, and get a pile of roots sometimes higher than this house and bigger than this building?

A. I use a timber block.

Q. Block and tackle?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a team?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you have to do that for?

A. Put two or three of them together so I could burn them up.

Q. Have them into a pile?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Get a pile as big as this courthouse?

A. Oh, no. Get three or four or five roots together and burn them up.

Q. Well, suppose you went in there to clear the land, with the timber on it, the first thing you would do would be to sell the timber, wouldn't it?

A. Well, I have cleared it on the McKenzie that we would fell the timber and burn it up, big logs, heaps of it.

Q. You wouldn't do that if the timber was worth a dollar and a quarter or fifty cents stumpage even?

A. I wouldn't nowadays.

Q. The first thing to do with this quarter section of fine agricultural land that is heavily timbered would be to sell the timber?

A. I would clear enough to make my garden.

Q. You could do that with a space as big as this room, couldn't you?

A. No, not that small. I would want an acre or an acre and a half.

Q. That wouldn't take long to get an acre or an acre and a half? You could grub that out and clear that out in one winter, couldn't you?

A. I could, all but the big stumps.

Q. After you had got the place for your house picked out, and got your place dug out for your garden, and then the forest was on the rest of the land, the first thing that you would think about would be to sell that timber to somebody that would pay the best price for it, wouldn't it?

A. Yes, sir; and get it off as quick as possible.

Q. And then, after you had sold the timber you would have left the stumps cut up eight or ten feet above the ground by the timber people?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Sometimes twelve feet above the ground?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So as to avoid a heavy butt?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They saw those off, don't they, those timber men?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Go and get a ladder and put a man, and another one up on top of the ladder ten feet high, or a platform, and saw it off and let it fall?

A. Put in a spring board.

Q. A man takes care of himself and gets out of the way the best he can?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you are left with the stump there, that is ten or twelve feet high sometimes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are left with all the small timber that is not saw timber?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the brush?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there is brush and debris and stuff, and what do you do with that—burn it?

A. I slash it down, finish slashing, and burn it up.

Q. After you have burned it, then what do you do?

A. Well, I go to work, if I ain't going to plow it right away, and seed it.

Q. Seed it down to grass and get a little pasturage that way?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You run it that way for awhile?

A. Yes, sir; until it runs out, and then I plow it.

Q. You cannot plow it very well with these big stumps in there?

A. I have plowed acres and acres of it.

Q. Land that has stumps?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is a good deal like plowing with what we call a peavine mower around these oak hills in Tennessee, isn't it?

A. Yes, something similar, the same thing.

Q. I have been there—I know.

A. I can show you hundreds of acres farmed, though, with all the big stumps in.

Q. You couldn't run the machine over it, could you, to cut it?

A. Cut it with a mower, drive around the stumps the same as you go around with the plow.

Q. Well now, that is about the way it is cleared, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir, that is the way the most of it is cleared up in the country—all of it practically.

Q. And the result is they haven't got very much cleared?

A. They farm it with the stumps in all the time.

Q. It has been about fifty or sixty years this country has been settled, hasn't it?

A. Yes, sir, somewheres in that neighborhood. Oh, it hasn't been that long.

Q. The first settlement in the Willamette Valley, four miles north of Salem, was in 1830, wasn't it?

A. I couldn't tell you that, sir.

Q. Eighty-two years ago. Well, there is wheat land in the Willamette Valley that has been farmed over sixty years, isn't there?

A. I don't think so.

Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified:

Q. These lands that you have spoken of as having been cultivated around the stumps, where was that land located, in the vicinity of these lands that you have described as being acquainted with?

A. Yes, my own place and Pickwitt's, and all of those places.

Whereupon J. P. CURRIN, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he is sixty-seven years old; resides at Cottage Grove, Lane County, Oregon, and has resided there most of the time for forty-five years. He is a pharmacist and does surveying and teaching also. He was born in Virginia; has also lived in Creswell six years, which is nine miles north of Cottage Grove and is in the same locality. He has done county surveying, also for the Oregon and California Railroad Company, and government surveying. He assisted in the survey connecting the land claims to the line of the Oregon and California Railroad, the deeds for the right of way, in 1871, that is, where the lines intersected, crossed the land claims, he would take the distance back to the established point, referring to donation claims, homesteads and the government section lands; that is, checking up right of way matters, in connection with the right of way the company desired, with the public surveys as evidenced by donation land claims, homesteads, and other lands. This was prior to the time the track had been laid and the road constructed. He worked for the Company across Lane County perhaps a week or ten days, from one county line north to the south line, excepting within the corporate limits of Eugene City. He has done government surveying—surveyed in six different counties—Benton, Lane, Crook, Grant, Umatilla and Union, and had a number of government surveying contracts. He was county surveyor less than a year—the latter part of 1870 and part of 1871. He is acquainted with the agricultural conditions existing in Lane County, and referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, showing the lands involved in this suit in green markings, he is more particularly acquainted with the southern part of Lane County, including some of township 19. He is very little acquainted with the lands in Lane County north of township 19. He surveyed in the north part of the county on the donation claims or deeded lands more particularly, and surveyed 20 south 1 west, 22 south 2 west, and 23 south 3 west, and he thinks he has been over this country generally so as to acquaint him with the general character of the land. In his opinion thirty to forty per cent of that land is agricultural, and the remainder could be used for grazing or orchards. Quite a large per cent of it that is too rough to plow or to put into a field, might be planted in orchards. The rough land could go back to the forest. Some of the rough land is steep and rocky, and it would not be practicable for any other purpose. He has not surveyed on the railroad lands in the western part of Lane County, but he has been over that country, it is smooth, mountainous country. Speaking of what is along the road where he has traveled, he would think that land would average perhaps a little greater per cent agricultural than in the eastern part, that is, a greater per cent of it would be agricultural land. When he surveyed these townships he found settlers in there. These townships were partly-surveyed, the heads of the valley, the three townships were surveyed and settlers were there, and settlers are in these townships now.

Q. Now, in 20 south, 1 west, Mr. Currin, would this land, in your opinion, if divided into 160-acre tracts, and not by quarter sections but by 40-acre subdivisions, would that support a family if a man should settle on that land?

A. Did you say 40 acres or 160?

Q. 160 in forty-acre tracts, but not by quarter section.

A. In a large majority of them they could, yes.

Q. Is that same condition true of the lands that you have testified concerning in Lane County?

A. Yes, it is. Perhaps a little more favorable in that township than in some of the others.

Q. Now, Mr. Currin, are all the railroad lands covered with timber? Are they timbered lands, all of them?

A. If you mean saw timber, I say no.

Whereupon witness testified that he applied to purchase lands from the railroad company in his wife's name about five years ago, located in section 17, township 20, south, range 3 west. His wife owns land in section 17, and one forty in 18. That land is agricultural and fruit land, and is used for raising fruit and other agricultural purposes, and his wife has owned it five years. The character of the railroad land which his wife applied to purchase is hill and bench land. His wife's farm is the west half of the southwest quarter, and this he applied for is the east half of the southwest quarter and is contiguous to the farm of his wife. The land his wife applied to buy has some plowed land on it today, and there are about fifteen acres which could be plowed and put in. It was a timbered tract, but is cleared up. The railroad company contracted that land to a party and he cleared it off, took the timber off, and then changed his contract to another piece west of that, so it left that one clear and comparatively ready to plow. That was the land his wife applied to buy. The prior contract covered this land and it was thrown up and the party contracted for the forty west of the tract owned by his wife. He knows of one tract of one thousand acres of logged off land in Lane Conuty, which is situated from two to six miles southwest of Cottage Grove, which was purchased by M. H. Anderson for the purpose of using the land for agricultural purposes. It was his understanding that he paid five dollars an acre. Timber had been all over it—it was merchantable saw timber, but not very thick, only in patches some good timber. The timber in Lane County that is found high on the mountains, averages very well. Get higher on the mountain, it would be heavier, and it varies over the county according to locality. The altitude has considerable to do with it. There is quite a good deal of fruit raised in Lane County. It is not a new industry in that section of the country; there are old orchards; there are a great many new orchards coming in, but there are more old. Commercially speaking, it is a new industry. He is acquainted with the fruit raising business in a small way. He thinks the mountain or rolling land is better to raise fruit on; it does better at higher altitude.

Q. What is your opinion, Mr. Currin, as to the effect upon the settlement of this country by the sale of the lands of the O. & C. Company to large timber holders and the withdrawal of the lands from the market?

A. I think it will hold the country back from settlement a great deal.

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified that he had lived in Lane County about forty-three years, residing all that time at Cottage Grove, excepting about six years when he was at Creswell, which is nine miles north of Cottage Grove. Cottage Grove is on the line of the Oregon and California Railroad, and is one of the old settled portions of Lane County. Quite a portion of the land around Cottage Grove and Creswell is in the valley. Quite a portion of it but not most of it, was taken up under the donation law. The valley at Cottage Grove is about a mile wide. The Willamette Valley narrows below there. There are some places below there that is narrower than it is at Cottage Grove. It opens out at that point, and then comes in above. The level land in the valley at Creswell is about a mile or more wide, but take some of the rolling land, take up the swale there, it would be several miles. Including the foothills, the valley, he would think, at Creswell is about three miles wide, and at Cottage Grove about two miles wide. He was employed about ten days in connection with the right of way matters, checking up the corners or ties of the right of way deeds on lands deeded as right of way of the Oregon and California Railroad Company, in 1871, when they were locating the line through Lane County. He was working under a right of way man, and with that exception, he has never had any employment with the Southern Pacific Company or the Oregon and California Railroad Company. He includes in his classification of thirty to forty per cent of the lands which he had surveyed through or been over in Lane County as agricultural lands, lands that may be covered with some kind of timber, but which when cleared the soil would be good and sufficiently level to put to some agricultural use.

Q. And the balance of the land that you say might be used for grazing purposes is too rough to use for ordinary agricultural purpose?

A. Particularly steep.

Q. Yes. So that in making this classification of agricultural, you take into account the topography of the country as well as the character of the soil?

A. Yes.

Q. And really those are the two controlling elements that you use in classifying agricultural lands?

A. I do, yes, sir.

Q. Now, much of this land that you have thus classed as agricultural is covered with the heaviest timber in Lane County, isn't it?

A. Quite a good deal of it, yes, sir.

Q. That is to say, the better class of timber and the heavier stand grows, especially fir timber, where there is pretty fair soil? Isn't that true?

A. I think so, yes.

Whereupon witness testified that he thinks the saw mill men prefer timber which is from three to four or five feet thick at the butt. They will cut it perhaps two feet to four feet, and the height of the tree will run up two hundred feet in the larger timber. The largest tree that he has ever seen is one standing on the side of the road as one goes into Bohemia, which is said to be ten feet at the butt. He has observed that several times. He is not capable of answering what per cent of the total forests of Lane County would range from say six to ten feet at the butt. He is no cruiser, has never had any experience in cruising, and is not a saw mill man. The eighty acres of land his wife applied to purchase is railroad land in section 17, township 20 south, range 3 west, and that was about five years ago. It was land adjoining that owned by himself and wife about one mile north and two miles west of Cottage Grove. Hanson Brothers were the first purchasers of the tract which his wife applied to purchase. Hanson Brothers had a contract, which he supposes was obtained from twelve to fifteen years ago, and they were three or four years in paying up. Hanson Brothers first had a contract on the eighty east of his wife, and after Hanson Brothers took the good timber off—they cut timber for railroad wood and when they got that off, they threw that up and took the west half of it, which was heavily timbered, saw timber. That is, these people bought the land under a contract and cut the timber off while holding it under contract for railroad wood and sold the wood to the railroad company, and then they made a change with the company and took the one west. They simply let the land go back to the railroad. They had no deed, only a contract, and that is the tract that his wife applied to purchase. That tract had been cut over for the cordwood that was on it; that is, about twenty-five acres had been cut over for cordwood purposes. The balance of the land gets up on the summit where it is brush and some oak timber, very little fir. It was chiefly valuable for raising grain and fruit in particular, when his wife applied for it. At that time the timber was already off, and it was very little work to take the stumps out. That had been railroad land about twelve or fifteen years before it was purchased by Hanson Brothers, and had come back to the railroad company in the way of which he speaks. With that exception, neither he nor his wife ever applied to purchase any railroad land, or made any application to file on any of these timber lands. He knows that a great many did, particularly around Cottage Grove, Roseburg and Eugene. Timber first became a matter of inquiry as an investment and as a purchase, somewhere in the 90s in Lane County. There was a widespread depression in 1893 in business and in financial circles in Oregon and in the United States, and it was shortly after that that the timber inquiry began to develop. This demand or inquiry for timber investment was wholly among speculators. The company that got the information from him was in the East. He thinks the market began to become active in Lane County about 1900—it might have been before that. He thinks the timber was pretty much all taken about that time in his country. The timber became a matter of inquiry that was active and acute, in his judgment, and was at the highest tide of timber activity about 1900. The timber land was bought up for speculation and for investment by these timber people.

Q. Have you ever stopped to make an investigation to ascertain about how many acres of timber lands in Lane County that had been taken up under the timber and stone act, and under homesteads, and under preemptions, and under scrip, and in various ways, including the lands which have been purchased from the railroad company by timber investors and millmen, are now owned by mill men and timber men outside of the railroad company?

A. I could not tell what proportion. I think a large majority of our good timber is owned by those companies.

Q. That class of people.

A. Yes.

Whereupon witness testified that Booth-Kelly Lumber Company, Row River Lumber Company, Star Company, Brown Lumber Company, Chambers Company, Spriggs or Briggs Company and several others are manufacturing their timber and shipping it and using it and making business in Lane County. There are several other mills there. There are seven mills on that twenty mile road running to Bohemia, but some of them are not running. That railroad is the Oregon & Southeastern and runs from Cottage Grove into Bohemia, and has on it seven or eight mills which manufacture lumber to be shipped out of the state if they can get a market for it. He thinks Booth-Kelly Lumber Company has a large outside trade, and that these mills on the line leading up to Bohemia ship outside when they can get orders. He only knows by hearsay that the Hyland Lumber Company has large mills up in that country. The present way of getting rid of the timber on these lands is to get the timber off, manufacture and sell it in the markets of the world or use it for improvements. Before the land could be used for agricultural or horticultural or other purposes, the timber should be removed, so that there would be a period of time when the development of the country in the timbered countries is to take the timber off, manufacture and ship it and get the best price for it possible.

Q. Well now then, suppose that the company in this case, Mr. Currin, had sold these 160 acres to these so-called actual settlers within the last seven or eight years, and had allowed them to pick the best quarter sections of timber in Lane County still unsold by the company, and had sold it to them for $2.50 an acre, or $400 for a quarter section, and had given them a good title, wouldn't they have had to sell the timber first to get the country developed.

A. I know of persons that have cut it down and burned it up.

Q. I know, but that would be destructive, wouldn't it?

A. It would.

Q. Wouldn't they first utilize the land by selling the timber to somebody?

A. It would be the better way, I would think, yes, sir.

Q. That would be the better way.

A. Yes.

Q. Well now then, wouldn't they be able, if they wanted to sell, to get a better price from timber investors and practical sawmill men selling the land outright. In this record in some cases the testimony shows as high as $5000 a quarter. Wouldn't that be the way most of these timber quarters would go—just as the homestead timber quarters and the cash entry timber quarters, and the entries taken under the timber and stone act have gone? Wouldn't they go to the timber people?

A. As a matter of finance, I think they would.

Q. Yes, that is the history of the way these things would go?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the way they have gone?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As far as they have got title in the main?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that if we should sell every quarter section of good timber in Lane County to these so-called actual settlers, and give them a good title, the title to that land would pass in a year or two to the timber investors, wouldn't it?

A. In a majority of cases I think it would.

Q. And they would use it for speculation, or hold it for investment, or manufacture the timber into lumber to get their money out?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you say you know of a thousand acres of logged off land which was sold at five dollars per acre to a Mr. Anderson. Where was that land—this side of Comstock?

A. It lays east from Comstock. From the summit of the Calapooia mountains down to the Coast Fork.

Q. Yes, it was land that the timber was taken off by the Comstock mills and other sawmill men?

A. Yes, it was taken off by a mill at Latham. It comes east.

Q. Taken off by a mill at Latham?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what these timber people got off these lands in the way of timber, and how long they were engaged in cutting the timber off and manufacturing it?

A. The Chambers Company are just finishing it up.

Q. How long were they engaged in that work of sawing it into lumber?

A. Perhaps two or three years. Not any longer than that.

Q. From whom did they buy these timber lands?

A. Well, from settlers principally.

Q. That is, these people that went in there and settled on these so-called timber lands, either by homestead or pre-emption or in any other way, sold it to a sawmill, got their money, and the sawmill company then cut the timber off, and they finally sold the logged off land to Mr. Anderson. That is the history of it, isn't it?

A. That is mainly the history of it, yes, sir.

Q. Now, what is Mr. Anderson doing with it?

A. It is an investment to sell out in smaller tracts for agriculture.

Q. He bought it on speculation?

A. I think so.

Q. Where does he live?

A. Cottage Grove.

Q. He is a real estate man, isn't he?

A. No, he is a timber man.

Q. Well, he is a man that bought a thousand acres, as a capitalist, at five dollars an acre, with the idea that he would subdivide it, and sell it to poor men who would go on there and settle? Is that the idea?

A. Men of limited capital, yes, sir.

Q. That is what I mean? Well, has he sold any of it yet?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. What kind of stumps are on this land?

A. Well, the timber is rather a poor quality, only some thick patches of it.

Q. Not as heavy as generally speaking?

A. Easily cleared. Some of it is already clear.

Whereupon witness testified that the elevation at that point runs up from the river to perhaps five hundred feet. He has an orchard up about five hundred feet that is immune from these frosts in the early spring and fall in Lane County. When one gets up 400 or 500 feet they are above the frost line. One can get into the frost line again getting still higher; they get into the fruit line when they get up about 500 feet. There is an intermediate belt where one gets above the frost line that is lower, and he thinks one will get to a place where they are in the frost line above, but they have no land in that part of the county that would come under that class. He has never noticed any orchards or things of that kind, where the elevation was 1500 feet high. There is perhaps one exception to that in 20 south, 2 west, where there is on orchard, he thinks, in the neighborhood of 1500 feet, which is now twenty years old, on a donation claim; he thinks, in section 18. A good many of the settlers in some of these townships through which he has surveyed, had gone on to these unsurveyed lands and taken claims and were unable to obtain title, and therefore petitioned the Government to survey it, so they could perfect titles.

Q. And some of those are still living there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They have not all sold to timber people?

A. No, sir.

Q. These that are living there, most of them, are on the streams at the headwaters?

A. On it or near to it.

Q. How?

A. At a slight elevation, some of them, but near to the streams.

Q. They are not very numerous, though?

A. No.

Q. Now, you say that a large majority of the quarter sections, in forties, not in quarter sections but in forties, running along there in a T-shape, or so that the forties abut each other, in the particular sections of the country that you have visited, would support a family. Now, you mean by that, after the timber was taken off that the man could make a living on the place?

3403

A. Yes, sir, timber and brush; brush in particular.

Q. Well, if he had to confine his pasturage of his stock on a quarter section of this land that was timbered land, make a living that way, he would have a pretty hard time, wouldn't he?

A. On some of them he would, but on I think the majority of them he would not.

Q. He would have to sell the timber to get something out of it as he went along?

A. According to his means, of course.

Q. Do you have any idea about how many people in your neighborhood made application under this $2.50 an acre proposition to get some of these good quarter sections of railroad land that has timber on it—in your county or in your neighborhood?

A. I do not. I don't think there are but very few.

Whereupon witness testified that most of the railroad timbered lands were gone. Booth-Kelly Lumber Company bought up the biggest portion of them; also the Weyerhauser Company. Very few people around Cottage Grove, that he knows of applied for any of these railroad timbered lands. He did not do so, but was advised to do so. There were lots of fellows running around through Western Oregon about the time this suit was commenced and before, in 1907 and 1908, trying to get contracts to locate people on these lands and to get one hundred dollars or more out of everybody to do it, and they induced a few there in their neighborhood, not many, to do that. These brokers were telling these people how much timber they could get in that way, he thinks that is correct. He went to school at Corvallis from 1868 to the summer of 1870, and graduated in the first class at the old college at Corvallis in June, 1870, which was the old Southern Methodist College preceding the Oregon Agricultural College.

Whereupon, on redirect examination, witness testified that the money that a man could get for the sale of this timber would materially assist in clearing up his land and putting it in a condition to be cultivated, if he should settle upon one of these claims which has timber on it. There are three eighties of railroad land in section 17, including the one adjoining his place, that would make very good homes for three families.

Q. I understood you to testify on direct examination that the majority of the quarter sections in the area that you were acquainted with would furnish support to a family—would be suitable for settlement purposes, in other words?

A. For some families it would, yes, sir.

Q. What do you mean by that, Mr. Currin? Please explain.

A. Well, some families can live on half what others can. People from Europe can live on one of our roughest quarter sections. It would require better land for an ordinary American family to live on.

Q. You mean that people in poor circumstances could make settlements on there and gradually develop the land?

A. I do; yes, sir.

Whereupon witness testified that the demand for agricultural lands has increased during the last ten or fifteen years, and the public lands have been almost entirely taken up in Southern Lane County, and there is no land there in Lane County that would be good farm land without clearing, that has not been taken.

Q. To your knowledge, have any people settled in this timbered area prior to the time when timber was valuable, and have cleared the land off, burning what would be now termed merchantable timber?

A. Yes, sir; there is a great many, quite a good many.

Q. Are those lands still used for agricultural purposes?

A. They are, yes.

Q. Occupied as homes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Currin, if a man wanted a tract of this land for a home as a farmer, and wanted to engage in the farming business, what, if anything, would prevent him from selling the timber and retaining the title to the land?

A. I do not understand your question exactly. Do you mean what legal reason would be in the way? Until a man has perfected his homestead he cannot sell it.

Q. I am not speaking of a homestead. I am speaking, if a man would buy a 160-acre tract of this land that had timber on it, merchantable timber, at $2.50 an acre, if he desired to engage in the farming business, I am asking you if he could not sell his timber and keep his title to the land, using the money that he would obtain from his timber to assist in clearing up the land.

A. Yes. There would be nothing in the way at all, that I can see.

Q. As a matter of fact, Mr. Currine, isn't it true that, as an agricultural proposition, this timbered area is a better proposition today than it was when these settlers first came in there and burned the timber?

A. It is; yes, sir.

Q. They now can sell the timber and use the money in assisting in clearing the land.

A. The timber is an asset now while it was in their way before, and it was an expense to them.

Q. How about the increase in the value and price of farming products, including stock, cattle, sheep and goats?

A. The market is better now, better prices than there used to be.

Whereupon, on recross examination, witness testified that the cost of living has increased, and he thinks that it is true that the great complaint of the agricultural world is that the cost of living has increased faster than the cost of the farm products, and he thinks that is a fact.

Q. Now then, you speak about these settlements on some of these timber lands with which you are acquainted that were made a good many years ago, before these people could sell their timber, and that they are still there. Most of these settlements were on the streams and foothills in Lane County, that you refer to, were they not?

A. I refer more particularly to those up on the side of the mountain, pretty high up, but on a smooth mountain side, where there are swamps and flats. Most all of it was susceptible to clearing and cultivation.

Q. Those people went in there, and had 25 or 30 miles of mountain range for whatever stock they might have?

A. They had outside range, that is correct; yes, sir.

Q. And the only available means of living and getting an income was from their stock that was thus ranged over the public lands and over the railroad lands, for miles and miles?

A. These I have reference to are farmers. They cultivate quite a good deal of land, and have their fruits in particular, and raise their own hay, vegetables, etc.

Q. I understand, but they do not market their products? They feed them to their stock in winter, and feed their potatoes and garden stuff to their families, and then they make their money, if they do make any, from the stock business? That is the way they did it for many years?

A. A good many of them make their living more by selling vegetables and fruit that they raise on the ground.

Whereupon witness testified that there is a good wagon road into these places, and they come into town with their vegetables and fruit, haul them into town and sell to the people in Cottage Grove. Quite a good many people make their living that way. Cottage Grove is a place of about twenty-five hundred people, besides there are a great many mill companies there and they would sell vegetables to them; they would sell wood, a good deal of that, and ties. There is none of this stuff that they would haul over ten or fifteen miles; they are close in to the railroad, and these are the settlements—the mountain settlers—to which he refers.

Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified that S. C. Bruce, about June 1, 1912, representing the Railroad Company, requested him to lease this eighty acres of land that he tried to buy.

Whereupon W. C. TIPTON, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, and being duly sworn, testified, that he is sixty years old and resides at Roseburg, was born in Missouri, came to Oregon in 1854 and has lived in Oregon ever since, about 18 miles east of Roseburg in Douglas County. He has been in the farming and stock business ever since he has been in Oregon. They located 18 miles east of Roseburg in 1855, and he has lived there ever since until within the last ten years, during which time he has lived in Roseburg. Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, he has been over the lands shown, involved in this suit, marked in green, from Myrtle Creek to Calapooia Creek in Townships 25 to 28, inclusive, clear through from near the summit of the mountains — all through these mountains there, and is acquainted generally with the railroad lands shown in that area, and became acquainted with them by riding over them after stock, buying and driving stock; that is, the country up and about Myrtle Creek is where he was buying stock. He is acquainted with the agricultural business, and the possibilities of agriculture in Douglas County and that vicinity. In passing through, and the like of that, he could not tell what was railroad land, what were odd sections and what were even sections, a man would just consider it as a whole. There is not one of these 160-acre tracts—not necessarily legal quarter sections, but also in tracts of "T" or "L" shape — but what a person and a family could make a living on them; of course, they would have to clear them up, a good many of them, but there are quite a number of quarter sections that have already open land enough that a person could make a living on, that is a family. He would say from sixty-five to seventy-five per cent of these quarter sections would be suitable for a man to go there to engage in the farming business. There are settlers living in that country, both on the even and odd numbered sections, which are of the same general character. He could not tell how long these people had been living in that community; they have been living there a long time, some of them have, and some of them not so long. They have gone on to that land and cleared it up, some of them have, and made homes there. Lands that are not susceptible to tillage or cultivation, could be put to grazing, pasture land. It would not be necessary to take out the stumps to render the grazing lands of the best quality of grazing lands. He has purchased land of the company in Township 26 South, Range 3 West, when his father and he were in partnership. The land was bought in his father's name, and they bought in quite a lot below there, in Section 4. He could not just say how much they paid an acre for the land. They bought it at all prices. They bought one whole section, taking the whole section through, for a dollar an acre, and then they paid as high as three dollars, he thinks; he is not sure, but thinks, from $3 to $3.50 an acre was the highest. They bought qutie a lot at $2.50 an acre, and then a whole section at a dollar an acre. They bought that section about when the land was first put on the market. They made an application and offered to pay a dollar an acre for it, as much as his father would pay to the company, and they did not want to accept it, and sent a man up there to look it up; it was covered with oak grubs and there was no other timber on it, only oak timber; when the man went back, the company wrote that they could have it for a dollar an acre; he thinks the man was George H. Andrews, located at Portland. That was the lowest price they paid; that land was very rocky, but it was fine grazing land; and they wanted it for pasture; it gave an outlet, and they wanted it for pasture, and that was all it was used for.

Q. Mr. Tipton, what is your opinion as to the effect of the railroad company selling the lands of the grant to large timber companies?

Q. The large timber companies in large tracts, and in withdrawing the lands from the market, failing to sell to actual settlers at $2.50 an acre?

A. Well, it has kept settlers out. It has been a drawback for settlers coming in and taking up the land, because if they came in and took up the even sections, it would throw the settlements so scattering that they could not have any schools, and could not get roads, nor anything of that kind at all. That is the main drawback. That is one thing that has hurt our country up there, is big land holders, in my opinion. That has hurt our country, the big land holders.

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified, that he and his father came to Oregon in 1854, when he was two years old. They came from Missouri, and his father and mother took a donation land claim on the North Umpqua; they each took a quarter section; they got here a little too late to take a half section each. They got 320 acres under the Donation Act of September 27, 1850. His mother died on the donation claim, and his father came down to Roseburg and lived with his daughter a short time; he came down in the fall and died the next spring. His land is four miles right up the North Umpqua River from where the donation land claim was, and he owned 1,240 acres of land. Witness had a fine farm up there. He did not farm more than 100 acres, that is for hay and everything, the balance for grazing and pasturage. He bought that land about fourteen years ago, and sold it to George about eight years ago; it has not been subdivided since he sold it, but it has been sold now to another party, and all kept together. He owns a lot in the town of Roseburg, where he lives, and that is all the land he owns. While he owned this 1,240 acres he was in the stock business. It was about 20 miles east of Roseburg, and it was a stock country around there where he lived. It was really a stock country, but it was a good farming country, but people did not farm it so much. They used to farm it pretty heavy. They threshed in one season in particular 6,000 bushels of grain off of their place, about twenty-seven years ago; since that time the farm has been utilized mainly for grain enough to feed the stock, and for stock purposes. He is acquainted, in a general way, but not by legal subdivisions or by sections, with the lands lying east of Roseburg, between the Calapooia River and Myrtle Creek. Myrtle Creek is a branch of the South Umpqua and the Calapooia is a branch of the North Umpqua. There is an area on this map, Defendants'

Exhibit 259, marked in yellow, which were lands lost to both grants by adverse entries, that is, lands that were taken under the donation act, or homestead, or pre-emption act, prior to the grant. He notices the yellow field on both sides of the North Umpqua, as far up as Winchester and Glide; that land was all taken, and the railroad company got none of that except that shown by the small green spots in there. There is 330 acres of land that his father owned in there on the North Fork of the Umpqua, at the mouth of Oak Creek, and that was all taken under the homestead, or donation law, prior to the railroad grant, before the railroad ever came through there. He remembers when the railroad was built to Roseburg, but he could not tell the year, it was somewhere about 1881. It was extended a few miles south to Glendale after that, but it was quite awhile before the train ever passed through the pass, and then it went from Glendale to Grants Pass and stopped there awhile, and later on went through, but he could not tell how long it stayed at either place. The unsold lands of the company joins the Forest Reserve, on the headwaters of the Umpqua. Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, these that are in brown shown on this map, were lost to the company by reason of being in a Forest Reserve. He knows about that Forest Reserve, but does not know exactly where that line runs through there. He notices that above Glide and south of Hawthorne, on the Calapooia, there is quite a body of timbered land in there belonging to the company; and that some of this in green is still owned, and that in blue has been sold. He understands the map shows the blue lands as having been deeded by the company. He notices that nearly all the land on Calapooia Creek is colored blue, and would be deeded, and the only green that is left is down towards Hoaglin and east and northeast of Glide, in that vicinity. Myrtle Creek is out where, on the South Fork of Myrtle Creek, there is a little post office called Nugget, and he knows that place. Around in that section there is a good deal of railroad land that is unsold, according to this map in green. He has been through these unsold portions in there, just riding through gathering stock. Some of this trail goes from Nugget over to what is called Deer Creek, and he has been through on that trail. Deer Creek comes into Roseburg; the trail goes through that country, and he has been through that trail quite often. In riding along, going back and forth, he would be going from Myrtle Creek back to Deer Creek and looking through. There are people living all through these mountains, that have a few head of cattle, and he was buying cattle and picking them up from ranchers in there that had stock to sell. He was buying them for George Cole, a butcher in Roseburg, and he has been at that for the last ten years. These cattle that the people on these ranches have, where they don't range on their own land, range out on the commons; they have these railroad lands and the even sections to range there, and the ranchers could pasture the railroad land, without the railroad company should fence it, and that it did not do. These ranchers fence what land they want to farm, what they want to raise hay and the like of that; they have a few acres that would be fenced and the balance would be outside of the fence, what they want to hold. Most of these men have stock in there. They generally have cattle and some have sheep; they raise the cattle for the market, for the money there is in them. Some of these ranchers have as high as 50 head of cattle. He bought as high as 60 head and upwards of one fellow, who was a rancher, and had bought his place of 160 acres. He bought 60 head and had a good stand left; his cattle ran out on the commons. If all these railroad lands were fenced up and owned by settlers, he would not have much pasture, but other people could have. Most of this unsold railroad land there is pretty well timbered. There are no saw mills in that section in up there by Nugget. This territory that he is especially familiar with is about 25 miles from Roseburg and gets into the Cascade Mountains pretty well. These ranchers up there, most of them, settled not only on the headwaters of the little streams, but along the streams and on the uplands. There are nearly always springs nearly all through these uplands, and they are well watered. In going through that country he did not notice very many old cabins on the even sections, that had been abandoned, where the timber was; there are some, of course. There are some of these people up there that have lived there until their children got so they had to go to school, and they moved out just as he did. He lived on his ranch until his children got up so he had to school them, and he moved to Roseburg to school them. He knows of some sections where they had built school houses. The railroad company has paid for over half the school houses and has paid half of the support of the school for nine months. There are not many settlements that have nine months school in the year, but the railroad company would pay half the expense for that nine months school, in some of these sections, and the railroad company had no vote on it. The railroad company contributes its proportion of the expense of building the roads that are built; if they have the land they have to pay the taxes. The difficulty of getting the roads through is a difficulty which the railroad company meets just in proportion to its holdings; and if people would settle on there, the people could put the roads through, and he thinks there is no reason why they could not get them through. They would have to pay taxes only on what they own; and they would have to contribute their proportion of the expense of that road to the extent of what they owned, unless it was paid out of the general fund. Most of these lands that are covered with timber could be used for pasture until the timber was taken off. The stock would run loose through the woods. They would have to be cleared for farming. In his judgment the soil and topography is such that about seventy-five per cent of these lands, that he knows of, could be made agricultural if the timber was removed; that is, it could be made ready for farming purposes after the timber was removed. It would not be necessary to take out the stumps to use it for pasturage. They would just cut the trees down, burn them up, get rid of the timber, and then sow the grass in the stumps. One would not have to cut the big timber down; one could clean out the underbrush, sow the grass and have good pasture. Fir timber is tolerably thick and a tree carries its foilage the year around; it is evergreen. He can take a person on the ground and show him where he has sown grass in the heavy timber, which is as fine pasture as one ever looked at. He could pasture 25 or 30 cows on 160 acres of this timber land, by leaving the trees standing and sowing grass in among the trees, but would not keep very many just in the timber that way. Goats are the best to keep in the timber, and they eat fir timber pretty well, also hazel brush; they want a variety; they eat maple, hard woods and shrubs, and will clean them up and eat it up pretty well. It is not practical to have goats on every quarter section, but pretty much all of it. He has had a good many goats, but never had over 200 at any one time. When they had goats they were among the first to have them in their part of the country. He does not know how many goats there are in Douglas County now, he has not had any for a long time. They never combed the mohair, they sheared it off and sold it. Thirty per cent of the fleece of a goat has that wiry hair through it, but he does not know that this is discarded by the manufacturer. He does not know anything about the manufacture of it. They just sold their mohair at Roseburg, and he does not know anything about what was the loss to the manufacturer. He refers to the white Angora goat, the longer the fleece the better the goat is, but he does not know whether the longer the hair, the worse the fleece is.

Q. That is not the reason you sold your large holdings of 1,240 acres?

A. Well, no; I sold my large holding to get out where I could school my children. I was living too far away from school. But I do think that, if those large tracts were cut up so as people could come in and settle, it would be a better thing for our country.

Q. The first thing to do, though, with these timber lands would be to get rid of the timber and make some use of that, wouldn't it?

A. Of course, they would have to get rid of the timber.

Q. They wouldn't want to burn that up? They would want to sell it?

A. If they couldn't sell it, they could burn it.

Q. They wouldn't burn up a quarter section that was worth $5,000 for the timber?

A. There would be no need of it.

Q. They wouldn't do that, would they?

A. I shouldn't think they would.

Q. It would probably go to a timber buyer?

A. Of course——

Q. Just the same as the rest of it has gone?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified, that he was just speaking of the timber as going to the timber buyer, just the timber, not the land. He had nothing to do except clip off the goat's hair, or wool, sack it up, tie it up and haul it off. They raised goats in that territory, and they ran out on the range and thrived on this growth found in this area. That is what they got these goats for, to run out on the range, slash off a patch of oak grubs or oak brush, and they would put the goats in on it. The large holdings of lands, in the locality of the railroad lands, are not fenced, and the railroad company is no better to the grazing man than the rest of the people. The reason they have only three months school there, is that there are not enough people living in there to keep up the school. The railroad lands are taxed the same as other lands, and the people of the county have not imposed on the railroad company in these matters, that he knows of; the methods of taxation are prescribed by law. He never knew the railroad company to construct any roads for the benefit of the people who lived there, or of their building any school houses, only where they were built by a tax, the same as the other people; the other people had to put up their part of the tax. They contributed what they had to contribute by law. Whereupon on recross examination witness testified, that Glide is two miles from his 1,240-acre place, and about three miles up on the North Umpqua, north of the section east of Glide. The North Umpqua ran through his place and cut one 80 acres of his place in two. His place was about six miles from Glide, northeast of Glide, on the river. He had two sections in his 1,240-acre tract, and owned some railroad land. He could not tell how long ago that railroad land was sold. John Livingstone bought a half section of it and witness bought half a section at one time. He cannot tell when Livingstone bought it, but he bought it when the railroad company was selling under contract, in payments. This was about the time the railroad came to Roseburg, in the early days, but he could not tell just when. Livingstone bought by contract and had not paid for it when witness bought it from him, and he had to finish out the payments on the contract. He had a pretty good range for his cattle on that place there. They ranged all over the North Umpqua and clear up in the Rock Creek country, on the railroad lands and even sections, too. They run in the open. Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified, that there are some abandoned homesteads, because others went in there with them with families, and they found they were on railroad land, and moved out, and then they could not stay on account that there were only a few families of them to keep up school, after they had built the school house and all. There was Mr. Comas, Mrs. Rooney, Mr. Lillie and Mr. Langworthy. These lands that these people located were on Rock Creek, and he thinks in Township 26. Hoagland is in Township 25 South, Range 2 West, and the lands there are good for agriculture. Lilly had, he does not know exactly, but thinks, as much as five or six acres in cultivation on his place before he left it when he found out it was railroad land. There is other land where they had some cultivation in, but he does not know how much. He hardly knows how much it would cost to clear this land with the ordinary stand of timber that is on it. He has cleared a right smart of it, but he always hired the men by the day; but he does not think that ordinarily it would cost over $40 an acre. He cleared on his place heavy fir growth, between 80 and 90 acres of it. He hired the men by the day. That was about 30 years ago when they cleared that and it was heavy fir timber. The underbrush through this timber is mostly maple and hazel and hardwood. Whereupon on recross examination witness testified, that the land which they cleared was the only patch that they grubbed the underbrush all out and just as soon as they got it out they started the plow; as the plow hit a root they had men there with axes, and cut the roots out; by the time they got the ground plowed, all they had to do was hitch to the stump, the fir timber has no tap root, it sits on the ground. This fir grove was not young timber, but was big timber. They sawed all the timber and rolled it into the river. It was on the river bank. They had no saw mills, or access to do anything at all with it. This was about 30 years ago. He does not think it cost over $40 an acre, not more than that, if it did that. The wages for the men at that time were about one dollar a day; and one can now get all the men working on the ranches for a dollar a day, that is all they pay now, a dollar a day on the ranch, unless it is in harvest, and then they pay a dollar and a half a day with board included. He has never tried to grub out any of that heavily timbered land, except this grove, which they grubbed out and put in corn. That grove was on his father's donation land claim, in below Glide on the Umpqua. It is not in the yellow field, shown on Defendants' Exhibit 259, but above that. That yellow field is on the south side of the river. His father sold his land before his death; he had sold everything. These people that settled on these railroad lands, settled there before it was surveyed and he thinks it must have been 12 or 14 years ago, but he could not say positively. He has seen some of these abandoned homestead entries, where the homestead entryman got his title, and the cabin is still standing; but he does not know if that land has passed to the timber companies. He knows of one place there where it has not passed to the timber company. There is Mr. Shoup, he sold his homestead, because he had to go out to school his children. That is on Rock Creek. He could not tell what he got for it, but Mr. Bellows in Roseburg bought it. He is not a timber man that he knows of; and he does not think he is in the timber business at all. Bellows does not live on the place; his boy owns part of a store in Roseburg. The property is not occupied now.

Q. You know, don't you, that all through the Coast Range and the Cascade Mountains there are homesteads that have been laid on these timber lands, and that the people, when they got the patent—single men, for instance, particularly—have sold the timber land to these timber companies?

A. Well, now, to tell you the fact, I don't know of one now.

Q. You cannot recall one personally?

A. No, I cannot. No, I cannot.

Q. But you have seen these cabins in there, haven't you, that are not occupied and abandoned, in the even sections?

A. Now, in the forest ranges, I know up there there is lots of cabins on nearly every quarter section, that the forest rangers took it from them, on account it was timbered. They claimed it was not agricultural land.

Q. They never got any title to that?

A. No, they never got any title to that.

Q. But I mean on the even sections, outside of the United States Forest Reserves.

A. Yes.

Q. Nearly all of the even sections, the title has been taken in the same way?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is no public land there any more?

A. Well, now, there is people that has taken homesteads right in back of our place.

Q. I am not asking you that, Mr. Tipton.

Mr. Rabb: Let him answer the question.

A. Their homestead cabins stand there.

Q. I understand, but all that even section land, the title has been extinguished by some kind of conveyance from the United States? There is no public land left there, is there?

A. Of the Government land, even sections?

Q. Yes.

A. Oh, yes, there is some, quite a little. Oh, yes, sir; there is a lot of Government land left not homesteaded yet.

Q. In that country?

A. Yes, in that country.

Q. That is not taken up?

A. That is not taken up.

Q. Is it timber land?

A. Timber on it, yes.

Q. I mean, is it saw timber?

A. Well, yes, sir; there is quite a lot of saw timber on it.

Q. The best, however, is taken up, isn't it?

A. No. In that Rock Creek country there isn't but two or three claims that is taken up, and got a title to it.

Q. The rest——

A. The rest stands there today.

Q. The rest is all Government land?

A. Yes, sir; the Government land stands there today.

Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified:

Q. That is outside of the forest reserve?

A. Yes, sir. Yes, sir.

Mr. Fenton: On Rock Creek?

A. On Rock Creek, they are outside of the forest reserve.

Q. Do you know why this land has not been taken up, Mr. Tipton?

A. Well, the railroad land is in there, and it throws them so far apart they cannot have any schools nor nothing. That is why it is not taken up. They cannot get roads made into it.

Q. Well, in your opinion, Mr. Tipton, if the railroad land passed into the hands of settlers, do you think the Government land in the even numbered sections would be taken up?

A. Yes, sir. Yes, sir; that whole Rock Creek country would be taken up.

Whereupon on recross examination witness testified, that they would have to clear up this land before they would get very much value out of it, unless they wanted it for stock. Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified, that clearing was required on the lands that were settled there in the early days, lands that have been settled on, and people are living on there now, and that is a condition that all settlers have to meet in that country.

Whereupon W. H. MILLER, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he lives at Gold Hill, Jackson County, Oregon, has lived in Oregon forty-one years, and was born in Josephine County. He spent his life at the home place, which was on the boundary line between Jackson and Josephine counties, and which was the east line of the farm that he lived on. He has been engaged in farming, mining and mercantile business, and is at present in the general merchandise business at Gold Hill, in Jackson County, and has become familiar in a general way with the character of the lands in Josephine and Jackson counties, and with the history of the industrial and commercial development of these two counties, since he has become old enough to observe these things. He thinks he is acquainted with the general character of the soil, climatic conditions, the lay of the land, and other conditions that enter into the usefulness of the lands in Josephine and Jackson counties. His knowledge does not extend to any great extent beyond these two counties, and he is not familiar with the southern part of Douglas County. He is familiar with the natural vegetation that grows in Josephine and Jackson counties, and with the use that may be made of that soil there for the growing of horticultural and agricultural products, and with the other industrial uses that may be made of these lands, their natural or artificial products, such as grazing, raising goats, etc. And based upon his knowledge of the general character of the soil of these two counties, he has made an estimate with reference to the quantity of agricultural and horticultural lands existing among the present holdings of the Oregon and California Railroad Company in Jackson and Josephine counties. He took his list of railroad lands from the bill of complaint in this case, and he included in his general estimate townships 37, 38, 39 and 40 south, ranges 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 west. He knows that a good portion of that land is in the most mountainous portion of Jackson County, while some of the other lands are in the lower altitude, where the mountains are not so high, and they include some of the roughest land in Jackson County. The lands in Josephine County on which he has made his estimate, he thinks, are not quite as rough land as part of the lands in Jackson County upon which he has made his estimate. He is familiar in a general way with the general character of the railroad lands in the townships mentioned by him, and has been over a good portion of the lands, most of them. The adjoining lands to these that he has been over, are comparatively of the same general character as those which he has been over. While he was not on these adjoining lands, he looked at them at a distance and believes they are just the same.

Q. Now, I will ask you to state what percentage of these lands with which you have become familiar and acquainted within those townships that you have named, referring now to the railroad lands, the description of which you got from the bill of complaint in this case—what percentage of those lands, I say, in your judgment are susceptible to the growing of agricultural and horticultural crops in paying quantities?

A. The estimate that I made, based on my judgment by being over the land and seeing a good portion of it, I estimate that there would be something like sixty-six per cent that could be used.

Q. That is, two-thirds of the land?

A. Two-thirds.

Q. State whether or not, in your judgment, if those lands were placed in the hands of settlers, the settler could, by making a proper use of the land, maintain himself and family, in tracts of 160 acres or less?

A. I think he could, yes.

Q. Are there any of the lands there of such character that a man could maintain himself and his family on less than 160 acres, referring now always to these railroad lands that are involved in this suit?

A. In some parts I think he could make a living on less than 160 acres.

Q. How much less?

A. I think I know of a few forty-acre tracts, one especially in my mind at the present time, that a man could make a good living off.

Whereupon witness testified that a settler there to make a livelihood could grow fruit, grain and small garden, and he knows of instances where settlers have been making a livelihood on similar lands in that same locality. His general estimate of the area of lands includes about 53,000 acres, and if he made no mistake, includes all of the railroad lands within the townships he has named. He is familiar with the general history of that territory in those townships as to the sale and disposition and use of these railroad lands within those townships. He does not know about the date when the Railroad Company withdrew these lands from sale, but he knows they were taken out of the market, somewhere about January 1, 1903, he thinks it was.

Q. I will ask you to state whether the manner in which the railroad company at first sold these lands in large tracts, and afterwards withdrew them from sale entirely, has affected the development and settlement of that territory?

A. It has.

Q. In what way? Has it promoted settlement or has it retarded settlement?

A. No, it has retarded settlement.

Q. To what extent?

A. Well, to quite a large extent. In other words, there is a great deal of land, if the people could have bought, they would have improved it and made homes.

Q. I will ask you whether or not, in your judgment, if those railroad lands had been disposed of in 160-acre tracts to settlers, that territory would have been settled up and developed, and now be occupied by persons living upon them and developing them, cultivating them and living off from the products of the soil?

Q. What is your best judgment, Mr. Miller?

A. I think they would.

Q. I will ask you whether, in your judgment, the manner in which those lands have been handled by the railroad company, including the withdrawal of them from sale, has affected the development and settlement of the intervening even numbered sections?

A. I do not believe I can answer that question.

Q. You have no opinion as to whether the withholding of the odd numbered sections from settlement and development has had any effect upon the settlement and development of the even numbered sections?

A. I have not thought of it that way.

Whereupon witness testified that not all of the even numbered sections have been settled upon and developed, and he could not answer to what extent with reference to the railroad lands in these townships that he has mentioned the even numbered sections have been settled upon and are now occupied by settlers. There is some of it that has not been settled upon. He thinks that if the railroad land had been opened for settlement, the other land would have been settled up more than what it has been. In his opinion, the uplands in the foothills could be used for horticultural and agricultural purposes, and in his opinion, the lands available for agricultural and horticultural use are not limited to the valley lands. Some of their best fruit is raised on the higher lands, and the high lands are adapted for grape culture. They grow grapes among other horticultural crops. There are many different kinds of berries—raspberries, blackberries, strawberries; also fruits such as apples, peaches, prunes, pears. Grapes have been cultivated quite extensively in some parts of Jackson County especially, and some parts of Josephine County. Some of the grape culture is an old industry; some of it is new. By that he means that it is old in some parts of that country and is new in some other parts. These lands are not all covered with timber. On some parts of it there is quite a bit of timber; on other parts the timber is not so good —it varies.

Q. Well now, does your answer with reference to the availability of those lands for settlement purposes, does that or does it not apply to the lands that have timber on?

A. It applies to both.

Q. So that before it could be used, then, for these other purposes the timber would have to be first removed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you taken into consideration those conditions and the cost of removing the stumps and preparing the soil for horticultural and agricultural use? I say, have you taken those conditions into consideration in your previous answers as to the availability of that soil of those lands for agricultural and horticultural use?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is your opinion in that respect wholly speculative, or is it based upon observation of yours as to similar use of other similar lands?

Q. Do you understand what I mean, Mr. Miller?

A. I am not sure that I understand the question.

Q. The question is this: Now, in testifying as to the use that can be made of these lands for the growing of fruit and grapes and berries, is that wholly theoretical with you, or have you seen lands of that kind actually used for that purpose?

A. No, sir; I have seen them actually used for that purpose.

Whereupon witness testified that the climatic conditions in that territory are favorable for the growing of these crops which he has named. The elevation there in these townships varies from 1000 feet to 4000 feet, and he has seen grapes, fruits and berries grow at an elevation 2200 feet. He has taken the elevation into consideration in estimating the quantity of these lands that can be used in the manner testified to by him. It is rather hard to say how many acres of good fruit land is required to make a comfortable living for a settler and his family down there, referring to the good fruit land in these railroad lands; ten acres of good fruit land is enough, referring to the fruit land part of these railroad lands. He knows of instances where families are making a living on as low an acreage as that on lands similar in all respects to the railroad lands. In his opinion, some of these railroad lands concerning which he has testified, are as good as the best fruit lands around Grants Pass. There is quite a considerable quantity of these railroad lands of that character—which is good fruit land; there is no large amount of it, but there is quite a considerable amount of it—good fruit land. Lands of this character are distributed throughout the different townships of the railroad lands. He does not call to mind any of these railroad lands that are actually under cultivation at the present time. He thinks the parties have bought them or have title to the lands, to that which they are farming, and they are not involved in this suit.

Whereupon on cross examination witness testified that a portion of Josephine County was created out of Jackson County, and it has been Josephine County ever since he knew anything about it. The line was straightened out at one time a good many years ago. Some portions of Josephine County are considered rather rough, mountainous country. A good portion of Josephine County is mountainous land, quite a good deal of it. His father owned 160 acres, taken up by him as a homestead before witness was born. It is about fifteen or sixteen miles from Gold Hill, but the nearest postoffice when he lived there was about eight miles. Grants Pass was their place of business, which is fourteen miles away. This place was on the Applegate, south, or southeast of Grants Pass. He does not know how long the Applegate country has been settled—it was before his time. Some donation land claims were taken up in the Applegate country. He thinks he said that sixty-six per cent of these lands with which he is familiar in a general way, could be used for agricultural or horticultural purposes after the brush and timber is off. He thinks there is some of this railroad land with which he is familiar that has good saw timber on it. Some parts of the timber in Josephine County is pretty good for saw purposes, but not in that portion about which he is testifying, that is, those townships are not so very good. He became acquainted with these townships about which he has testified, by mining and prospecting, which he followed eighteen years, mining quartz and placer both, and locating mining claims and operating mining claims in the Missouri Flat country, the Applegate country, and Horse Creek country, but he is not interested in mines now. There are some pockets there, but it is not a pocket country. The mining is placer. Gold is all he had anything to do with. He mined off of some pretty good land. Some of the placer land they have, is some of the best agricultural land they have. He can show some very good farming land where they are quartz mining in the fields, and where they are farming all around them. They go down and find the quartz below the soil, and he can show one place of that kind. Gold Hill has a population of something like five hundred, and is on the railroad. Some of these grapes are shipped. Mr. Carson for one, owns the Redland Nursery on the Applegate—everybody knows his grapes, and he thinks he ships some of them to Portland. They are of different kinds. Some of them are Tokays. There are some grapes grown around Jacksonville, right on the top of the mountain, 2200 feet elevation. Jacksonville is about 1600 feet elevation; Ashland about 1800 feet, and Medford about 1400 feet. The Rogue River Valley runs in elevation, he thinks, about 1000 feet at Grants Pass to about 1700 feet at Ashland, and practically speaking, the valley part, the low part, is all level land. There were lots of oak grubs and oak timber around Jacksonville and Medford at one time, but not very much fir timber. Part of the land between Jacksonville and Medford is the best kind of farming land, and has been for fifty years. These grapes grown there on the J. N. T. Miller place are not down in the valley, that is, up at Jacksonville, which is not in the valley but on the higher land, on the foothills. The slope leads five miles west from Medford up to Jacksonville, and J. N. T. Miller's place is on the foothills and extends up above. He knows the Hanley place there, and it is all level, black muck soil, except Hanley Butte. He does not know how much they want for the orchard land around south of Medford, but he knows there is some good orchard land, but he does not think they are selling it at $1000 an acre within two miles of Medford now. He has heard that they had sold some of it for that price, but he does not know it to be a fact. Some of the mountain lands are better fruit land than the low land.

Q. Well, now, answer my question. Do you consider that the lands in the foothills, up in these mountain lands, acre per acre, are as good lands as the Burrell orchard land, for instance, south of Medford that they get $1000 an acre for?

A. Not to take the whole, that is take all the land; but that that is good is as good.

Q. Yes, if there is a shirt tail full there that is good, why it is good. That is what you mean?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, do you mean to say that there is any considerable per cent of these railroad lands that are like the lands that I refer to around Medford?

A. No, I didn't say that they are like that Medford land.

Q. Well, that is what I am asking you about. Is there as much as one one-hundredth per cent of all of these railroad lands like any of those lands down there?

A. One one-hundredth per cent?

Q. Yes, one acre in the hundred equal to those lands of the Burrell Orchard Company, or of Johnny Olwell, or of old man Stewart, or of any of those men that own those fine lands around Medford?

A. I don't know what percentage, but I can show you just as good fruit, land will raise just as good fruit as the Burrell land or Olwell land, either one, and it is not in the valley.

Q. You will find it on the hills here and there in spots?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Here and there in spots?

A. Certain patches, yes.

Q. You don't undertake to say, you don't want the court to understand, that all that land is of that character?

A. No.

Q. Or that any considerable per cent of it is?

A. No, I never said it was all like that.

Q. You don't want the court to understand that a large per cent of it is either, do you?

A. I want him to understand there is portions of it is as good fruit land.

Q. Small portions here and there, is that right?

A. Small tracts.

Q. Here and there through the grant that you are familiar with?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon witness testified that he has been engaged in the merchandise business going on four years. There are no vineyards out there where they manufacture wine, but no one can show any better vineyard than the Redland vineyard, which has a good many acres, he does not know how many. He does not know that he can name another vineyard in Josephine County, but he can in Jackson County. He knows that some of them in Jackson County ship their grapes. They used to manufacture wine in Jackson County and sell it, but he does not know whether they do now or not. It was not sold generally. He does not think there are very many grape farms in Josephine County of the character of the vineyard of which he speaks on the Applegate. There are more of them in Jackson County. There is the one that he has named in Jackson County, but there are no other large ones; there are several small ones. Most of the farmers have a small vineyard for their own use, and do not sell many grapes. He is not a timber cruiser, and never estimated a piece of timber land to estimate how much timber was on a forty or a quarter section, not to try to be accurate at all, but he has figured on a few pieces somewhat, but never made a business of it. He tried to buy some of this railroad land quite awhile ago, but does not remember the time. He tried to purchase the land and the company would not sell it to him at any price.

Q. Did you make application on these blanks that were circulated around the country here four or five years ago trying to get people to make applications?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any of these timber brokers apply to you to get you to send an application for $2.50 an acre to get a good quarter section of this timber land?

A. No, sir.

Q. You never did that or had anybody apply to you to do that?

A. No, sir.

Whereupon witness testified that Defendants' Exhibit 365 is somewhere nearly correct in its location of the boundaries of Josephine County, Grants Pass, Applegate Creek and Gold Hill. He thinks that the map is fairly accurate of the streams, as far as he can see them, and the location of these towns, omitting the small branches of the streams. It looks to be about right so far as he can tell. He knows where Glendale is, but he is not acquainted in Douglas County. Jacksonville is shown on this map about five miles due west of Medford, and he thinks that is about right. He has been in the western or southern part of Josephine County, down at Waldo, but not very far off the wagon road. The lands with which he is familiar, with reference to Grants Pass, are southeast of Grants Pass, in the Applegate country, and about Wilderville and Murphy, and Davidson, and Kubli, and Applegate, which is in Jackson County. Applegate is a postoffice, and the Applegate Creek is in both Jackson and Josephine Counties. He was just prospecting through these lands, riding through them for the purpose of looking after mining interests, and was not looking for timber especially, just noticed the timber as he went through. He has driven stock in there very little; has done so some of the time, but he is not a stock man, but at that time he drove some stock to Williams Creek, a tributary of the Applegate, for the purpose of putting them on the range. It was then and is now customary for farmers who live down on the Applegate to drive their stock out into the mountains to range during the summer over public lands as well as the railroad lands wherever they were not enclosed.

Whereupon defendants offered in evidence Defendants' Exhibit 365, which was received in evidence, subject to the official census reports, and subject to any corrections that might be made by the official figures of the census of 1910, which exhibit is hereinafter set out and described and made a part of this statement of the evidence and identified as such.

Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified that he did not know of any of these donation claims being located up in the hills in this general character of territory that he has described. They were mostly down in the valley proper. Some of these donation land claims ran back up on the hills a little bit, but they were mostly on the level land. He thinks the roughest part of Josephine County is in the south and southwestern part. He does not think that the townships about which he has testified, are in the roughest part of Josephine County. He is acquainted with the decomposed granite soils in Josephine County somewhat, and knows that it is being used quite a considerable for horticultural and agricultural purposes. He is not as familiar with the lands in Josephine County as he is with those in Jackson County. When he says that these fruit lands that exist in these railroad sections about which he has testified, are not like the lands around Medford, he means that the land is not level, and is of a different soil from that, a different altitude, and the soil is generally not so deep on the mountains as it is in the valley. The hill lands grow good fruit; wherever one finds land that is fruit land on the mountains it grows good fruit. It is a different character from the fruit land around Medford. He did not restrict himself exclusively to fruit lands when he testified that two-thirds of the land covered by his testimony would be available for agricultural or horticultural use, and it is not necessary that it should all be fruit lands in order to be susceptible to settlement. There are sufficient quantities of this fruit land among these railroad sections to be available for practical commercial use, and he would say that about two-thirds of the quarter sections included within these railroad sections concerning which he has testified, contain enough fruit land and agricultural or horticultural land to support a settler and his family if properly used. The towns in the Rogue River Valley, such as Medford, Gold Hill, Grants Pass, Jacksonville and Ashland, are supplied with good schools. Some parts of the country where these railroad lands are situated have good country schools. Usually the lands are not opened up in the way that would attract settlers. It is not opened up by good roads. He does not know whether the road and school facilities would be considered sufficient at the present time. He does not mean to testify that this vineyard spoken of by him in Josephine County, is the only one in that county, but he means that it is the only one that he can name, of commercial value. He believes the better the land the better the timber. He knows of instances where the vacant railroad lands involved in this suit are of the same general character as those settled upon in the even sections adjoining.

Whereupon W. J. PENGRA, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, and being duly sworn, testified, that he lives in Lane County, Oregon, about three and a half miles east and a little north of Eugene, which is his post office address. He lives within a mile and a half of the main Willamette River, and he is fifty-five years old and was born in Lane County, Oregon. He has followed the stock business for twenty-five years, and the last four or five years he has been farming a little. He does not run stock now, to speak of; a few cows, some hogs, and a horse or two, and he raises a little hay, a few strawberries, some kale, a little corn, and such as that—diversified farming. He lived for a year and a half above Goshen, on what was known as the old Spores place, for five years, which is about seven miles north and east of Eugene. He has lived on no other farms in Lane County, other than those he has mentioned. While he was in the cattle business he had occasion to go around through the county, and bought cattle all over the county, more or less, and became pretty familiar with the general character of the soil there and the way it lays. He bought cattle in the Mohawk country, McKenzie country, Camp Creek, Fall Creek, the Willamette and Siuslaw, and has been all over that country more or less; and has been around over the county to some extent on other errands, in addition to buying cattle. His traveling about the county was largely in connection with his cattle business, and he observed the extent to which the country there is settled up and used for farming purposes, in a general way, referring to the parts of the county with which he is familiar. He knows that there are a lot of railroad lands involved in this suit, in the Mohawk country and some in the McKenzie. He does not know where they all lay, or anything about that. He has never run any lines. He knows something about the general character of the soil through the foothills and in these little valleys, that he speaks of, and knows some of the Booth-Kelly holdings in the Mohawk basin, and a little on the Mill Creek country, but not a great deal of it. He does not know anything as to the railroad lands particularly. He knows as to the lands that lay near the valley along the foothills there, and does not know whether they are railroad lands or government land, or what they are. He does not really know anything about the townships, but he could point out the little streams on the map, Defendants' Exhibit 259. He has been on Mill Creek up perhaps a half or three-quarters of a mile above the Wendling Mill, and that is as far up as he has ever been on that stream. He has been on the Shotgun and in above Shotgun and across the ridge, and down to the Calapooia, McGowan Creek, and some of these little creeks, and all of those little tributaries that come in from the west; and has been on almost all of those little streams that flow into the Mohawk, and also on the east. He has been across the mountain on the McKenzie river. He has been off the stream, going both sides, principally on the north side of the stream. He has bought cattle on Lost Creek, the Pleasant Hill country, up on the Coast Fork, out in on the headwaters of the Siuslaw, and down on the Siuslaw and along the Coast; and along the Siuslaw westerly through Lane County to the Coast.

He has not been up and down the main Siuslaw River, but simply along the road down as far as Mapleton, at the head of the south tide, and some of these little creeks that come in there. In the Mohawk country, he thinks as far back as he has been up those creeks and over those little ridges and breaks, he would say that perhaps fifty per cent of that would be suitable for agriculture when the timber and brush is taken off. The balance of the land there could be used for grazing. Some of that land is fairly good for grazing. He does not know anything about the odd or even sections, but he speaks of the land as a whole and with reference to the country generally. He has seen a little of the difficulties that encounter the settler in the removal of stumps and clearing of land of brush, and preparing it for cultivation; but he has not had any experience in the hills himself, but has had some experience elsewhere. Some of the land that he had experience with was formerly heavily timbered. Usually on the best soil one finds the best timber.

Q. Now, bearing in mind your previous testimony as to the proportion of this land that might be used for agricultural purposes, I will ask you whether, in your opinion, based upon your own experience individually and also upon your observation of the experience of others in that vicinity, whether in those localities with which you have become familiar, a settler could maintain himself and family upon 160 acres of that land?

A. Well, yes. It would depend something upon the man, I think.

Q. That is true in all new countries, is it not, Mr. Pengra?

A. I think so, yes.

Q. It is only the hardiest who really reduce new countries to cultivation—isn't that true?

A. Yes.

Whereupon witness testified, that the lands along the Siuslaw, back from the river, are very abrupt, a great deal of it. In the upper part of the Siuslaw country they are not so steep, not so abrupt. He does not know much about the lands along the main river back from the river, except on the headwaters of some of those tributaries of the Siuslaw. Some of those lands are good agricultural lands, while there are a good many of them that are covered with timber, some of them are under cultivation. As a general rule lands that are covered with good timber are susceptible to cultivation. Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified, that he had lived in Springfield a good many years, that as a stockman going over the timbered portions that he has mentioned, he was buying cattle. The people he bought from ranged their cattle in the mountains, principally in the brush, and ranged them over the outside lands, principally, adjoining their places and he supposes over the railroad lands the same as the others. He does not know how much country these cattle did range over, sometimes the cattle would range back for two, or three, or four miles. He does not know that the cattle during part of the season ranged in the mountains. He thinks they would turn the cattle outside and let them go with their calves and get them back in the fall, that was the common way of doing it. Some of these cattle were branded, some were ear marked. They were branded, or marked, with some mark. He does not know that these people made their living altogether that way. They all had a little stock; some of them made shingles and cedar posts and had a deerskin or two to sell occasionally. They had gardens and orchards. Most of these people were on the streams and some of them were on the benches back of the streams, but most of them were on the streams. He had noticed abandoned claims in his travels through this timbered country, but he does not know whether they were on even sections or on homesteads, or whether they had gotten title or not. A good portion of the timber in that country was good merchantable timber and some of the Siuslaw country had very fine timber, and some had no timber at all, part of it having been burned off. The fifty per cent of this land that he had stated was agricultural, in the territory over which he had been, includes such land as has soil that could be put to some kind of cultivation if the timber were off, and that is the way he classified it. There is none of that land that is extremely level, it all has some little slope to it, there would be benches and then a little steep place, and then a bench, maybe a little slope off to one side or the other, whichever way the land happened to lay. He could not say that fifty per cent of the railroad land would be agricultural, but he thinks all the land that he passed over, whether even or odd sections, would be about fifty per cent that would be agricultural lands, when the timber is removed. Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified, that the general character of those foothill lands are rolling and broken, and whether the hills are large or small depends on how near one comes towards the summit of the ridge; in some instances the ridges lay near the valleys and the hills would be more abrupt. Where the main ridge breaks back, the hill would be more gentle in its slope. While it would not perhaps be level there may be level places, practically level. But there will always be some slope to it; there will be little benches, ravines and hills. In some instances in the unsettled portions of Lane County the roads follow the streams; as a general rule though the roads follow the little ridges. In making trails through these foot hills, it is easier to make a trail over a ridge, or follow a ridge and backbone of a slope that comes down from the ridge than it is to follow the creek, from the simple fact that there is more or less fallen timber in the creek bottom, and the ridges are more accessible. These roads are not for the most part so abrupt as to be inaccessible. The lands that he passed over have been along the Mohawk Valleys, or near the Mohawk Valleys. He does not know whether the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company owns any part of these lands or not, but he supposes they do. They do at Wendling, he knows. He does not know anything about the description of the railroad lands, nor where they lay. In this general territory, concerning which he has given an estimate of the agricultural lands, he does not know what are or what are not Government lands, railroad lands, or Booth-Kelly lands, or what the ownership of the lands may be.

Whereupon W. A. RENNE, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he is forty years old; lives about three miles west of Walker Station, in Lane County, Oregon, and is a farmer by occupation. He has lived in Oregon since the winter of 1887-88, and before that lived in Illinois. Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, he is acquainted from Creswell west, on Camas swale, the country that is situated over on the headwaters in the Siuslaw country. The Camas swale is around Creswell and west. Creswell is in township 19 south, range 3 west, and the Siuslaw country mentioned by him is west of Creswell, extending over as far as Loraine, but he has not been west of Loraine to speak of. He has been south of Loraine as far as Drain, but has not been over the lands of the company northwest of Drain to speak of, but has been over these lands indicated in green north and east of Drain; from the railroad clear back down to Creswell, in this general community, in townships 19, 20 and 21 south, ranges 3 and 4 west, and practically he has been over all of it, hunting and trapping. He has lived at Walker about twenty-five years, and engaged in farming. He owns one hundred and twenty acres altogether, which is about three miles north and west of Walker. One forty is in section 30, one in 29, and one in 32, all in township 19 south, range 3 west. He has about six acres that he plows now, besides possibly an acre for garden, such as that, and his land is all under fence. He is acquainted with the agricultural possibilities in that vicinity concerning which he has testified, also about the possibilities of the soil in producing crops, and the necessity of clearing.

Q. Now, in your opinion, Mr. Renne, what per cent of the 160-acre tracts of land in this area that you are acquainted with would be suitable for settlement; that is, that a man could go on there and farm them and make a living?

Q. On a 160-acre tract, taken by legal subdivisions of forty acres, but not by a quarter section?

A. I understand you he is to take four forties that are adjoining each other.

Q. Yes.

A. It don't make any difference in what shape, or anything like that?

Q. No.

A. Well, I think in this territory that I have been over, that 75 per cent of it could be utilized that way.

Whereupon witness testified that a part of this territory is settled upon by people engaged in agricultural pursuits and raising fruit—is quite a fruit country, and there is a large orchard there in that vicinity. He could not say positively as to the sale of orchard lands around Creswell, only what he has heard, that they are selling at prices ranging from $400 to $700 an acre. He makes a living on his place, and he thinks his place is just about an average with the ordinary 160 acre tract that a man could select in this general country. He raises grain, hay, fruit, vegetables of different kinds, on his place, and the conditions as to the other lands in this area are the same as it is on his land. He keeps stock on his place too, goats, sheep, a few hogs, couple of cows, and chickens.

Q. What effect, if any, Mr. Renne, has the failure of the Railroad Company to comply with the conditions in the grant relating to the sale of these railroad lands to actual settlers at $2.50 an acre—what effect, if any, has that had on the development of that country.

A. I think if all of this land could be taken as in a body close together, different families, so as they would have neighbors close, etc., it would have been settled up, the most of this land would have been taken. It has kept the roads from being built into these places, schools, churches, etc., and if I understand the school law, it takes so many pupils to have a country school started —ten, I believe—I would not say positively but six to start a school, before they could have school.

Q. Don't the laws of Oregon require them to have ten pupils in a district before they can organize a school, and have to have six pupils in order to maintain the school?

A. That is my understanding, yes.

Whereupon witness testified that at Cottage Grove up the Coast Fork—that is what it is called in his country—as far up as Black Butte quicksilver mine, he is acquainted with the lands shown on this map, Defendants' Exhibit 259, marked in green. It would be south and east as far as Black Butte mine, and then as far north from the Black Butte mine to Row River, which leads in east of Cottge Grove, and empties into the East Fork. This railroad that leads out from Cottage Grove follows up Row River, practically towards Bohemia, and runs through townships 21 to 22 south, in ranges 1 and 2 west, as shown on this map. He has trapped all over that country one winter, as far south as the Coast Fork, which goes up towards Black Butte mine. Black Butte is a quicksilver mine, but it not up towards Bohemia, it is south and west. He supposes the marking "Black Butte" in 23 south, range 3 west, is meant for Black Butte. The Coast Fork is the river upon which the Black Butte mine is situated, or just a little south of it. He thinks that territory there will average about the same as the other territory of which he has first testified with reference to the possibility of agriculture and suitableness to settlement.

Whereupon, on cross-examination, witness testified that he did not exactly get his knowledge of these lands by going over the streams and trails, but all over through the woods. He got it while he was trapping. He is not a cruiser, or a timber man, and he has not attempted to look at this land with a view of ascertaining how much timber there was on it. Part of this unsold railroad land is heavy timber, and other places not so much. He does not know what these heavy timbered quarter sections are worth in the market; he has no knowledge on that subject. He owns 120 acres of land. Forty acres of it was railroad land which he bought from the company. He made application for the forty acres in August, 1901, and has paid out on it. He wrote to the company, and he paid $152 cash for the land. They listed it to him at $4.00 an acre on credit. It was timber land in part, fir and brush, all kinds of timber, pretty fair saw timber; part of it is still there. He has not sold any saw timber from his place. It is not too far away for sale of the stumpage for timber. It is about three miles from Walker. There is no sawmill right at the store. There is a sawmill west of Walker, and there used to be one at Saginaw—is yet, but these mills are not running now. The Booth-Kelly mill is away off east of Saginaw in the woods, and they flume their lumber down to Saginaw after it is sawed, and their planer is there. The mill would be quite a distance from his place. The saw timber that is on his land could not be very handily marketed and sold at Saginaw. He has never been offered a price for any of his saw timber and never offered it for sale himself. He has about six acres on his 120 acres that he plows, besides a garden consisting of probably an acre. He has raised on these six acres wheat and hay, a little hay on that, and he raised seventy-five bushel of wheat, machine measure, but did not raise any oats or barley or corn. He raised some hay on this, possibly three or four tons; timothy, velvet grass or mesquite, and some wheat mixed with it. He sowed this as an annual crop. He keeps two cows, and has seventy-one goats at present, and they range on this brush land of his. He has owned his goats about six years, and sells the mohair from them. If he remembers right, they average somewhere between three and a half and four pounds of mohair per head. They are Angora goats. He got his start from a neighbor about a mile from where he lives, who had fifty head. His neighbor sold his place and moved down near Portland, and witness bought his goats when he sold out. Nearly all his neighborse in the country run a few goats. He has several neighbors located in there within a mile and a half or two miles. He could not say how many are settled within a township there, excluding the railroad and excluding settlements right along the railroad, and excluding Walker and the sawmill, and things of that kind, but there are quite a good many, two or three miles from the railroad, in the foothills, and some pretty good land, some hill land, and some fir timber. Some of these railroad lands are further back in the mountains, and some are not. Some are adjoining that that he bought; there are forty acres adjoining him right on the east, which will average with what he bought. Part of it is timber. This forty is all there is right in there. He has not talked with counsel for the Government about these drawbacks of schools and roads, and lack of settlement on these railroad sections affecting the development of the country. He looked up the school laws himself to see how the school law was. He used to be a director at his school and came to know in that way. He thinks that they can vote a school tax on these railroad lands if they wanted to support these schools by voting a tax on the other lands just the same. These railroad lands are unfenced, and he supposes they could be pastured if one would want to turn out their stock on the range. A good many of these ranchers that are further back on the hills than he is, have a little stock, and they turn their stock out to range over any unfenced lands. There is pretty good timber on a part of these railroad lands in Lane County. Timber became an item of consideration in value for the timber alone, something like seven or eight years ago, he would judge, but could not say positively. The timber demand has been pretty active in Lane County.

Q. Now, do you know of some homesteads taken in these timber lands, by single men and others, taken for the timber, and then after they got their title by proving up or commuting, paying the cash in fourteen months, they sold out to timber people, got their money, and got $3,000 or $4,000 for them? Do you know of such instances as that in your county?

A. I know of one fellow that bought a tract. Now, I wouldn't say how much there was in it, possibly 160. And then he sold it out, but I couldn't say what he got for it.

Q. Well, he bought a relinquishment, did he, and then laid out a homestead on it?

A. I think it was Government land. He first homesteaded it, and then bought it in in a certain time.

Q. A certain time?

A. Yes.

Q. That is to say he entered it probably, and then commuted by paying the cash?

A. Yes, sir, that is the way he got it.

Q. And then he turned around and sold it?

A. He sold it afterwards, yes, sir.

Q. How long after he had commuted did he sell it? How long afterward?

A. I couldn't say whom he sold it to, or how long after.

Q. You know it was sold for the timber that was on it?

A. I don't know whether it was for the timber, whether they wanted it entirely for that, or for the land besides.

Q. Was it good timber?

A. Pretty fair timber, yes.

Q. Where was this quarter section?

A. It was in west of Walker.

Q. How far west?

A. I should judge five or six or seven miles; somewheres along there.

Whereupon witness testified that he thinks that principally all of the public lands of any particular value in Lane County have been taken. He supposes that they have been taken under the homestead or timber entry, or in some way, by scrip, and the titles obtained from the Government in that way. He thinks that Lane County has as much timber as any county in Western Oregon. This timber is mainly away from the old settled portions and in the foothills adjoining the valleys, and in the Cascade Mountains and Coast Range. There is not very much of it down in the valley. He has never been a timber cruiser, but has been a farmer in the way of which he has spoken, and has also been a trapper for martin, coon, mink, skunk, anything like that that he could catch—wildcat, cougar—for the sale of their furs and hides. He quit the trapping business about five or six years ago. Before that he could trap successfully. These fur-bearing animals got pretty well trapped out in that locality, they were driven farther back into the mountains.

Q. Well, assuming that the record has that statement—we will not take the time to go back and find it—assuming now that that statement of fact is true, that these quarter sections have been sold at from $3,000 to $5,000 per quarter, good timber-lands in Lane County, that is, $20 to $30 per acre, and that there was no means of disposing of the timber except by cutting it down and burning it up, now, what would a farmer pay for that quarter-section in that situation, for the purpose of making a home of it?

A. I know of land there that, if I was able to and so as I could, I would pay $10 or $15 on acre for any day.

Q. And burn the timber?

A. Yes, sir, and burn the timber. That is what I have done with what I have cleared up.

Q. And you would do that, and then grub the land out?

A. All but lots of the large stumps; take out the smaller ones, or run goats on them and let them kill it out, and then rot out.

Q. What would you say open land in the Willamette Valley can be had for, that is absolutely clear today, and not influenced by the location of a city near it, like Eugene, but ten or twelve miles away from Eugene—old farm land, donation land claims—what would you say that could be bought for, or do you know?

A. I couldn't say positively just what it could be bought for, no.

Q. Don't you know that the bulk of the land in Lane County that is in the old settled portions of it, taken up under the donation law, fairly well improved and fenced, can be bought all the way from $50 to $200 per acre, at the present time?

A. I couldn't say positively.

Q. Well, isn't that about your recollection of it?

A. Something like that, I suppose.

Q. A great deal of the land can be bought for $25 an acre, where some of it is brush and hill, and covered with old improvements, and where there is about half of it in cultivation. Isn't that true?

A. I think so.

Q. Well, a man would be better off to go down and buy some of this land than to go back into the mountains and buy a timbered piece of land, unless he wanted to buy the timber, wouldn't he?

A. Well, there is lots of it that would be better land than this cheap land would be, after he got it cleared, that is back in the hills.

Q. I know, but he would pay two or three times for it in getting the timber off, if he couldn't get the money out of the timber, wouldn't he?

A. Well, he could kill the brush and such as that out with goats and stock, and be making a profit off it while he was doing this.

Q. But he couldn't very well kill a fir tree that was six feet at the butt with a goat, could he?

A. Not large ones.

Q. A goat don't do much on a fir tree that is six feet thick at the bottom, do they?

A. No, sir. But you take small trees, a goat will kill it out.

Q. But the goat doesn't do anything to a sawlog or sawtimber?

A. No, sir.

Q. He browses on the shrubs and short brush?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And will climb a stake and rider fence to get to it?

A. He will do that, too.

Q. It don't prefer the evergreen when it can get the other kind—hazel brush and things of that kind?

A. Well, he will take a bite of one kind, and just keep going that way—first off this and then that, and all over.

Q. But he don't bite fir trees, as a rule?

A. I can show you lots of them that has been bit in my pasture.

Q. I know, but he didn't bite a fir tree, that is a saw tree?

A. Oh, no. Fir brush I am speaking of—small.

Q. Oh, just little fir trees that are six or eight feet high?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. He would nibble at a limb as he went by to get a hazel brush?

A. And make a mislick at the hazel, and get the fir.

Q. Yes, but when it comes to clearing saw-timber, you don't use a goat to clear saw-timber?

A. A goat don't like saw-timber, no.

Q. He don't want to eat sawlogs?

A. No, sir.

Q. So all this talk about a goat clearing land is, that the goat is used to kill the shrubbery, and is useful on oak grub land after the oak grubs are cut down and the sprouts come up, to keep the oak grubs from growing up again?

A. Oak grub and vine maple and hazel—all such hardwood as that, that you will find in the hills any place.

Q. Yes, wherever you can cut the oak grub down, or the other hard woods, there are sprouts come up the next year, and the goat is good to keep that down, and will finally kill that tree?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But it don't have very much to do with a fir tree—I mean a saw tree?

A. No, sir.

Whereupon witness testified that he sold his mohair last spring for thirty-seven cents, and the average price for the last five years has been about thirty cents, running from twenty-five to thirty cents on an average. He does not know how many goats there are in Lane County. He is a man of family, his family lives on these premises, but the children do not go to school; they are not old enough for school yet. They have a school there that he could send them to.

Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified that four dollars was the price placed upon this forty acres of land that he purchased from the Oregon and California Railroad Company, but that he got a five per cent discount on that price by paying cash. This land was rolling, and adjoining the land that he is now living upon, and he is using it for pasture and such as that. The other forty-acre tract that he applied to purchase from the Railroad Company and was refused, adjoined just east of the one that he purchased. His father lives in section 30, township 19 south, range 3 west; the same section that the homestead of witness is in. His father came to Eugene in the winter of 1887-8, and lived in Eugene a year and a half, or right close to that, and then they moved out on the homestead of 120 acres. His father proved up on his homestead and has been living there ever since. His father's land was rolling, contained some timber, and some of it had to be cleared. Witness was about fifteen or sixteen years old when his father took up his homestead. The family consisted of six children besides his father and mother. Witness was next to the youngest of the children. His father made his home and living upon his homestead. When they put the house on his father's homestead they had to cut the brush out in order to get room enough to put a house in there. His father's place would average about the same as the other lands he went through in that country. It was not necessary to grub all the stumps out before grain can be sown on land that contains a timber growth. The six-acre tract that he is farming has large stumps left in the field and he plows around them, and is raising crops there every year, wheat and hay, and such as that. He cuts his hay with a mowing scythe. Where the clearing is older the ground has been grubbed out, except the large stumps, and that is cut with a mowing scythe. He cut his wheat this season with a binder, or rather his neighbor did for him, around these stumps that are in the smaller field. His father has about ten acres of land under plow on his place. Stumps are removed by settlers in that community in various ways. Some blow them up with powder, and others by what they call pitting, burning them out; get a fire started around the base of the stump, and keep piling on stuff until one gets a good fire started, and then cover it over with dirt, and keep it covered until the stump burns out. That is called char-pitting, and involves only labor, attention to the fire after one gets it started, that it don't break out; keeping it covered, smoldering in there until the stump has burned out. This soil is productive.

Q. About what would be the average of land that could be made susceptible to plowing on this tract that your testimony has covered, that is, on each 160-acre tract? I am not speaking now of your homestead, Mr. Renne, but I am speaking of the entire tract that your testimony in chief covered.

A. You have reference to the amount that actually could be plowed, if it was grubbed or cleaned up?

Q. Yes.

A. I should judge about thirty-five or forty per cent of it, right around there close.

Mr. Fenton: What do you mean? Right around close to those figures, or close to your place?

A. Close to the figures—35 or 40 per cent of the land.

Whereupon on recross examination witness testified that he could not state the year that his father took up his homestead, but that they lived in Eugene during the winter of 1887-8, remained there a year and a half, and then moved out on the homestead. He has not figured out what year his father took up his homestead, but if it was in 1890 witness would have been about eighteen years old at that time, and was the next youngest child in the family, and there were six children, three boys and a girl older than himself. He could not say as to whether the older children were of age when his father went out on the homestead. A sister was next older than he, and there were three brothers older than this sister, and he supposes there were two years' difference in their ages, but could not just say, and the three brothers were practically all men grown when his father took this homestead, and stayed with his father on the place, assisting him in the work, and did not work out very much. These brothers slashed the land, rolled the logs together and burned them, and did such work as that. He had one sister two years younger than himself, who lived on the place with his father and mother when they went to the homestead. The girls helped work around the house, but did not work in the field. His father now has on his homestead about ten acres that can be plowed. The balance of the land is brush and timber, which he uses for pasture.

Q. So that your father, with three grown sons and yourself, 18, or about that, after being on that homestead twenty-two years, has succeeded in clearing ten acres? That is right, isn't it?

A. Well, it didn't occupy all these twenty-two years to clear that.

Q. I know, but that is the fact? You have succeeded in clearing ten acres?

A. Yes, sir, that is what is cleared there.

Whereupon witness testified that his fathers' homestead is about four and a half miles from the railroad by wagon road, the nearest station being Creswell. Walker is about the same distance. Creswell is just a small place. He does not know its population in 1910; probably about four hundred people living there in 1910 —he couldn't estimate. Creswell is his father's trading point. Witness trades at a store at Walker; there is just one store and a few dwellings and a post office at Walker.

Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified that his father's place has been under cultivation, he should judge, ten years anyway. He and his brothers are married and have been living away from their father's place for some time; all of the children have been. Witness left his father's place and has been working for himself for the last twelve or fourteen years, and some of his brothers left his father's place before that.

Whereupon C. L. STANDINGER, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he is thirty-nine years old, and his post office address is Molalla, Route 2, Clackamas County, Oregon. He has been in Oregon fourteen years, and has lived in Clackamas County thirteen years, in section 6, township 5 south, range 3 east. About the first half of the time he has been in Clackamas County he was in saw mills, and the balance of the time on a farm. He owns 108½ acres of land in Clackamas County, upon which he lives at the present time. He had owned more. The other land that he owned was adjoining this, and part of it was some that he bought from the railroad company in 1900, in section 11, township 5 south, range 2 east. He purchased from the railroad company eighty acres at $4.00 an acre, by installments, in section 11, township 5 south, range 3 east. He had a little saw mill on it and made a failure of it and sold the whole thing. He intended to make a farm of it, if he could. The present land that he owns he purchased from W. O. Vaughn. It was originally a donation land claim—more or less timbered. Vaughn logged the timber off and he bought it as logged off land. There was no land in cultivation at the time he purchased it, no improvements whatever. He paid $6.00 an acre for it on October 2, 1907. He has slashed about eighty acres of that land, and has had about ten acres upon which he has raised two crops. He slashed the underbrush and stuff, and bad timber that was left after they got done logging, burned it, fenced it and seeded it, and this grain which he raised was where there were small stumps. The land lays so he could swing a cradle over it, and where there were big stumps logged off, he cut around them, cut a crop of wheat on them. The next year he had hay and cut it with a scythe. He is now grubbing the stumps. The first year he stayed at the saw mill near by, until he had money enough to build him a house, and the place has been his home ever since, and he has made his living from that land and he has had no other means of support than that furnished from this land. He had about sixty acres of this land slashed, everything that the loggers left was cut down, except some of the large doty trees, that is, more or less decayed, that the loggers did not want. He left these big ones standing, and anything smaller was felled. Then the land was burned over, then fenced and then seeded to timothy. As to the ten acres there, he piled the stuff that didn't burn and went in there with a shovel and plow, and tore up the ground and seeded it to wheat. He raised 35 bushels of wheat to the acre off of that, and the next year he seeded that to oats and vetch, and raised 25 tons of hay off of it this summer that way—cut it with the scythe. He has now grubbed thoroughly in there, and he is pulling the smaller grubs, and leaving these big large ones that the loggers left where they fell. The loggers took everything from two feet up, and all those big stumps he left there scattered on this part. He has picked the place where the timber was lightest to begin with naturally, and he is pulling the small stumps and leaving the biggest ones. He can plow around them and drive a binder and mower around them. He is familiar with the business of farming in this general community in Clackamas County, in the timbered land. Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, he lives in section 6, township 5 south, range 3 east, and in the west half is where he owns his land. He has worked on a farm two summers just west of there. It was a home place. It was the Charles Cutting donation land claim. In the saw mill he worked in sections 11 and 12, township 5 south, range 2 east, where these two mills were located. He has been around there all the time, and is familiar with the country for several miles around there — he would say five miles in all directions. He is acquainted with townships 4 and 5 south, ranges 2 and 3 east. He lives at the intersection of these four townships, and the different parts of these four townships he is familiar with. He is very well acquainted with sections 7, 5 and 31, in township 4 south, range 3 east; sections 5 and 7 in township 5 south, range 3 east, and these little tracts marked in green in township 5 south, range 3 east, he is familiar with. He has a general knowledge of the remainder of the land in these townships, and has been over them sufficiently to acquaint himself in a general way with the growth on them and the character of the land and their agricultural possibilities. Most any tract there of 160 acres of these unsold railroad lands would support a family. He does not think one could pick out 160 acres there that would not support a family, and these lands would be suitable for settlement.

Q. Mr. Standinger, what has been the effect of the railroad company's refusal to comply with the terms of the grant in selling to actual settlers in 160-acre tracts, at $2.50 an acre, if you know, in that community that your testimony covers?

Q. Do you understand the question, Mr. Standinger?

A. Yes, I understand the question. Do you want an answer?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, it has in various ways. One way it has retarded our schools, inasmuch as the schools draw money according to the number of pupils. And there are people in there that would have bought land if they could get it. It has kept settlers out, and kept our schools back. There is a sawmill there now that has practically logged off—no timber handy unless it would be railroad timber; there is a little of that probably they could get—they are moving out of the country. This is an industry out of the country. That is handicapped too. If the settlers had it, they would have cleared off this logged off land, and improved it, and it would be more valuable with the improvements on it, and the stock and everything, than it is now. And there is everything that would have been in favor of improving the country if we had more settlers there.

Q. About how much plow land could they get on a 160-acre tract, a settler on this railroad land?

A. Oh, there is no 160 but what you could get 25 per cent. Some of it considerably more.

Q. Are similar lands settled upon and made homes of in this vicinity, other than the railroad lands?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified that his home is situated in the west half of section 6, township 5 south, range 3 east, which he purchased from W. O. Vaughn. The title passed through three or four hands. It was originally the Andrew J. Cutting donation land claim, or a part of that claim. He bought 80 acres in section 11 from the Railroad Company, which was in township 5 south, range 2 east, and he thinks it is the east half of the northeast quarter of section 11, or the west half, he would not be positive now. It is not improved. The man that bought it just fenced it and makes a pasture of it. He bought it himself from the railroad first, contracted for it in the year 1900, and agreed to pay $4.00 an acre, and owned it five or six years before he sold it to the man who now owns it. He sold it with a little saw mill and some odds and ends for $750. He didn't really get any more out of the land than what he paid for it—it was practically a forced sale. Only a garden patch on it has been cleared since he bought it from the railroad company. The present owner does not live on this eighty, he uses it for pasture. It has a house and two barns on it, but the present owner never lived on the place. He uses it for a camp there some times in the summer, and to keep stock there all the time. These stock do not range outside over the country generally. When they are not there the owner has them on his own place. It belongs to W. A. Shaver at Molalla, who is a large stockman there. Shaver has a large place at Molalla of about 160 acres, probably not that much. He has cattle and a few sheep. Twenty-five per cent of these railroad lands in that vicinity with which he is familiar in those two townships, some four or five miles east of where he lives, up the eastern boundary of the township, with which he is familiar, could be plowed after the timber is cleared. Some of it is in burns, that is, some of it could be plowed without taking the timber off. It is burned in patches. There may be eighty acres there that would have four or five acres burned, and just a little fern, a little undergrowth, four or five acres of timber and then a little opening which is burned in patches. These open places would be very easily cleaned. There are lots of places there where there would be forty acres, half of which would be easily cleared that way, and the other half would be spotted. These open places in these burns that are free from timber, that would not require clearing, are scattered over the different quarters.

Q. And are they small parcels, three or four acres in a spot?

A. Oh, there will be more than that in a spot. Those burns they are irregular. Those burns will cover perhaps thousands of acres, and they are irregular, you know with spots of timber here and there in them. There are farms scattered all over these burns, small farms. People, of course, cannot clear the whole place in a few years. They have houses scattered, lots of houses and small farms, with a few acres, up to ten or twelve or fifteen acres. Farmers work in the saw mills but very little. Sometimes the young men that are just about coming of age will work in them, but the regular farmers do not depend on saw mills and do not try to work out, they have enough to do at home. They raise hay, wheat, oats, barley, have a few cattle to milk, some hogs and sheep. Some of them have goats where they have land that is brush land. They haul their stuff to market at Canby and Oregon City. Canby is fourteen miles away; Oregon City is sixteen miles. Molalla post office is six miles from his place. At Molalla there is a hotel, restaurant, three stores, a creamery, and a number of residences, two blacksmith shops. It is not on the Molalla River, but is about three miles from the river south. He thinks Molalla is situated on a donation land claim, but is not positive. Most of these donation land claims were taken there from 1845 clear on to the end, until 1873, till the time came when they could not get any more land there. These railroad lands of which he speaks, are within four or five miles of where his place is in section 6, township 5 south, range 3 east, and it is hard to say what these railroad lands in their present condition, the best of them would be worth—the value of the timber as well as the land. He thinks there are lots of people who would pay $20 an acre for some of it. There is a market for the timber off of these railroad quarters that have timber on them. This market would be at Hult's sawmill at Colton and at Mulino, and the Schafer Lumber Company at Meadowbrook. These three mills could buy. There has been a mill down near Canby, the Adkins sawmill, but that is sold, and they have quit running logs on Mill creek. In fact, they could not get any more, about all is tied up in the railroad land. They could not get them. These mills would have to stop running unless they could buy timber from somebody. The Hults mill has some outside timber situated along Mill Creek. Some is all felled, piled, and ready to put in the creek on the half of section 6, in the same section in which he is. The timber is just normal, and they pay stumpage for this timber around about a dollar a thousand. They leave the land with lots of trees that are too small for logs, lots of them are rotten and doty, and occasionally a white fir or hemlock that is not merchantable timber, and lots of underbrush. They cut these large trees above the pitch in the stump, which runs all the way from three feet to probably ten feet, and they use a spring board on the big ones; on the small ones, two or three feet in diameter at the butt, they cut without the spring board. These forties are good for that country, or the average for that country, and would average perhaps four hundred thousand feet. He does not know how much per acre the best of it would run, but he has in mind one eighty from which they have taken two million feet in that neighborhood, in section 12, township 5 south, range 2 east, which would be about a mile south and a mile west of section 6 in which he is. There has been a pretty good market for timber there. If he were to buy one of these quarter sections that had a stand on it of 400,000 feet to the forty, or 1,600,000 feet to the quarter section, or 2,000,000 feet board measure to an eighty, the first thing that he would do to get his money out of it and make it profitable, would be to try to sell the timber. Whether he could sell the timber for a dollar a thousand stumpage would depend a good deal on the location. He might get that, and he might get only 75 cents, depending on how close it is to a mill or creek or river. Most of these tracts of railroad lands there could be logged off and the logs sold to some of these mill people. If he had an eighty acres thus situated, that carried two million feet board measure of saw timber, and could sell it for a dollar a thousand, that would be about two thousand dollars for the eighty acres, and some of these quarter sections would be worth from two thousand dollars to four thousand dollars for the timber that is on it, that is the best ones. If the company should sell a quarter to him as an actual settler at $2.50 an acre, he would get today two or three times his money back, or five times his money back out of the timber, but if he had bought the land seven or eight years ago, he would not. There was no market for timber seven or eight years ago. The market for timber lands first came to his knowledge about the time he bought his piece of the company in 1900. The character of the market for timber since that time has been improving all the time. Twenty years ago these timber lands were worth from $2.50 to $5.00 an acre, depending on location, for agricultural purposes, that is a man would go in there and buy the land and clear it a few acres each year. The percentage of agricultural land would average better than 25 per cent; the poorer ones would run about 25 per cent; some would run much better. He knows of homesteads taken around in that section there in this timber land. There is the old White homestead and the Beasom homestead. The White homestead is in section 7, and the Beasom homestead in section 6-9, but he does not know how long ago they were taken, but quite a number of years before he came to the country. This timber about which he spoke as just felled and ready to put in the creek, is off of the Beasom homestead—these two million feet. The homestead was 160 acres. They live on that place there and have a farm. He could only guess how long that homestead was there before he came to the country, but it was long before he came. There are donation land claims right up next to these homesteads, and there are donation claims further up in the mountains than this, still beyond this, on the streams. He is a man of family, and he has not worked in the sawmill or in any other business outside since he has been living on his land. He went on to his place to live in February, 1909, three years ago. The reason he did not go on the place before that was that he had to work and make money to pay for it. He could make a living on the place and pay for it after he had a house built and the slashing done and the grass started to grow, but naturally a man has to have money to invest in any business. Take the land in a state of nature with no money, he could not do anything, and no one could. A man would have to have a little money to clean up a little and get started. That is, he had to go and work out and get some money to pay for his place and to help improve it before he could go on it to live.

Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified that that big burn is just above him to the east. This section is about the edge of the big burn. That is the reason the timber there is in patches. It is in the edge of the big burn, and the edge is irregular. Take some quarters in this burned area and 50 per cent of them would be easily cleared. Other forties there would be very little burned—they vary. He is more or less acquainted with this area in this big burn, which is located around Colton. Colton is two and a half miles east of him, and is the present post office. He thinks Colton is marked on Defendants' Exhibit 259. What is known as old Colton would be about five miles away. The post office is changed here now—pointing to a place just above James, which is at about the corner of sections 3 and 4, township 5 south, range 3 east, on the line between sections 3 and 4, township 5 south, range 3 east. He would say that that burn with reference to that, runs off northeast and then comes off from Colton and runs up on a big hill. He has never been up on the top of the hill, and does not know what section it is in. It would run up there five or six miles or more, maybe ten miles up on the hillside, up on the mountain in section 2, township 5, up to about 4 east. There is a lot of good farm land there. The eastern portion of it is on the side of a mountain—it is poor land but will do for grazing, but not for farming. The remainder of the land other than the plow land of these 160-acre tracts, would make good grazing land. There is a creamery at Molalla, and the dairying industry is thriving in that community. They have started a corporation at Colton, and a year or two, as soon as they get more capital, they are going to start a creamery there locally. That is a good dairying country, and dairying has been one of the leading industries on the farm.

Whereupon E. E. QUICK, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he lives at St. Helens, Columbia County, Oregon, and is fifty-nine years old, and has lived in Oregon since 1862. His father first settled in Washington County on what is known as Chehalem Mountain, and witness has lived in Washington and Columbia counties ever since. He does not actually know in what township and range he lived in Washington County. They lived on what is called East Dairy creek. He was a young man at that time and did not pay much attention to that. They moved from Chehalem Mountain to East Dairy. They lived about two years in Chehalem, and the remainder of the time on East Dairy creek for about seventeen years, until 1880, and then he moved to St. Helens, Columbia County, Oregon. He was married about that time and removed to Columbia County, where he has lived ever since. His first official position in that county was that of county school superintendent; afterwards county clerk, and he has been county treasurer. He holds no official position at the present time. He has been in the abstract business for about seventeen or eighteen years, and has township plats and everything of the different localities of the county, and has traveled and been over different sections of it; often goes out hunting and fishing, things like that, through different sections of the county, and this abstract business has brought him in touch with the general history of the development of that county, and he thinks he is acquainted with the general character of the soil and the lay of the land. He is acquainted in a general way with the lands in the townships in which the railroad lands involved in this suit are situated in Columbia County, and particularly in township 4 north, 2 and 3 west; 3 north, 2 west; and more particularly 3 north, 3 west. He also knows some in township 5 north, 2 and 3 west. He has been over these lands to some extent, out through that section of the country different times, over the county roads and on to some of the lands. One might say from his knowledge of the abstract business that he is more or less familiarly acquainted with all the entire county, that is, different portions of the county. He lived on a homestead there himself, which he took up in 1884, and which is in township 4 north, range 1 west. He lived on his homestead there about four years, made it his home and cultivated it, and was able to make a living off that land. He was elected county clerk in 1888 and left it on that account, but his family lived on the place until he made final proof. He commuted the homestead and made final proof before his family left the place. He then moved into St. Helens, but he owned the place for a number of years after that. He cleared up quite a good deal of it while he owned it, probably forty acres of it is cleared, and possibly sixty odd acres of it slashed and fenced. He fenced the entire 160 acres. By slashing, he means that he cut down the large timber and the small timber, cut the small timber and brush first, and then felled down or cut down the large timber and burned it, and seeded that to pasture. He left the stumps in the ground, that is, in slashing. He removed the stumps from the forty acres that he cleared. There were probably three or four acres of a swale in one place of small ash timber on that land. He included in that quite a little bunch of fir and cedar, which was pretty thick. The cedars and firs ran from two feet to three and four feet in diameter. The entire place was covered with timber. There were three or four acres of swale that had ash trees on it, and the balance of the land was fir and cedar. Some of it was merchantable saw timber. He sold some of the timber to a mill, some of the standing timber, but that was after he had made final proof on the place and got his patent. He sold it to a mill company and they logged off part of it. He had made quite a slashing before they had done anything. The timber that he felled and burned was much the same in character as that which he afterwards sold. In the early days there was no market for the timber. They did not consider it of any great value at that time. The practical method of making use of the land for agricultural purposes throughout his whole neighborhood and country there, was to clear the land up and get it into cultivation. Nearly all of the railroad lands involved in this suit in Columbia County are in the townships with which he is particularly well acquainted. In other townships there are only a few acres in each township, with the exception of one township where there are two sections of railroad lands. In his opinion, there is about 70 to 80 per cent of that land in these townships with which he is acquainted, speaking now with reference to the land generally as a whole, and including the railroad lands, that can be used for agricultural purposes when the timber is removed, and he thinks it would be a good investment for a farmer to pay for the removing of the timber and the clearing of the land for agricultural and horticultural use.

Q. In your judgment, basing your knowledge, or basing your answer upon your knowledge as to the general character of the soil and lay of the land, the difficulties that would confront the settler in the way of clearing the land and preparing it for use—in your judgment, could a settler maintain himself and his family on one of those quarter sections of railroad land within those townships?

A. Well, if he is a man without any means, the first year possibly he might not do that; but when he had cleared up two or three acres of land, why, he certainly could do it, I believe.

Q. After he got started in the way that you have described, what would be the practical thing for him to do with reference to extending his clearing, if anything? That is, I mean now in your own language describe in a general way how a settler should go about it, after he went upon the land, to put it into cultivation and get the best use of the land for agricultural and horticultural purposes?

A. Well, of course, he would have to build his house and get some place to live to begin with. Then he would go to clearing the land and putting it in vegetables and things of that kind, small tracts at first, and afterwards sowing grass and planting out fruit trees; and fruits of all kinds grow well in that section of the country, in part of that section of the country; and grass and things of that kind grow well.

Q. Well, now, that is what I meant before when I said agricultural and horticultural use.

A. Yes.

Q. You limited your answer to agricultural use.

A. Yes.

Whereupon witness testified that apples do well in there, especially Northern Spy apples do fine; pears do well; cherries do quite well; strawberries grow excellent, they have excellent crops of strawberries anywhere in that section of the country, out where this land is located, amongst people who are living in that vicinity; loganberries, blackberries, raspberries, and in fact all kinds of small fruits; and prunes do as well as apples and pears. They cannot raise any peaches in there. Clover does well on that hill land—clover and orchard grass. Timothy does not grow so well on the upland as it does on the bottom land, but orchard grass and clover grow well on that upland, which they call the hill land. It is all good for fruit and vegetables. The climate is favorable for these different kinds of vegetable growth that he has mentioned. It would probably be unpleasant for the purposes of a home in some instances, because rather isolated, and because there are not a great many settlers through there. But about eight miles from St. Helens, out in township 5 north, 2 west, is what is called the Western Cooperage plant, where they bought up a number of homesteads in there; and people have proved up and made final proof on their homesteads; they have a splendid school, a little store and postoffice, and they are selling that land in there that they bought from those settlers, after getting the bolt timber—they were in the stave business, after getting the bolts and stuff of that kind, they were selling that land at $60 or $70 per acre, about seven or eight miles west of the river; that is, after getting the bolt timber. That is, they were in the stave bolt business, and they cut out the yellow fir. They are barrel manufacturers. He supposes that their business took out 75 or 80 per cent of the timber. It is clear stuff that they use principally, and it possibly might not go that much. That would leave plenty of fir for home use or anything of that kind, and the balance of the land in stumps. They have been selling that from $60 to $70 an acre, some of it, but some of it had been cleared by these settlers, had been cleared up and farmed for a number of years, and they are selling that land at about $70 an acre. The purchasers are making little homes of it in ten, fifteen or twenty acre tracts, and are living there. These tracts are cleared, and are large enough to maintain a family. He is familiar in a general way with the manner in which the railroad lands have been handled in that vicinity, as to being sold or withheld from sale.

Q. I will ask you whether, in your opinion, the manner in which the railroad company has sold the lands or withheld them from sale has retarded or promoted the development and settlement of that country?

A. I would say that it had retarded the development and settlement of the country.

Q. Well, substantially or otherwise?

A. Well, I should say substantially.

Q. I will ask you to state whether, in your judgment, if the lands that we have been referring to as railroad lands in those townships that you have referred to and which are involved in this suit, had been disposed of to settlers, or should be disposed of to settlers now, would that territory or would it not become settled and populated by settlers?

A. I think it would.

Q. You said, in answer to a former question of mine as to whether it would be a pleasant place for a home, that some places would be isolated. Would that condition be the same if these railroad lands should be turned over to settlers?

A. No, sir.

Q. I will ask you whether, in your judgment, the withholding of the railroad lands from settlement has had any effect upon the settlement of the intervening even numbered sections?

A. Well, I would think it would have had some effect on it, possibly.

Q. How, with reference to the establishment of roads and schools. What effect has the withholding of these lands from settlement had in that respect?

A. Well, it has not tended to development or building of roads and schools, farther than what it has contributed in tax. The railroad company are probably taxed for the land. They might have used the tax on the roads to some extent.

Q. Do you know, as former school superintendent, that a certain number of pupils are required in order to establish a school and maintain one?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, are you familiar with any of the other parts of Columbia County that are similar to that part of Columbia County where the railroad lands are situated?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of similar lands being settled upon in the other parts of the county?

A. Yes, sir. Take the Nehalem Valley, for instance; that is in Columbia County—quite a good deal of the Nehalem Valley. That was heavy timbered lands, and it has been settled up along the river and on the hills. There they have established schools and built roads, and have some of them made some good farms—especially in the bottom lands, where the clearing possibly would not be so heavy. There would be some tracts, maybe, the timber would be scattering on the bottom; but the hill land is heavily covered with timber, and they have good schools and good roads in that Nehalem Valley.

Q. Do you know of any instances where the lands adjoining the railroad lands involved in this suit are in the possession of settlers and being used for the purpose of settlement?

A. I can call to mind just at this time about one place owned by Mr. Grand. If I remember rightly, he is really on a railroad section. And he is making a good living there on the place. It is on Scappoose Creek, and of course he has some little bottom land, but most of his land has been timbered hill land.

Q. You mean it was formerly a railroad section?

A. I think it was, if I remember correctly about it.

Q. That the company had sold?

A. Yes.

Q. You don't mean it is land involved in this suit?

A. There has been a few tracts sold by the railroad company in early days up in the vicinity of Scappoose.

Q. But that is not the land involved in this suit that that man lives on?

A. No; but it is adjoining the railroad land, other railroad land.

Q. Now, these instances where you know of the land being cleared of heavy timber, either by slashing, as you have described it, or fully cleared by removal of the stumps, are they of rare occurrence, or are they of frequent enough occurrence so as to indicate that the same could be done as to the other lands?

A. I would say they were frequent enough to say that could be done with other lands.

Q. At the present time the settler would not have to burn the timber? It could be sold, couldn't it?

A. Why, in a great many instances, I believe it could be sold, anywhere near any of the logging camps. You see, in that county, there is a number of railroads running out into the logs, into the timber.

Q. You mean logging roads?

A. Logging roads; and anywhere in the vicinity of these roads, the timber could be sold to those logging camps.

Whereupon witness testified that most of these logging roads run down to the Columbia River, he thinks all of them run down to the Columbia River so that the logs could either be disposed of at the mills along the Columbia there, or towed in the Columbia to some market. The price of this land after it is cleared and put into shape for cultivation, speaking in a general way, depends somewhat on its proximity to the front. What he means by the the front is near the river or railroad. Land within six or eight miles, as he has before stated, is worth fifty or sixty dollars an acre after it is cleared of stumps. Of course nearer the front, one can scarcely buy any cleared land for less than $100 or $150 an acre down his way. Further back it might possibly not be worth so much as that. His answer includes the slopes as well as the low level lands. The river runs almost north along opposite St. Helens, as shown on this map, Defendants' Exhibit 259, and these railroad lands that he has been referring to, are shown on the map, most of them, as in townships 3 and 4 north, ranges 2 and 3 west, and they extend from the river five or six to ten or twelve miles. Most of these railroad lands are pretty heavily timbered. Some of it he would consider good saw timber. His recollection is, that the stumpage, generally speaking, in there, is assessed at about two dollars a thousand. He does not think there would be any doubt of the ability of a settler to clear the land and make a home if he had the benefit of that timber, if he was anywhere near those logging roads to dispose of it. He might have a tract too far away, that he could not dispose of it. That is, he could not give assurance that his answer would apply to each individual quarter section. He does not think it would in every instance require 160 acres of that land to maintain a settler and his family, with the possibility of raising small fruit and vegetables and things in that section of the country. He could make a living on ten acres provided he had it in small fruits and things of that kind when that country is ultimately cleared and settled up, because he could get a market for it, and would raise enough on ten acres to support an ordinary family. He cannot say exactly that he knows where the McLaffertys and a number of others represented by Mr. Lafferty, made what they claim to be settlements in there, and made application to purchase land from the railroad company; he cannot say that he knows exactly where those lands are situated. He does not think he has been up in there on those lands. He has not been there within the past four or five years, but he does not mean to qualify his former testimony that he is acquainted with that general territory. He has been over that territory quite a good deal, but not since this controversy arose.

Whereupon on cross examination witness testified that he sold the timber on his homestead in 1889, he thinks, to Wickstrom & Howard, and received a dollar a thousand for the fir and cedar, and did not realize over $500. These people to whom he sold were men that owned a little mill built on the corner of his homestead. If he had kept that timber until now, he could easily have gotten two dollars a thousand for it, and he thinks two dollars a thousand is the usual market price of stumpage reasonably accessible to logging roads or some means of transportation. The Chapman Timber Company has been buying quite a good deal of stumpage in there, and the Benson Lumber Company, the Nehalem Investment Company, and the Lamb Company, and several other companies have been buying timber lands through there. In fact, he has made a number of abstracts for the Benson Lumber Company and all of those companies. He refers to S. Benson, and he knew him well when he drove a yoke of oxen into St. Helens. He has made his money in timber lands and logging, a great deal of it in Columbia County, and in buying timber lands and stumpage in Columbia County. He knows that Benson is interested in building in Portland.

Q. Now, suppose that these Lafferty people, who have attempted to buy this land from the railroad company, or made applications to buy it, at $2.50 an acre, should get a deed from the railroad company and a good title at $2.50 an acre, what would they be able to do with the best quarter section of timber that is situated in that group of claims or quarter sections that these clients of Mr. Lafferty have applied for? What would they be able to do with that quarter section—what could they sell it for?

A. Well, if it was accessible to any of these railroads, they could sell it for possibly two dollars a thousand.

Q. What would be the stumpage? I mean what would be the quantity of merchantable logging timber that the best quarter section of this land would carry—about how many million feet, board measure?

A. Well, I think there is tracts out there in that section of the country that will go six million to the quarter section. That is an exceptionally good one, though.

Q. What would they average, the timber land?

A. Well, take it all the way through, they would average probably three million.

Q. Now, if they averaged—if the best one brought six million——

A. That might be too large, but I am not certain about that.

Q. You are reasonably familiar though with the timber lands of Columbia County and the contents of these quarter sections?

A. Yes, sir. I have worked in the timber quite a good deal.

Q. And you have been in the abstract business, and in a general way have knowledge of what these timber companies are paying for these quarter sections?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And other tracts?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon witness testified that the market for timber land has been pretty active for the last five years in Columbia County. These people of whom he speaks, like the Chapman Timber Company, are large concerns, buying a large acreage for the timber. If a quarter section had six million feet board measure on it, and one could get two dollars a thousand, that would be twelve thousand dollars for a quarter section. It would be pretty hard to say what would become of these timber quarters of Mr. Lafferty's clients if they got this title, that is, what would be done with them. They might sell the timber and reserve the land. If the lands were in close proximity to those of the Chapman Timber Company and these other large companies, they would probably be transferred to these large companies, and he would say that it is probably the case in his county that substantially all the homesteads and cash entries and timber entries and entries under the timber and stone act, where they carry valuable timber, would probably be transferred to these large companies. He knows of a number of homesteads and pre-emption claims that were sold to these timber men. In nearly all instances the companies buy the title as well as the timber. There are a few instances where the land has been reserved. That is, there are a few instances next to the Columbia River, within four or five miles, where the owner of land wants to reserve the land and has some timber, and he sells the stumpage, as he did with his. He does not own his homestead now. He sold it about 1898 to William Skuzie, who is himself not living on the place but his son and son-in-law have divided the place between them and have been living there all the time. He would not say that all of these timber lands shown on Defendants' Exhibit 259 are within six to fifteen miles of the Columbia, there may be others beyond that. It would be about fifteen miles from St. Helens to the farthest railroad land. These railroad lands are on different elevations, and will range from eight to six hundred feet up to twelve or fourteen hundred feet, the highest point. These lands are in what one would suppose would be called the Coast Range, a part of the Coast Range. They are more or less rough, some of them, and some of them are gradual slopes; quite a good deal of that land is a kind of gradual slope. According to that map, Defendants' Exhibit 259, all of that land came to the company under the grant of May 4, 1870, and the yellow field follows along north from Hillsboro about ten or twelve miles, almost in a body clear across that part of Columbia and Washington counties within the limits of this grant, with no railroad land either sold or unsold in that territory; that is, if that map is correct. He thinks the majority of these lands in yellow along the Columbia River, on both sides of it extended to a point three or four miles west of Yankton, with no railroad land either sold or unsold of any consequence in that territory, except a little over in Clarke County, Washington, if the map is correct. He supposes that Holbrook is in the area shown on this map on the Astoria road, just below where the United Railways turns out at Burlington in Washington County. Holbrook is just built down the river on the slough. Most all of this unsold railroad land in green is hill land, and there are some large burns in there, which was heavily timbered until these burns. There might be a section burned there. He could not say if any of Lafferty's clients have made applications on any of these burns, or that any one has made application to purchase any of these burns. He does not know who has made application, and who has not. Some of the burned land is owned by men that have taken up homesteads. There are a few settlements out there on the burned even sections, but there is very little. There are not over four or five claims in the burn. Most of them are homesteads; in fact they were all at the beginning homesteads. There is some dead timber, and a few cedars possibly, left on these homesteads. That burned area is about ten miles away from St. Helens, near what they call Bunker Hill. It is pretty hard to say how many saw mills there are in Columbia County. There are two at St. Helens, one at Scappoose and five or six at Rainier, four or five at Clatskanie, besides one or two other country mills probably. He could not tell exactly how many there are. These saw mills are not all on the Columbia River. The mill at Scappoose is out near this railroad land, out towards up Scappoose Creek, toward the Chapman Timber Company, which has a logging road from that down to the S. P. & S., which crosses the railroad. Mills at Clatskanie are off the river a little ways, some of those mills are off the river. There is a Westport slough in Columbia County out of which logs are rafted to Portland. The Benson Logging Company logs in the Westport slough, or did log there, and he thinks Benson sold to Portland, and also rafted to San Francisco. He thinks St. Helens has about a thousand population now. Rainier is supposed to have the greatest population of any town in Columbia County—Rainier or Clatskanie. Rainier has about 1359 population, according to the census of 1910, and the population of the county in 1910 of 10,580, has increased some; he would think it has increased ten per cent in two years. St. Helens is about twenty-seven miles from Portland by rail. Goble is twelve miles below St. Helens, in Columbia County The Northern Pacific Railway Company built and operated its trains across the river at Goble, from Puget Sound to Portland about 1883, and it has been in operation up until the bridge was built at Vancouver about two years ago. The Astoria & Columbia River Railroad, operating from Portland to Astoria, does not touch St. Helens. This road has been there twelve years at least, and the Northern Pacific operated all of its trains by way of Goble, across the Columbia River, between Puget Sound and Portland, until the bridge was built by it across the Columbia at Vancouver in the last three or four years. The Astoria & Columbia River Railroad Company has been operating trains between Portland and Astoria, through Rainier and a little west of St. Helens daily, and sometimes three or four trains a day, for the last ten or twelve years. Speaking of these lands as being agricultural, he means after the timber has been removed.

Whereupon, on redirect examination, witness testified that he thinks A. B. Hammond was instrumental in building this railroad from Portland to Astoria, and that he held it some time before he disposed of to the Northern Pacific Railway Company, and it did not become the factor that it is today until after it became a part of the Northern Pacific Railway System. His recollection is that the Northern Pacific Railroad was built by the Northern Pacific in 1883, and the road between Portland and Astoria did not become a part of the Northern Pacific Railway System until something like 1904 or 1905.

Q. Now, Mr. Quick, you said that if these lands were sold at $2.50 an acre to settlers, there would be a market for the lands by the demand for them on the part of those large timber companies, and that those who purchased them from the railroad company could sell them to the large timber companies if they desired to?

A. That is for the timber, yes.

Q. Well, now, would it be necessary for a man who bought those lands, desiring to make a home on them, to do that?

A. No, it would not be absolutely necessary for him to do that.

Q. Of course, a man, after he had cleared it up and made a nice home of it, he could still sell it, if he wanted to get the money out of it, the same as you did with yours?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is true, isn't it?

A. That is true.

Q. Well, do you mean to testify that, if these lands should be sold by the railroad company to settlers, they would necessarily be passed on by the settlers to large timber companies?

A. No, sir; not necessarily. Taking that as a supposition, it could be done, you see, if they wanted to.

Q. In your judgement, do you think that they could sell the timber and retain the land, if they wished to?

A. Well, they do in some instances sell the timber and retain a portion of the land; not all of it, but a little home, or something that way. But generally speaking, the timber company wants the whole title when they buy. I mean the timber company in buying would want the whole title. That has been the custom on nearly all the land that was bought in Columbia County.

Q. That is true largely because, where the timber is sold on a stumpage basis it has to be removed within a specified time?

A. Yes.

Q. Whereas if the timber company buys the land itself, it can hold the land indefinitely?

A. Certainly.

Q. And has no restriction as to the time that it must remove the timber. It that it?

A. Yes, sir. That is right.

Q. But do you know whether in these railroad sections concerning which you have testified, a settler could not find a market for the timber if he desired to sell the timber and retain the land?

A. Just read that question.

A. No.

Q. That would be a matter for future development of the market?

A. Yes. It would, yes.

Whereupon C. F. CARTER, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he lives at present at Gold Hill, in Jackson County, Oregon. He is forty-four years old, and has lived in Oregon about thirty-two years, most of the time in the meadows of Evans Creek. His father lived in Jackson County since about 1880. He lived right in there in the meadows all the time but about two years, referring to a place named Meadows of Evans Creek, that is what they called it when they went in there. His father lived in section 21, township 34 south, range 2 west, for about nineteen or twenty years. He went on there when witness was about fifteen years, about 1883, something like that. His father had a tract of eighty acres. When his father went on it the land was pretty well covered with brush—some little timber. His principal business when he lived on that place was farming that eighty-acre tract. He did not own the eighty acres. The railroad company was supposed to own it. His father never got title to it. He could not say whether he ever made an application to the railroad company to buy it. The company was not selling the land but had taken it off the market. The company was not selling, because the land was off the market. He does not know whether his father ever actually made application for it. His father left the land because he could not get title to it. His father had a family. This land was principally plow land—most of it good farming land. They were near Medford, Central Point and Gold Hill. They were all near about the same, and Spikenard is in the same township, or at least he supposes it is. It is in township 34 south, range 2 west. The general character of the land in that locality is rather hilly, and level spots around on it, and springs, and the like of that. There were settlers in the vicinity of his father's place. The land was hilly and mountainous, with fields on it, little fields around on it. There are about ten or eleven settlers who live within a radius of seven or eight miles of his father's place. They had pretty good little mountain ranches and were making a living on it. These ranches were built on the mountains. One of them was right pretty nearly on the divide. He has been over a good deal of that country there, all around in the mountains there. He used to hunt in there quite a little, and that was the same general character as this land that was settled on there. Settlers were interspersed through this mountain country.

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified that he could not give the description of this eighty of railroad land which his father lived on, by legal subdivisions. It was in section 21, township 34 south, range 2 west; quite a ways from Wimer, and about half a mile from that fork of Evans Creek which runs up through the Meadows. Meadows was like a little meadow in an early day, and the place called "The Meadows" covers several sections. It is over eighteen miles on Evans Creek up from Woodville, but he does not know the exact distance. The country down on Evans Creek is a fine little valley there, but it is different land up there where his father lived. Down on Evans Creek is bottom land, and this that he refers to is not. Woodville is at the mouth of Evans Creek, and is about eighteen or twenty miles distant from his father's place. It is not level country all the way up there. That country is up quite a little ways, and then it is not level, then opens out into the Meadows again. It is a fact that the country on Evans Creek, the farm land on Evans Creek, is of the same general character as the farming land up around Central Point in Jackson County. It may be some of it just as good, but it is not the same character of land, all of it. There is a whole lot of difference between one land and another, one is made land and the other is not. A lot of that land over about Central Point and Medford is made land along the creek bottom. Central Point is on the railroad and on land that has been there for many years, and Central Point has been a town since the railroad was constructed through there in 1884 or 1885. Gold Hill is about nine miles from the mouth of Evans Creek, and Wimer is on Evans Creek. He cannot tell how far his father's place was from Wimer. He has been down through there. He cannot tell how long a stream Evans Creek is. His father went on to this piece of railroad land in 1883, and lived there about nineteen or twenty years, during which time he did not have any title and he did not pay for the land. He does not know whether he applied to purchase it or not. He said the land was taken off the market was the reason his father did not get it, but he could not tell exactly when it was taken off the market. He does not know that it was not taken off the market until 1903, but he knows that it was taken off before 1903 because he has been gone from there since that. It was taken off while witness was on there, and he left before that. His father died about 1903. Witness did not apply to purchase this land because the company had taken it off the market. He knows it was taken off of the market because he heard that it was taken off. He did not write to the company or any of its employes to find out. His father stayed on the land until he died. Witness moved away from there just about that time. His father did not die on the premises, but he had moved off of it. He farmed that place there about nineteen or twenty years, and had about twenty-five acres in cultivation. They had some hill land on it. There was about sixty acres of that could be plowed—sixty acres of the eighty, after the timber and brush was taken off. They could not plow it with the timber and brush on it. There was more brush than there were fir trees.

Q. Now, you want the court to understand that this unsold railroad land within those two or three townships surrounding this eighty is about the same character as this eighty acres that your father lived on for about twenty years, and didn't buy or pay anything for?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, what is the fact about that?

A. Well, the facts is what I told you a little bit ago, told this man about the character of the land—these other people that was up on the mountain sides.

Whereupon witness testified that he never cruised any of these unsold lands of the railroad company. Some of these unsold railroad lands may be timber lands, and some might not be. There are places there a man could settle on and make a little home out of it. They have timber. There are not many sections in there that has not got a little timber on it. There is one saw mill up the hillside further on Evans Creek. Kesterson and Silsby's saw mill is away down below—just how far he could not tell, but it is quite a little ways. He could not tell where their saw mill is, but it is on Evans Creek, that is, they had one in there. He does not know where they have a mill now. He could not tell anything about the saw timber below there, because he was only along the road down there—he never had anything to do with land in there. All he is speaking about is right up there, close to where he lives. All that he knows about that that is back in the hills, he has been over there hunting.

Whereupon D. P. CALDWELL, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn testified that he is fifty-one years old, and resides at Walker, Lane County, Oregon. He was born in Iowa and came to Walker in the year 1890, and has made that place his home. He has not been there all the time. He lived there most of his time for more than fifteen years, and has been engaged in farming in Oregon. Prior to coming to Oregon he was engaged in farming and as a laborer. Examining Defendants' Exhibit 259, witness testified that he was acquainted with the lands in township 20 south, ranges 3 and 4 west, and in township 19, which would be north of him. He is pretty well acquainted all over three or four townships in the country there around about six to eight or ten miles in any direction from Walker, and is acquainted with the country of which he speaks, and knows better by the names than he can tell by the map. He has been to Wendling, but he is not acquainted with the lands through there, he only just went up the Mohawk Valley and back. This yellow field running clear through to the end of the map or the side of the map is the wagon road grant there. That would be south and east from Eugene, and he has been up through the Pleasant Hill country and south of the Pleasant Hill country he has been on the Coast Fork of the Willamette; he has been through that country and through the hill country there. He has been up in that country from the Oregon & Southeastern Railroad; north of that railroad that runs east from Cottage Grove. He has been over those hills towards Bear Creek, and through to Pleasant Hill. He does not know the country so well by the number of sections and ranges as he does by observation. He knows it better by creeks and towns. He has been on Lost Creek and through that section of the country. Always when he was in the hills he observed what was around him, took notice of the timber and the land. He had a homestead in township 19 south, range 4 west, in section 25, but did not prove up on it. He lived there about three years, a little more. It was very good land. There was timber on the land, and open places; kind of bench land formation, that is, for grade. He farmed it in the way new settlers generally farm such land and he knows what a settler has to buck up against when he starts it. He knows what they have to contend with. He had to build a road about three-quarters of a mile to get to it.

He left his homestead on account of sickness; he was advised to take his wife and family away; and to get to send his children to school, young children. He has three children. He made his living on his homestead while he was there.

Q. Now, from your observation of this land that you have been over, railroad land and land in the vicinity of the railroad land, what percentage of 160-acre tracts by contiguous 40-acre subdivisions, but not by quarter sections, would furnish support for a family if the settler would go on that land?

A. What percentage?

Q. Of the 160-acre tracts would support a family, to move on there as a settler?

A. I don't know as I just understand the question. That is, what percentage of the 160 acres would it take to support a family?

A. No, that is not the question, Mr. Caldwell. About how many of these 160-acre tracts, described the way I have in my previous question, could a man go on with his family and make a living on, as a settler on them?

A. Well, he can make a living on any of them that I have seen.

Q. Would there be sufficient plow land to raise the hay and grain and vegetables that he would need?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon witness testified that there was railroad land on two sides of him in the vicinity of his homestead.

There were three quarter sections right around him where he was. They were, if anything, better than the quarter section that he took, because he was up higher in the mountains. About the first thing a settler starting out on one of these 160-acre tracts would have to do, would be to make a road to get there, and the next thing he would have to do would be to cut off the brush, build him a house and move in, and haul in enough supplies to last him about a year, and then go to slashing brush and burning it, and seed it down in wheat and grasses, and get his cows accustomed to the place, and go to making a living. In his experience, lands had been cleared and put in cultivation in that vicinity, he helped to clear land in the territory with which he is acquainted, of which he speaks. The character of the land that he cleared was rolling, had timber and brush on it; some of it pretty steep grade. He has helped to clear land that was steep enough that they would let the horses rest after it was cleared, going up the hill two or three times maybe. The horses needed rest drawing discs or weeders or anything. He helped the orchard company clear off some land a year ago last June that this summer he helped cultivate, and he would let his team rest two or three times going up the hills. In the hill land there, in the two or three townships with which he is mostly acquainted, he thinks that they could, according to what land he has worked over, farm about eighty per cent of it; about eighty per cent of it could be put under the plow.

Whereupon on cross examination witness testified that he means by agricultural or plow land that it could be plowed after the timber and brush had been removed; that is to say, probably twenty per cent would be too steep or too rocky to plow. He does not know whether this homestead that he took in section 25, township 19 south, range 4 west, upon which he lived for three years, had been homesteaded before he took it up. The man that located him upon it said that it had been entered before, he told him that it had been—the entry had been cancelled some time. That is to say, he thinks it was lost to the railroad grant because it had been settled upon or entered prior to the time the railroad grant was made. That was the way he understood it, and then it had been abandoned and he found it, or the man that located him found it as vacant land. Before the grant became effective it had been taken and then abandoned, that was the way he was told about it and the way he understood it. He does not know what has become of it since he abandoned it. He does not know how the title is, or whether it is public land now or not. There was a man who bought some of his stuff that he had on there, but there is no one living on that land now. There might have been some good saw timber on this 160 acres of his, but not very much. Some of it was pretty rough, and he could have cleared some of it, and did clear and raise hay. He did not clear very many acres free from stumps, probably not more than two acres, but mowed over about twelve acres of hay. He does not think more than two acres were cleared free from stumps, and he would say that he slashed and burned besides the two acres about twelve acres. He had cows while he was living there with his wife and three children, and these cows roamed outside and pastured over the railroad land wherever they wanted to go. He had three cows to milk, and several calves and yearlings, something like that, but he did not go into the stock business particularly. These cows helped to make his family living. He did not keep hogs, he thinks he had only one hog on the place. He did not keep any goats, but had three or four horses, but did not raise horses for sale, nor sell any grain or fruit off his place. He sold some vegetables, some onions, potatoes, lettuce and such stuff. He does not know how much he would sell any one year. They would, when they would go down, take a little stuff out of the ground. Just like one would take a marketing of eggs. They took eggs, too, and some chickens. He raised feed and chickens and a little butter to sell, and they would take whatever they had to spare. He presumes that he did not get over forty or fifty dollars a year out of that. When his wife got sick while they were living on the place, the doctor told him that he had better move away and he moved down to Cottage Grove, which is a pretty good town, but he does not know its population. That is the place where this railroad begins that leads out to Bohemia; he has not been out there on the railroad, but has been to Bohemia, out to the mines there. That is a good timber country, and there are a good many saw mills out on that road up in the timber. He has been once over to Wendling. Most of the time since he came to Oregon he has been living at Walker, excepting the three years he was on his farm; he has been away from there some. He lived at Cottage Grove between three and four months. Since he left the homestead he has been farming and laboring, where he lives now at Walker, and he only has twelve acres at Walker; he rents land. Walker is his post-office, and the twelve acres of land which he owns is about a mile and a half from Walker, and the place that he rents is little more than two miles. These twelve acres that he owns was bought from the railroad company, but he does not know how long ago it was bought from the railroad company. It is a part of the old settled country. The land that he rents is in a railroad section. He is in section 5, township 20 south, range 3 west; that had been sold a good while ago by the railroad company, and of these twelve acres probably three acres in cultivation, and the balance—nine acres—are stumps and timber, logs. He has never worked in the cruising business, and but very little—a few days maybe—in a saw mill. During the time that he lived on his homestead, he did not go out and work for wages anywhere; he might have helped his neighbors, to exchange work, just swapping work among the farmers. He did not go out to work. He never went over any of these railroad lands in the three or four townships of which he has any knowledge, for the purpose of estimating any timber that was on the land. He knows where the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company's timber is at Saginaw, but he does not know how far their holdings go, but their mills are quite a ways, he would say five or six miles from the railroad. That is pretty fine timber that the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company has in there, but he does not know how much timber to a forty they have—he has no knowledge of that.

Whereupon U. S. DIX, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he lives at Colton, Clackamas County, Oregon, and was born in Missouri. He is forty-four years old, and was seven years old when his people moved to Oregon. They moved over in Washington County, lived near Glencoe, he thinks about four years, and then moved from Washington County into Clackamas County, Oregon; that was about thirty-three years ago. His father took a homestead in section 34, township 4 south, range 3 east, and died about 1898. He has lived on this homestead since he moved to Clackamas County. His father proved up and got a patent, and witness is living there now with his mother. His father's family, and since he died, the survivors of the family, have made their living on that place; spent all of their time on the farm; all the time excepting about two weeks in the fall, when he was running a threshing machine, threshing in that vicinity for others than on his own farm. He threshed over townships 4 and 5 south, range 3 east, and he is familiar in a general way with the development and settlement of that country, but does not know particularly of any railroad land in his vicinity. He has been around over the country there quite a little, but never paid any particular attention to any of the land. Looking at Defendants' Exhibit 266, witness says that he lives in section 34 of that township there, and that the lands marked in black is railroad land. He has been around over township 5 quite a little, running around with the threshing machine, and he has never been up in the townships east of that, in range 4 east, and does not know anything about that in there; he does not hunt any. He has not been any further south than in the township south of township five, only in crossing it, as he is on the road going from his place to Gervais, and in that way he has been up in there a time or two and passed it in crossing; that is all he knows about it. He is not acquainted with that part of the country at all. Gervais is on the railroad, in the Willamette Valley, but he is not acquainted with that part of the country at all. Section 33, that joins his place on the west, averages up with his land and is just about the same thing as his land, and the land north of him in township 4 south, range 3 west, sections 29, 27, 25, 23 and 21, are just about the same as where he lives there, about the same all the way through there. That is true with reference to section 31. He does not know hardly what one would call the soil they have out there. It is burned over land; that is, a good share of it has been burned over, that is, burned over before the settlers went in there; there is quite a bit of it is what they call the burn; there are bodies of timber, too—some timber; the burns are in patches. Where they have done any clearing the timber has been burned and it is out in the open. They had to burn the old logs and stumps where they cleared—they had to burn them. Some of the timber was down—quite a lot of it was down—when his father moved there. They had to burn the logs, the rotten logs and stumps. There is about somewhere around 25 acres in cultivation on this place that his father owned, at the present time. When the family first went there, his father made shingles to furnish the groceries until he got the land open enough so that it would make a living. After they got enough open so that they could make a living, they absolutely made their living on the land. He first commenced threshing in 1895, when they first got the machine, seventeen years ago, and he has been doing some of this threshing for his neighbors since that time, he has been threshing every year since that time. It would average about fifteen days each year. This year he thinks he threshed at about twenty-six or twenty-eight different places. He could make his living from his place independent of the threshing outfit.

Q. The bill of complaint in this case shows that in that township 4 south, range 3 east, the railroad company has, subject to the rights asserted by the Government in this case, lands in section 1 over 500 acres; section 3, 40 acres; section 5, over 200 acres; section 9, 40 acres; section 13, 280 acres; section 19, 47 acres; section 21, 200 acres; section 23, 280 acres; section 25, 200 acres; section 27, 320 acres; section 29, 120 acres; section 31, 240 acres, and in section 33, 120 acres. Now, in your judgment, does your general description of that land apply to these lands generally, or do you wish to make any exception as to any of these particular lands?

A. No, I think it would be general.

Q. What is your opinion as to whether a settler could go in there and settle upon these lands, and make a living for himself and family, on tracts as large as 160 acres?

A. Well, I think he could do it all right.

Q. Now, the other township that you are acquainted with. You say it is township 5 south of the one which you live in?

A. Yes.

Q. The bill of complaint in this case shows that there are in that township considerably over two thousand acres of land, commencing in section 1 and running through some of the odd numbered sections down to section 23. Is your general testimony with reference to the character of these lands and their susceptibility to settlement, does it apply generally to those lands?

A. I think it is all just about the same, as far as that goes, as near as I could make out.

Whereupon witness testified that there is quite a lot of that land in there that is occupied. Section 35 has four or five different families living on it; they just came in there a couple or three years ago. They are improving right along. As far as he has been around over other similar lands in these same townships in the possession of settlers, they are making a living on their land, those that have land there. He never applied to purchase any of these lands from the railroad company. He is still living on his place.

Whereupon on cross examination witness testified that he thinks his father entered this tract as a homestead about thirty-three years ago, when witness was about eleven years old. He went with his father on the place. There wasn't any of it cleared when they went there, and there was only a little shack built on there; he does not know who built it. It had been settled upon before his father entered it; there was a fellow who filed on it and built a shack there, but he does not know why he gave it up. He supposes he attempted to homestead it before his father did; he filed on it, but he does not know anything about that. The first entryman had just had a little spot around the shack there, probably a quarter of an acre or so, cleared. The shack was a little box house of rough lumber. He does not remember the man's name. His father filed a contest and succeeded in the contest, showing that the man had not complied with the homestead law by reason of settlement. He could not tell whether this man had any family or not. All he knows is that his father filed a contest against a man who had previously tried to enter the land under the homestead law, and his father was successful, and had a preference right of entry after the contest was decided in his favor, and he entered it as a homestead and lived there until he died. He did not pay anything for the land excepting the five years residence and cultivation. His father died October 15th, 1908, and had a family of seven children, of which he was the second. The children all left home but him. His brothers have a saw mill and his sister is married.

There are three brothers interested in the saw mill, the saw mill is twelve miles southeast of Oregon City. They get their timber for sawing off their neighbors. They did not take homesteads; they did not file on any lands at all. He has not taken a homestead and never tried to take a homestead out in that country. There were a lot of even sections that were public lands when he went out there with his father, but he was not old enough to take them. He was twenty-one about 1889, but there were no public lands to speak of there at that time, it had been taken up. As far as he knows the people were living on all the quarter sections in the even sections.

Q. I know, but that would make about four people to every section of this government land prior to 1889. Now, you don't mean to say that there were four families living on every even section in that country prior to the time you became of age so you could take some, do you?

A. Well, I don't know as to that.

Whereupon witness testified that he is about four or five miles south of Hyland, six miles east of Meadowbrook, a mile from Colton, northeast, and lives on Milk Creek, in the northeast quarter of section 34. There is a man by the name of Swanson who lives in section 33. He got his land from the Swedish Colonization Company, who got it from Mr. Jones. Jones had a lot of land there and some of it he got from the railroad company, and some he does not know how he got. He knows where Canyon Creek is. He notices on this map that the green colors on these lands in there, different sections and parts of sections, and that the land colored green are unsold lands of the railroad company involved in this suit, and that colored blue is sold land, formerly railroad land, and not involved in this suit, and he notices the green is pretty scattering around him and around Colton where he lives, he thinks there is not very much railroad land left there compared with the whole section of the country. He notices the yellow field on this map, showing lands that the company did not get, but which went to people under the donation land law, or homesteads or pre-emptions, before the railroad company got its title, before the grant took effect. Most of that land west of him is in the yellow field. These lands on Mill Creek are not level little bottoms. Towards the upper end, it is just narrow bottoms and as one gets down further it widens out. He did his threshing in the country north, west and south of Colton; threshed in Hyland, but did not go in around Springwater, or far up as Schubel. He was out as far as Clark's, about six miles. He would think that he went over about twelve or fourteen miles square in threshing. Most of his threshing was done west, north and south of where he lived. They threshed over on Dickey's Prairie, just north of Molalla River. Dickey's Prairie would be off a little south and east on the north side of the Molalla River, the north Molalla River, in the Molalla bottom, which is pretty good farming country in there. He could not say as to whether that country on the Molalla River had been settled for fifty years, or whether it was donation land claims in the early days. Once in awhile there are old farm houses. They mostly built new houses in there. What they call Dickey's Prairie, is an old settled country. He could not tell how many bushels of wheat he threshed in a season of fifteen days without his book. He threshed for so much a bushel, and they threshed about a thousand bushels a day this year. A dry ordinary season, other than like August just past, they would thresh fifteen hundred bushels a day if they got a good run, but they did not average a thousand this year. They threshed oats, too. They did not thresh oats or wheat up in this country east of where he lives, not in the mountains. He would say that when these lands were cleared and grubbed of timber two-thirds of it could be plowed. One could not do it before it was cleared. He could not tell if any of the unsold railroad land has good timber on it, for he never cruised it any, and never paid any attention to the timber. He does not know whether it has a thousand or a million feet to the quarter section, or to the eighty, or anything about that, and all he means to say is that when the timber is cleared off, whatever there is, there is two-thirds of it that has soil and is sufficiently level that it could be farmed. His father lived on his place until he died; homesteaded it thirty-three years ago, and had twenty-five acres cleared altogether of the 160 acres. They had stock there—two cows, one hog and a team. Most of the ranchers up there are going into the dairying business now. They don't raise much stock. Down towards his place they are trying to get into the dairying business.

He has never been up in the mountains there. It would be hard to tell what is the average value of this land of his father's, and like land, which belongs to the railroad company, per acre on an average, but he would say that his father's place there was worth something like $25.00 an acre. Around Colton there is not much valley land, it is mostly rolling land, and he would think it is worth about twenty or twenty-five dollars an acre. Some of that which he threshed on was worth more than that over on Dickey's Prairie and around Meadowbrook. He could not say, taking 160 acres or 80 acres in a tract, how much it would be worth, but he supposes it would probably be worth from twenty-five to seventy-five dollars an acre, around Dickey's Prairie in there. Colton has a postoffice and store. There is no postoffice at Clarkes. There is no postoffice at Meadowbrook either. At Molalla there is a postoffice and store; he is not sure whether there are two stores there or not. Elwood is just a postoffice. There is no postoffice at Hyland or anything. At Liberal there is a store. There is a flouring mill and lumber mill at Union Mills. At Mulino there is a flouring mill and two stores and a saw mill. There is no postoffice at Schubel. He never was at Dodge, does not know anything about it. There is no postoffice at James. He is not acquainted at Springwater—in that part of the country. He is twenty miles southeast of Oregon City, and about twenty miles from Canby and Barlow. The Molalla is quite a little stream. He does not know where it heads; he never was at the head of it, and he could not say if it heads up in the Cascade Range; it is up there somewhere in the eastern part of Clackamas County. He never was up there and does not know anything about it.

Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified that he does not know who composes the Swedish Colonization Society that handled the lands bought by S. W. R. Jones from some one, he does not know who Jones got it from; that land was situated there in section 35, that is east—he owned that, and then in township 5 south of him. Jones owns some in there, he owned something in the neighborhood of four thousand acres. The Swedish Colonization Company bought that of the Jones heirs. The company bought the whole piece—the Swedish Colonization Company—and they distributed it out just as one wanted it. One could buy five, or ten, or forty, or eighty acres, whatever he wanted. They have disposed of most of it, and most of it is occupied. They are going ahead and making farms out of it, and people are living on it. Some of them are making a living off that land. Some of them are working out. There are poor men who work out once in awhile to get groceries, so they can improve their land. They are still clearing the land. The Swedish Colonization Society bought this land about four years ago, and then there are new ones coming in ever since, every year. He is not sure whether it is more than four years ago; he is not sure about it, it might have been longer than four years; the records are more accurate on that subject than his memory. This land that the Swedish Colonization Society has distributed among settlers is just about the same as the rest of the lands in that general vicinity. He has never been but about a mile east of his place, just across section 35, on 36. Section 36 is just about the same thing as his. He can see the land beyond him there, east. After one gets east of 36, the foot of the mountain begins and he is in what is called the foothills in section 34. Those foothills increase as one approaches the mountain. According to the geological survey, the altitude where he lives is about seven hundred feet.

Whereupon on recross examination witness testified that he knew S. W. R. Jones in his lifetime; does not know whether he is dead or not. He used to live on French Prairie, out near Gervais, and the last he heard of him he was living, and was a speculator in lands, and bought lands wherever he could. He does not remember just when the Swedish Colonization Association bought these lands from Jones or his estate. It seems to him that it was like four years ago, but it may be longer than that. He does not know what they paid an acre for it. This Swedish Colonization Association belongs at Colton, and he does not know who composes it; he knows some of the men who are in the company; they are farmers making homes there. They come from different places, some of them from Dakota, some from Nebraska, and different Easten states, but he could not tell how many of these farmers are in this Swedish Colonization Association. Just a rough guess he would judge about sixty families of them who moved in there, all on this four thousand acres, which they are farming and clearing up. He does not know what they paid for it an acre. They bought whatever they felt like. Some of them had means, and some of them had to borrow money to buy their places, and the Colonization Society helped them. It is a sort of community of interest that these Swedish families had when they organized this association, and are dividing the land among themselves. He threshed grain for them this year. He could not tell how much. Some of them did not have over 150 or 200 bushels, and then some of them had more. Part of these people are east in 35, and part of them are south of where he lives. He threshed for two farmers in section 35. He thinks there are about four families and one bachelor who live in section 35, and the rest are about from a mile to two miles west and south of him, where he threshed. This land is mostly burn. It has been burned off before it was settled; burned a great many years ago, some forty or fifty years ago, maybe longer. He does not know what that land is worth that these people have but it is about the same as his.

Whereupon J. L. BOYLE, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he is fifty-two years old; resides in Canyonville, Douglas County, Oregon, and has lived in Douglas County, where he was born, all his life. He was born and raised in section 7, township 30 south, range 4 west, and the last four years has lived in section 27, township 30 south, range 5 west. The place where he was born in township 30 south, range 4 west, was the donation land claim of his father, who filed on that donation land claim some time in the fifties. His donation land claim was 160 acres, and then he had a pre-emption of 85 acres. He has been a farmer all his life, excepting the last four years; has been personally engaged in farming. He has been a justice of the peace several times, a deputy assessor and notary public, and is a notary public now. He was deputy assessor in 1898, 1899, 1900 and 1901, and as such was required to examine the lands assessed in township 30 south, ranges 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 west. As deputy assessor he worked in that locality, and made the assessments for those townships, and in the vicinity of where he was born and raised. He thinks he is familiar with the land in those townships, having been born and raised there and over them more or less all his life. As deputy assessor he also had to visit all the settlers in that community and assess their personalty and make assessments on their real property. There are railroad lands in the immediate vicinity of his father's donation land claim. Sections 19 and 20 are immediately south of his father's donation land claim in township 30 south, range 4 west. His father applied to purchase railroad land in the seventies; his father and a partner in the stock business made a filing on 160 acres each. His father's was in section 19 and that of his partner, Gilbert McNear, was in section 29. They never obtained the land. He did not exactly make an application, but Mr. Britt was the land appraiser of the company and he made an application to him and offered him $2.50 an acre as the railroad land agent, and Britt said he would put the matter before the company, and he came back afterwards and appraised the land. This land has all been surveyed since. It was the south half of the south half of section 19, 120 acres of which that he applied for. There were 160 acres there vacant, but he only tried to buy three forties. That could be made a good farm, but he did not intend to use it as a farm, but as a stock range to raise stock on. Britt told him that he could have one forty of it for $2.50 an acre and the rest of it for $5.00 an acre. Britt was there and made an examination. He could give the name of one farmer or settler in section 19, township 30 south, range 3 west, who owns lands adjacent to railroad land. B. H. Fate bought 160 acres himself—80 acres that he paid $2.50 for and 80 acres $3.50 an acre for, and he bought a man's right, a man by the name of Andrew Werley, he bought his railroad right and paid $5.00 an acre for it. Werley contracted for the land. Tate took up the contract and paid for the land. He has it practically all under cultivation now. Practically all the railroad land adjacent to that which is now owned by the company, can be made homes. He does not know just how much of it there is, but the greater portion of that can be made good homes; there is no question about that. The even section there are all taken up and homes are on them. The odd sections are railroad lands and, he understands, off the market. That applies generally throughout this territory with which he is acquainted; that is, the even sections are settled upon and the odd sections are vacant.

Q. Now, Mr. Boyle, from your acquaintance with this territory you have testified that you have been over in assessing and have lived in all your life, what percentage of the lands, in 160-acre tracts, could be used as homes; that is, a settler could go on there, take 160 acres, and support his family as the ordinary settler does?

A. Do you mean that it should be tilled, plowed, cultivated, or as a general purpose as a farmer uses his land?

Q. As a farmer uses his land.

A. Well, I should say that he could use the greater per cent of it. I am satisfied, from my observation as an assessor, that fifty per cent of it can be tilled.

Q. Fifty per cent of the lands could be tilled?

A. Yes, sir; in that part of it that I assessed and went over, I am satisfied that fifty per cent of that can be plowed. But it can all be used for pasture land. Now, I am not saying that there isn't timber on it at all, because there is a great deal of good timber on that land.

Whereupon witness testified that in this territory the soil is fertile. They grow wheat, oats, corn, barley, prunes, apples, in fact all kinds of vegetables and fruits, except tropical fruits. They raise stock there. Prunes is the main fruit that they raise; also corn, wheat, oats and barley are the main grains. The people who have settled on the land have the greater portion of the ground cleared and in cultivation. They have gone in to the timber in there and cleared it.

Q. Mr. Boyle, in your opinion, what has been the effect of the failure of the railroad company to comply with the conditions of this grant in refusing to sell land to actual settlers at $2.50 an acre, and in selling the lands in large quantities?

A. It has retarded the development of our country.

Q. In what way, Mr. Boyle?

A. By preventing settlers from settling on this land. But now, if the railroad company would sell it at $2.50 an acre, I don't doubt but what it would soon settle up.

Whereupon witness testified that the demand for land in this locality for settlement purposes is good and has increased in recent years. The first settlers in this country took the bottom lands and the next best the higher lands, and they are now going on up. The bottom land is usually considered best, that is true, but in his referring to bottom land one must understand that the early settlers got on the larger streams and took their homesteads, but where he lives the creek bottoms are just as good land, but it is more narrow. Land of this same general character is being cultivated in the county there and used as homes by farmers.

Whereupon on cross examination witness testified that he assessed these lands around Canyonville for the years 1898 to 1901, both inclusive; that is, four different years. He would not be willing to state the number of acres of railroad land that he thinks he assessed, that the company owned at the time he made the assessment, and could not approximate, for the simple fact that he only assessed land that the company had actual patents for. Ranges 2, 3, 4 and 5 are within the limits of the railroad grant; the northwest part of 1 is within the limits, and the southeast part is not, that is in the idemnity belt, and part of that which he assessed is within the place limits, or within the twenty miles, and a part within the indemnity. He assessed in township 30 south, ranges 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 west. There are thirty-six sections in a township, each section containing 640 acres, and every odd section belonging to the railroad company, with the exception of what had been taken up, and barring two sections in every township for school land. Canyonville, as shown on Defendant's Exhibit 259, lies almost due east of Riddle. He sees that this yellow belt shown on Defendant's Exhibit 259 is all through along the Umpqua River and around Riddle to up towards Myrtle Creek, and that map, according to the legend, represents lands that were within the place limits of this grant, but which had been taken under the donation land law, or the pre-emption law, like his father did, before the railroad grant became effective along about 1889. Canyonville is in section 27, township 30, 4 west. That is an old settled part of that country, and his father's donation land claim is in the next township east, sections 7 and 18. The old home is in section 7, but under the donation land claim his father took part of section 7 and part of section 18. There were other donation land claims along the Umpqua

River, on both sides of the river, and there were a lot of donation land claims taken around Riddle, clear up to Myrtle Creek, and on down to Roseburg, Winchester, Oakland and Wilbur, in all that country. General Lane lived and died at Roseburg, and was the first Governor of Oregon, and the first United States Senator, and that was one of the oldest settled sections of the State of Oregon, around Roseburg. It was first settled in the Willamette Valley, down about Salem and Oregon City, and Clatsop, near Astoria, down on Clatsop Plains. Judge Deady used to live and do business out at Douglas in that Umpqua country. He generally practiced law in Roseburg. There have been sales of railroad land in the vicinity, in township 30, ranges 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 west, but none recently that he knows of. He had this talk about buying this piece of railroad land with Mr. Britt in 1892, he thinks it was, and the company offered 40 acres to him at $2.50 an acre, and the other 80 acres at $5.00 an acre, and he did not buy because he did not care to pay $5.00 an acre for the land. It was worth it then, and is worth more today. In section 30, an adjoining section to 19, Hopkins sold 160 acres for $4500 cash, just the same kind of land, adjoining the very identical part. It would be pretty hard to tell how much this 120 acres would be worth an acre today. Hopkins cleared his land, had it all cleared off and under fence. This other land is not fenced, but he would be willing to give a man $10.00 an acre for this 120 acres if he would give him a deed for it—it is worth that in his judgment. Hopkins' land had improvements on it, and this land has not. He would give $10.00 an acre for it, but would not give any more. This railroad land that he assessed in the two lower west townships is not mostly timbered land. The other township the greater portion of it is timbered. Douglas County did not have a cruise of these lands when he assessed them. They have now, he understands. There are saw mills and timber holdings in the vicinity of these lands. There are three saw mills in the immediate vicinity of Canyonville. In this territory to which he refers there is the Michigan Land Company, represented by the Gardner brothers, that owns land, but he does not know how many acres of timber land they own. Timber is valuable now. He thinks timber first became an item of value for the purpose of market and sale in that section of the country about eight or ten years ago, and timber claims sell from eight hundred dollars to a thousand dollars, depending on the cruise. The saw mills pay from 65 cents to one dollar a thousand for timber where they buy it, depending on the stand on the quarter section as to what it is worth for timber. The demand for timber is not very active. It has never been very flush up there because they are six miles from the railroad and fifty-one miles from the sea. If there was a railroad out from Myrtle Creek up the Umpqua River into the Cascade Mountains so that this timber could be logged to it or hauled to it, the timber would have a very large value, and so would their agricultural land. Transportation is certainly needed. There is a great deal of heavy timber on the South Umpqua up in the Cascade Mountains, and all that it needs is transportation to make the timber and the land valuable.

Q. The first value, though, would be the timber, wouldn't it, primarily.

A. No, I am a farmer. I look at it from the other side.

Q. Now, suppose that you had a quarter section out there near Canyonville, or on the Umpqua River where it could be logged, that had on it six million feet of merchantable saw timber, and the soil was good, but it had this heavy timber on it, and the company would sell that to you for $2.50 an acre, as an actual settler under this law that the government is trying to enforce or assert in this case, don't you think, if you got a good title to that 160 acres, of good timber land, and it went six million feet to the quarter, that you could sell it for about six thousand dollars for the timber alone.

A. And keep the land?

Q. Yes.

A. Sure I would.

Q. Well, don't you think you could do that?

A. No, I don't think so.

Q. What do you think you could get for it?

A. Well, that is a pretty hard proposition. They are selling from $800 to $1000 per claim now.

Q. I understand.

A. Now, if a railroad company would go in there it could not possibly increase the valuation so much, could it?

Q. Well, I am asking you. You said that the stumpage value was about 65 cents.

A. From 65 cents to a dollar a thousand.

Q. Yes, to a dollar a thousand. Now, if it was a dollar a thousand, and there was six million feet on the quarter section, that would be six thousand dollars, wouldn't it?

A. But now wait just a minute.

Q. Well, answer the question and then we will argue it.

A. That is true. That is true. But now we will take the Alder Creek Lumber Company, one mile west of Canyonville, bought from Mr. Biggs six years ago, 160 acres of land that has timber on, 160 acres of land, and they have not taken it half off yet. Well, now, if a timber company is going to be twenty-five or fifty years getting off the timber, why, the man would not live long enough to farm his land, would he?

Q. Well, now, isn't that the trouble with this land, and why it was not settled before the timber had any value was because they could not market the timber?

A. No, sir.

Q. What was it?

A. The trouble has been there has been too much open land to take up in Oregon. Now, people are taking up the timber land just as fast as they can get it, and clearing it in my section of the country just as fast as they can.

Q. Well, now, as a matter of fact you can go down around Myrtle Creek and on the South Umpqua, along the place where your father had a donation land claim, and buy that land that was settled fifty years ago for fifty dollars to seventy-five dollars an acre, can't you?

A. No, you can't, not improved land.

Q. What can you get it for?

A. It is selling at—the place adjoining father's own homestead place was sold for $16,000.

Q. How many acres?

A. 160 acres.

Whereupon witness testified that the place adjoining his father's homestead which sold for sixteen thousand dollars was a place that had prunes that were bearing and selling in the markets of the world. These lands are not all covered with fine prune orchads. Some of them have prune orchards that are twenty-five years old. The areas around Myrtle Creek there have been supplying the prune market, and prunes have been a staple for twenty years.

Q. And the prune orchard of course would bring a big price. But I mean the land that is not put in prune orchards, or that is not in that high state of cultivation like some of this land around Medford, with an orchard on it eight or ten years old, the land is worth about $50 to $75 an acre, isn't it, before the orchard is put on?

A. I think you are just about right. Without an orchard the land is probably worth, would sell for $50 to $75 an acre. With an orchard on it——

Q. A great deal more.

A. Now, the one that I said sold for $16,000 only has 18 acres of an orchard on it.

Q. But eighteen acres of fine prune orchard there, at the prices that rule, would be a fairly good piece of property, wouldn't it?

A. Surely, surely.

Q. Some years you don't make anything on the prunes, and other years you make a good thing? That is right, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon witness testified that never in his experience has it been that prunes would not pay the cost of drying. Some years prunes were really an unprofitable crop, but that was before he was engaged in the business. If the land had timber on it, it certainly could not be used for agricultural land until the timber was removed. Some of this timber is inferior. The better the land the better the timber.

Q. And the value of a quarter section depends largely upon the amount of timber there is on it? At present in the market, I mean.

A. Well, not true, not so altogether in our locality. I am speaking from my immediate vicinity. We do not consider the timber as you people do here probably, because we do not consider that 160 acres that is not worth more than $800 or $1000, it hardly pays a man to file on it. Those people who filed on land, filed on timber claims, are selling those claims now for $800 to $1000; and I think the Gardiner brothers would so testify if they were here.

Q. Well, what are they selling these $800 or $1000 claims for? What are they selling them for? Why don't they stay there and make homes?

A. They were men who were located by timber men, who never intended to make homes there.

Q. Well, then, is that the way these lands have been taken up out there?

A. Well, some of it has been taken up that way, sure.

Q. Timber companies get fellows to go out and enter the land?

A. Well, I don't know that now, but I do know that a great many of them have sold their claims to the Gardiner brothers. It is a Michigan firm—Michigan people.

Q. I understand they have only got $800 to $1000 for the 160 acres?

A. I know of three claims that have been sold for $800.

Q. Did they commute and pay up?

A. They paid for their claims, yes.

Q. That is to say they commuted their homesteads?

A. No.

Q. What were they?

A. They were timber and stone, taken up under the timber and stone act.

Q. They were taken up under the timber and stone act, where they didn't have to live on the place?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They had to go through the farce of swearing that they went and looked at it and saw that it was timber?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Bought it at $2.50 an acre, or whatever the government price was above that?

A. I don't know what the government price was.

Q. As soon as they got the title why then they sold it to these timber companies?

A. Some of them have.

Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified that the majority of these people who bought lands under the timber and stone act were principally residents of towns who went out there and purchased the lands under the timber and stone act, which required no residence, no necessity for cultivation or improvement of the land, and the United States used to sell that land at a flat price of $2.50 an acre until within recent years, but it now bases the price upon an assessment or upon a cruise that the government makes of the land. He does not know of any homesteaders who have gone up there and taken up claims merely for the purpose of getting the timber, who abandoned their claims as soon as they proved up. The Hopkins claim sold for $4500, 160 acres—what they call a mountain ranch. That was in section 30, adjoining section 19, the township that his old home is in. It was in the mountains. The other sale that he spoke of, the 160-acre tract, for $16,000, was an old donation land claim, that was a farm; it has eighteen acres of orchard on it, and the rest of it was farming land, the majority of it. There was about forty acres of what they call waste land—grazing land, too steep to farm. He has a general slight knowledge of the territory south of township 30. He was never over that very much. In township 31 south, ranges 3 and 4 west, he made the assessment there one year, and then turned it over to a Mr. Redfield who was deputy assessor in that precinct. That land is practically the same as that about which he has testified; it is practically all the same all over that country from Roseburg south to the boundary line of Douglas county. He has hunted and been over it, herded sheep over it and drove stock over it quite often. He has been over the lands in township 29 south. He does not know that he has ever been in township 28, but he has been in township 29, and the same condition exists as to that land. Myrtle Creek is in township 29, runs along through 29 and 28, and is settled from practically the head of Myrtle Creek. Day's Creek heads in township 29, and is settled—there are settlements from its mouth to the head. These settlements are more or less along the streams which run up into the mountains, until one gets in the Elk Creek country, in range 1, in the same range that he lives in, one west. That is more of a plateau, more rolling; quite a number of stock ranches in there. They do not pretend to farm, but raise fruit and stock. There are streams running extensively through these lands. By streams he means creeks, small streams leading into the river or larger creeks. The purpose of settling on the streams is in order to have water, and one gets more or less level land on the creek bottoms.

Whereupon J. H. TURNER, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he is forty-eight years old, lives at Mulino, Clackamas County, Oregon, and follows carpenter work mostly now. He has a little place that he lives on and works on odd spells. He has lived at Mulino about four years, and came to Oregon in 1887. He lived east of Portland eight miles one year, and in 1888 moved into Clackamas County. Mulino is, he believes, in section 17, township 4 south, range 2 east. He has 20 acres in section 18, His land is on Milk Creek, west of Mulino. He has been all through the lands shown in green colors on Defendants' Exhibit 259, around Mulino, and he has been at Hyland, Springwater and Elwood. Elwood and Dodge are in township 4 south, range 4 east, shown on this map. He used to own forty acres there on Milk Creek, but he cannot tell the section it was in, but it was right in there by Elwood. There is some railroad land in that Hyland country, between there and Elwood, but he only knows of one forty of these railroad lands shown on that map. He is acquainted with that general country in there marked with the green markings, has hunted birds all over it. He is acquainted with the general character of it, its formation and the soil, because he worked around Hyland there, farming for other people, and his father had a place there, which witness farmed. He rented another place around Hyland there, and owned the forty acres in there at Elwood. He knows pretty nearly about what the land through that part of the country is. He farmed about five years there in Hyland, and before that for other people; he never ran a place for himself, but worked for other people.

Q. Well, Mr. Turner, on this railroad land that you are acquainted with, have a general knowledge of, what is your opinion as to whether that land is suitable for settlement in 160-acre tracts?

A. Well, in that there locality, yes. But as far as knowing where the railroad land is located, I don't know anything about it.

Q. You didn't know whether they were railroad lands or other lands?

A. No, I didn't. There was some that had bought railroad lands, so they said, but then I don't know as to that. But take it through that country there, it is good soil. They raise fair crops. They raised around Hyland there, when I was there—that has been fourteen years ago though since I was there —they raised from about fifteen to twenty bushel of wheat on an average, and from about forty to sixty bushel of oats.

Q. What would you say as to this land being suitable for settlement in 160-acre tracts, that is, if a man would want to go on that land, 160 acres of it, and farm?

Mr. Fenton: Defendants object to that unless the witness knows of the railroad land that is of that character. You may answer.

Q. Do you understand the question, Mr. Turner?

A. I don't know as I really do.

A. Well, if a man would get it cleared up, it is a good ranch, good ground.

Whereupon on cross examination witness testified that he does not know much about these railroad lands around Mulino. There is not much railroad land in there. That is an old settled country around Mulino, and there is just a little railroad land lying unsold east of Mulino, towards Springwater. The Molalla River is an old settled part of Clackamas County, and Mulino is on Milk Creek. It is quite a stream, and affords water there for grist mills. There is one saw mill in Mulino, which gets its logs up Milk Creek; about the farthest that they are getting logs so far, is at a new saw mill which went in there lately about a mile and a half away, but there used to be a mill there years ago. This land in there east of Mulino is mostly timbered. It is quite a ways up to the Cascade Mountains, but then one goes east up towards Clarks, and it is principally timber and brush all the way, there is some saw timber up there. Up on Buckner Creek there is some good timber up in there. He means that when the timber is taken off of this land it has sufficient good soil and is sufficiently level that it could be farmed, or most of it; that is what he said, if it was cleared it would make good ranches. He never took a homestead and never applied to purchase any of this railroad land, and never owned any of it. He owns twenty acres of land down at Mulino, it was all timbered. He has about three acres cleared, something near that, he never measured it, the rest of it is timber and brush. He has some saw timber on his twenty acres. He offered the timber stumpage on it for $1.25 to a man the other day, the market price ranges from $1.00 to $1.25 and $1.50, some are getting $1.50, but not very many, there are a few. He supposes that there would be perhaps 150,000 feet of saw timber on his twenty acres. It has been partly logged off. There is some big timber left. He does not know why the big timber was left, but they just took off what was the handiest. It was logged off by James Atkins about six or seven years ago, something like that. Witness had a brother-in-law that he got the timber for. He would not take less than fifteen hundred dollars for these twenty acres, and thinks it is worth $75 an acre. He has bottom land on it, and in one way his land is better than the general run of land because it is made land, better than the hill land for some things, as far as fruit is concerned, they can beat him to death, that is, the upland is better for fruit, for apples and such as that, much better.

Whereupon JOHN ZEEK, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he is sixty-four years old and resides near Canby, Clackamas County, Oregon, and has lived in Oregon more than forty years. He is a farmer at present, was formerly a blacksmith, and has been engaged in farming about three years. He lives in an agricultural community and has been acquainted with the business of farming during his residence in Oregon, and is acquainted with the lands that are suitable for tillage, useful for farming purposes to a certain extent. He has lived in Clackamas County twenty-five odd years, and for part of the time in the southeastern part, that is, not far beyond the center of east and west perhaps, but pretty well towards the south side. Part of the time he was in Molalla, most of the time in and about Canby, and some of the time in New Era. Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, he does not know anything about the range, but knows about the town of Molalla, and four section corners there where the town of Molalla is. The map shows Molalla at the corner of sections 4 and 5 and 7 and 8, in township 5 south, range 2 east. He notices that the lands colored in green represent on this map the unsold lands of the Oregon and California land grant, and he is acquainted with some of those lands south and east of Molalla about seven miles, maybe a little more than seven miles south, and he don't know just how far but several miles east, approximately five or six miles along the Molalla River. There may have been a new postoffice established in the vicinity of James since he was there, it was thirty-two years ago that he was there. He knows where Wilhoit is, and is somewhat acquainted with the unsold lands of the railroad company in the vicinity of Wilhoit. He is not acquainted at Colton, but knows where it is. He has never been over in that vicinity, nor at Dodge or Elwood. South from Molalla to Soda Springs, and a little perhaps the other side, as they would go hunting, and east from Molalla five or six miles, where they would go out hunting and fishing at times through that section of the country, he has traveled over pretty well; that is, about five or six miles east from Molalla, and about seven or eight miles south, and he is acquainted with a portion of the unsold lands of the railroad company in that territory. He was looking for land somewhat himself when he was out there, as well as hunting. When he would come to a piece of railroad land, those that he was with would know what was railroad land and what was government land and they would tell him and he would look at it. He is acquainted with the general character of these lands in that community. Some of the unsold lands of the company were very desirable; that was his estimate of it. Some of it was a little bit rough, but there was a very small portion of it, in his estimation, but what could be cultivated in one way or another. He was looking for land, and when he would come to a part of this land that was railroad land, he would take notice of it in particular to see about how much there would be that could be cultivated and so on, and the price in the neighborhood surrounding, and there were a good many pieces that he thought was very desirable land for farming purposes. Some of the land in this vicinity was quite rolling, some of it was what one would call rough land, and there was some that was compartively level land—not very large areas of really what one would call level land, like there is here in the Willamette Valley, but there was a large portion of it that could be cultivated. The topography of the ground, he would call rolling. He is not acquainted at present with the demand for land by settlers in that community, but at that time the demand was considerable. Nearly all of the government land had been taken up — one could not find anything that was vacant, scarcely anything at all. His acquaintance with this area would go back about thirty-two years; that was the time that he was there, thirty-two years ago. He has just passed through that country since, but lived there at that time and carried on business at Molalla, and he has retained a general knowledge of the land there at all times; he has not forgotten it by any means.

Q. If the railroad company complied with the conditions of the grant and opened this land to sale to actual settlers at $2.50 an acre, what is your opinion as to whether it would have been taken by actual settlers?

A. I think that if the land had been available, it would nearly all have been taken. The demand, I believe, was such, and the wants of the land was such that it would have been nearly all taken.

Q. When you say if it had been available, what do you mean by that, Mr. Zeek?

A. Well, I mean that if they could have got it from the company, there has been so many years it has been out of the market that you could not do anything with it; that they could not get it.

Q. This territory that you speak of, how does the railroad land lay there generally as to its being a compact body or in scattered tracts?

A. Well, I really don't know exactly how much would be in a tract, but then there were a good many places we could get a hundred and sixty acres in a body and other smaller tracts.

Q. Quite a number of tracts of railroad land laying in this vicinity.

A. Well, as to the amount of lands lying contiguous to each other, as to that I could not really say, because you travel around quite a little. We would come to one piece of railroad land, and then we would go a little further around and find another place, and so on around. I didn't take particular notice of about how much there would be one joining the other. But there was 160 acres in a good many different pieces.

Q. Are there any lands of similar character settled upon and farmed in that community, Mr. Zeek?

A. Yes, all the Government land there was there was of similar character, and it was nearly all settled upon at that time.

Q. Is that settled upon by farmers?

A. By farmers. Yes, by farmers. They would not undertake to farm it all, of course, but they would farm what they needed to, and they would have some stock.

Whereupon on cross examination witness testified that he now resides near Canby, in Clackamas County, and has so resided there in the neighborhood of about twenty odd years. The nearest mail route to him is Canby, four miles, east and north. Canby is a level prairie country. Some call it the lower end of the Molalla Valley; it is close to the mountains. Canby is on the Southern Pacific Railroad, which railroad is owned by the Oregon & California Railroad Company, and leased to the Southern Pacific. He lived in Canby part of the time, carrying on business in Canby, before he moved to his farm near Canby. Prior to going on to the farm, he was at Canby three years. Before he moved to Canby he came from Sellwood, which is just outside of the city limits of Portland. He lived at Sellwood about a year, and before that he lived at Clackamas Station, in Clackamas County, Oregon, this side of Oregon City, on the line of this same railroad. He lived at Clackamas Station about a year, and before that he was at Mulino. He moved around considerable, but he thinks he was at Mulino just a little while, not more than two or three months, doing blacksmithing there, and before that he lived at Molalla Corners, where he had a shop; that is now the town of Molalla, which is not a large place; it was not very large at that time. He does not know its size now, he has not been there for a few years, ten years or more. He passed through Mulino about two and a half years ago, something like that. He does not think his knowledge of the country is just casual, he knows something about it. He has not been over all of the land around Mulino, perhaps over not entire sections, but in more than two or three sections around Mulino. He does not know exactly how far east of Mulino he has been, but he has been up above Meadowbrook. About a year and a half ago he was out to Mulino, and went up above Mulino to what is known as Schafer's mill, almost to Schafer's mill, going up the Meadowbrook road. He does not know how far Schafer's mill is above Meadowbrook, but he thinks two or three miles, something like that. Molalla is out in the old settled part of Clackamas County, and from where the road called the Oregon City road strikes the Molalla River, he would think it is about three miles, perhaps a little more or less. He does not know that he could describe the quarter sections or half sections or eighties of this railroad land that he was over when he was out there at the time of which he speaks; he cannot tell in what township or range or section it is in. He has been east of Molalla five or six miles, a little more or less, up the Milk Creek, up past Meadowbrook, and then to the left out to Springwater. He does not know just how far it is, but he has been up beyond Molalla five or six miles.

Molalla is shown on Defendants' Exhibit 260; also Molalla River, Mulino and Meadowbrook. Meadowbrook is northeast of Molalla. Mulino is not so far up. The map may be correct. The river runs north at Canby, and Canby is east of the Molalla River. These railroad lands that he saw were about five or six miles from Molalla and south around Soda Springs. He recognizes Wilhoit as shown on the map and it would be seven miles from Molalla to Wilhoit by straight line, and he was beyond Wilhoit a mile or so, something like that; and then east of Molalla five or six miles.

Q. That would be, one, two, three, four, five, six. Well, now, you see six miles wouldn't get in that range, wouldn't get over five tracts of railroad land now unsold, of about eighty-acre tracts, or 400 acres of railroad land in that vicinity, and you wouldn't get in the other direction, from Molalla south to Wilhoit, but about two sections scattered around on Rock Creek, and between Wilhoit and Molalla. Now, are those the lands you saw?

A. Well, you don't think for a minute that I am trying to tell you what there is unsold now. I am telling you what was then.

Q. When was this, now?

A. About 32 years ago. I am not telling you anything about now.

Q. What you are testifying about now may be relating to land that the company owned 32 years ago?

A. Yes, in this same tract.

Q. Oh, I see. So that if they only own these small parcels at the present time, you could not say from your testimony what the character of those parcels is?

A. Not any particular parcels, no.

Q. All you can say is in a general way that you were out there 32 years ago, and you saw some railroad land that looked to you and was in your judgment fairly good agricultural land?

A. Yes. It was extra good, some of it.

Q. Well, it was not any better than the even sections.

A. No, but they could not get them, that is the reason—the even sections were all taken. There was no Government land to be taken there that I could find. .

Q. It had all been taken under the donation or homestead or pre-emption law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. A good deal of it had been taken under the donation land law, hadn't it?

A. Well, I don't know whether there were any donation land claims there or not, but I don't think there was. There may have been, but I don't think there was. I don't know of any.

Whereupon witness testified, referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, and the yellow field shown thereon, that there was some land taken under the donation land law there in Molalla; he thinks one section cornering at Molalla, that was Sam's section, which had been taken under the donation law. The homestead law was passed, he thinks, in 1862 or 1863, and the pre-emption or donation law before that. There was not very much timber on any of this land that he was acquainted with. There was some, but not very much, it was mostly in a burn, mostly burned land. Thirty-two years ago, so far as he could find out, the piece that he bought from the railroad company, that he bargained for in the Springwater district, the company was selling it all the way from $3.50 to $4.00 and up to $10 an acre. The more timber on the land the higher the land, the higher the price. Timber at that time did not have very much commercial value, but they estimated the timber land as being more valuable than that which did not have timber.

Q. Well, now, wasn't there a good deal of railroad land in here about that time that could have been bought for $1.50 an acre?

A. Not to my knowledge.

He bought two little tracts from the company in the Springwater neighborhood, but he does not remember what sections they were in now, it has been so long ago. He could not say how many acres, but he thinks it was something over twenty acres. He bought that to make a home on it, but never succeeded in living on it. He fenced in a part of it and plowed it and planted some fruit trees and garden stuff, but never got on the farm.

He paid from $3.50 to $4.50 an acre for it, and bought it for a home. He did not live on it because his circumstances would not permit him going at the time he needed to go. He bought it under the ten year system and made one payment, but did not pay it out. He forfeited his title by failing to make payments. He does not know if the company still owns the land. Part of it was timber land, and had a little good saw timber on it. He does not know whether it has been logged off. He has not been out there since about thirty-two years ago. He has not been there since he fenced in a part of it. He fenced in and cultivated about an acre and a half of this twenty acres, he would think. His family never lived on it, and he never had any buildings on it at all. He planted a little orchard, set out some berries and one thing and another, and he guesses that has all gone to waste. He does not know how many saw mills there are in the eastern part of Clackamas County. He does not know if the Molalla country is one of the oldest settled parts of Oregon. It has been settled a long time. He knows there are donation land claims there, and he would suppose it has been settled, and he knows according to history that Oregon City was the first seat of government in Oregon, and he read that the territorial council met there for many years in the fifties. He does not know whether Dr. John McLoughlin attempted to take a donation land claim where Oregon City stands but he failed to get a title to it. He has read something about it, but his memory is not exactly clear on that. He knows that Dr. John McLoughlin was the Hudson Bay factor here in the early forties. He has read considerable about Dr. McLoughlin and knows historically that he died at Oregon City and was buried there, but he does not know anything about whether Congress perfected the title or attempted to perfect the title to that property where Oregon City stands. He knows that about Oregon City is one of the old settled portions of the Willamette Valley, and by the donation land claims out about Molalla he would suppose that it had been settled a good while, because the donation land law was repealed when the homestead law was enacted. He does not know just what year the timber market became active in Oregon or in Clackamas County, but he knows it has been quite a number of years ago; it has been as long as 1894 anyway, he would think, and timber has been in great demand the last few years. He never tried to buy any other piece of this railroad land; he was just out looking—what he knows from the settlers around where the railroad land lay; that was about thirty-two years ago, and the price of the land and so on, and then he would go and look at it. He does not know what the land around Molalla is worth, but around Canby it is worth all the way from $100 to $250 an acre. His place is four miles from Canby, and is an open farm; he has twenty-one acres there. He does not think land without any buildings on it can be bought there for less than $200 an acre, that is in the neighborhood of where he lives. They are expecting to have a railroad, an electric line, built across Canby out to Molalla, and on around by way of Silver, but the nearest point from where he lives is about three miles to a railroad. The whole country is valuable now and rated at good prices all over around Molalla and down to Canby.

Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified that he thinks he contracted to pay for this railroad land $3.50 for part of it and $4.50 for another part of it. He bought it in two parcels—it was in two sections, and was adjoining the farm of a man by the name of Tucker, and was adjoining farming land—joined another man's farm by the name of Frank Bunney, who had bought some railroad land—and was just the same as lands that were being farmed adjacent, there was comparatively no difference. He contracted to buy that land for a farm. There was no timber on it to speak of, just a little bit on one part of it. That part that he bought, or most of it, is good level land.

Q. According to the bill of complaint, Mr. Zeek, there yet remains unsold in the township in which Molalla is situated—5 south 2 east—718 acres of railroad land in sections 3, 5, 13, 25 and 35, the tract in section 5 being only about four acres, and in section 35 being 400 acres; in township 6 south, range 2 east, where Wilhoit is situated, there is located in section 1, 420 acres; in section 5, 552 acres; in section 7, 475 acres; in section 9, 240 acres; in section 11, 40 acres; in section 13, 360 acres; in section 15, 280 acres; in section 17, 120 acres; in section 19, 315 acres; in section 21, 80 acres; in section 23, 80 acres; in section 25, 440 acres; in section 27, 160 acres; in section 29, 400 acres; in section 33, 480 acres, and in section 35, 600 acres of railroad land. And in township 5 south, 3 east, the township directly east of the township where Molalla is situated, there is 160 acres in section 1; 160 acres in section 5; 290 acres in section 7; 440 acres in section 11; 600 acres in section 13; 80 acres in section 17; 240 acres in section 21, and 560 acres in section 23—all unsold lands of the Oregon and California Railroad Company. Now, your knowledge covered a portion of these townships, as I understand—that is, south from Molalla——

Mr. Fenton: South from Molalla seven miles, and five or six east of Molalla.

Q. And in the township where Molalla is situated?

A. Five or six miles east of Molalla and about seven or eight miles south of Molalla. And the land that I speak of having bargained for was in the Springwater district.

Q. That is at Springwater?

A. Yes, I don't know the section now.

Q. Springwater is, according to Defendants' Exhibit 259, in township 4 south, range 4 east, in section 4. How far from Springwater was this?

A. It was only just simply a postoffice at that time, Springwater postoffice, and it was about—I should think about two miles, if I remember right, east.

Q. Were you acquainted with the lands in that vicinity?

A. With the lands?

Q. Yes.

A. I didn't look around very much. Mr. Bunney took me out there to show me this particular piece of land, and it was about what I wanted and about as much as I wanted, and I didn't look much farther. It suited me first rate.

Q. Your knowledge of that locality is somewhat limited?

A. Is limited, yes.

Whereupon W. H. KANDLE, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he is fifty-three years old, resides at Springwater, Clackamas County, Oregon, seventeen miles east of Oregon City. Springwater is a little country town, a little village there, of store and blacksmith shop and boarding house and so on, small hotel—a farming community, just a small neighborhood town. His business is that of farming, in which he has been engaged all his life. He has lived in Springwater fifty-three years, was born and raised there, and now lives in the same locality. He lives on the old donation claim that was settled in 1852, which was in sections 4 and 5, township 4 south, range 4 east, he thinks. From his experience, he is acquainted with the farming business in Clackamas County, and has traveled quite a lot over the county. They produce most all kinds of grain, wheat, oats, vetch and field peas, and most all kinds of fruit—apples, pears, cherries, prunes—most anything in the fruit line outside of peaches, all kinds of small fruit do well there. He has raised more or less stock in that country and has been in the dairy business quite a little bit. One might say that one-half of the farmers in the community of Clackamas County, in which he lives, milk a few cows and sell the cream at the Schleswick Creamery in Clackamas County, near the Clackamas bridge near Stone. There is a good demand for the products of the dairy. Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, Springwater is in section 4, township 4 south, range 4 east, and he lives on his farm half a mile east of Springwater. He is generally acquainted with the unsold lands of the Oregon & California Railroad Company, represented by the green sectional markings. He has been over them more or less. He is well acquainted with the lands, he thinks, as far as ten miles east of Springwater. He has been as much as forty miles east of Springwater in the mountains, but that would be on hunting trips, hunting expeditions up there. But for ten miles east of Springwater he has hunted over that and helped his neighbors gather beef cattle in the foot of the mountains and the foothills there, and been over the lands more or less all the time. He is not so well acquainted on the north side of the Clackamas River; that would be in the Garfield district, but he has been through there a number of times. He does not know just where the railroad land would lay, or anything about that north of the Clackamas River but east, on the south side of the river, he has been over more or less all his life, ever since he was a little boy, and his knowledge as to the northeast is of a more general character than east. Southeast of Springwater he would be acquainted with the lands out to the foothills, he would judge it would be eight or ten miles—that would take in the Elwood district and the Dodge district. Elwood is shown on this map, Defendants' Exhibit 259. He has hunted over the mountains a few times up in towards the south branch of the Molalla, on the headwaters of the Clear Creek and Molalla—the north branch of the Molalla. He has been over these lands on the headwaters of Milk Creek, on the very edge. He is not acquainted with the lands in the vicinity of Canyon Creek, except just passing through. He could not tell anything much about those lands. He has passed through there and knows where Canyon Creek is, and Milk Creek. He has hunted on the headwaters of Canyon Creek, in the mountains, but further down he knows nothing about it. He is a little better acquainted a little south and east of Springwater than he is right east. Cazadero is right east of Springwater, that would throw him on the east side of the Clackamas River. He has not hunted or been on that side of the river as much as he has on the southeast side of the river. He is acquainted with those lands marked in green in township 4 south, 5 east, on the north fork of the Clackamas River, which is headed northeast from Springwater up towards Mt. Hood. The North Fork of the Clackamas is on the north side of Springwater, and Milk Creek is south—a little west of south of Springwater. The headwaters of it are almost due south from Springwater. The land south and east of Springwater, in Township 4, has been burned over about eleven of twelve years ago, and a majority of it, one might say, would be called deadening. It is covered with more or less dead timber and underbrush that has grown up in the deadening, and it is rolling land, lots of spring branches breaking out from the hills, and running into the Clackamas River. A proportion of that land could be farmed all right, and it is good fruit land. That condition does not extend as far east as his knowledge runs. If one would run ten miles southeast of Springwater, he would get into the foot of the mountains, and when they get into the foot of the mountains, of course that is rough and rocky and hilly, and is not good for anything except some pasture land; but as far as eight miles back southeast, there are settlers all through, and that is true generally of all the land within that radius. Most all of the homestead land is taken up there, and as a general thing people are living on the land. There is once in awhile a vacant piece where they have proved up and went off and left it there, he supposes until they would get able to start in and improve it, clean it off; but most of them have a man on them. These settlements extend back about ten miles southeast, clear to the foot of the mountains, up on the foot of the mountains, and up the Clackamas, on the main fork of the Clackamas. He knows a party who owns a good ranch up there thirty miles above Estacada, a man by the name of Davis. He has taken up a piece of land there that has quite a lot of opening on, and he is farming it, raising hay and garden stuff, and has set out fruit trees. Farm products grow there in that locality. They raise good fruit forty miles southeast of Estacada, on the Clackamas River, in the Hot Springs country. That is getting pretty well up into the foot of the mountains. It is too rough for farming in the mountains unless one would get onto a bottom on some of those rivers. There are benches in the mountains in the vicinity of which he has testified. He does not know that there would be anything to prevent a man from farming there, only those benches are small. A man could not get a very big farm on those benches in the mountains. One will find benches there of ten or fifteen acres which a man could farm. Clackamas County, up in the foothills, is not considered a very good grazing country. They do not have the grass there that they ought to have. Still cattle do fairly well, but it is not considered a good grazing country. It is good for fruit lands, small fruits, and is all right for grain if it is cleared up once, but it takes some muscle to clean it up.

Q. To what extent, if any, Mr. Kandle, has the railroad company's failure to comply with the conditions of this grant and sell the land to actual settlers at $2.50 an acre, and withdrawing the land from sale—what effect has that had upon the settlement of that land in the vicinity that you have testified to?

A. There is land up there that I have seen people looking at that would like to buy it, but they couldn't hardly afford to pay the price that they held the land at; they didn't think they could go onto a wild piece of land and pay the price that the railroad people wanted for it, and come out—pay for it and make a living for their family. The consequence was they didn't take it.

Q. How long ago was that, Mr. Kandle?

A. Oh, you might say there has been people looking at railroad lands back for the last thirty years.

Q. That land has been off the market for some years, hasn't it, to your knowledge?

A. Yes, the last few years. But years back, you know, it was on the market, and people looking at it, and a good many of them did buy, and some did not.

Whereupon on cross examination witness testified that his father took 320 acres in the section east of Springwater in 1852, a donation land claim, and there are other donation land claims which were taken around in the neighborhood of Springwater that he knows of. That is an old settled part of Clackamas County. There are 260 acres of his father's donation land claim in cultivation now. He owns the east half of it himself. He has 130 acres, and the other 160 acres below has about 130 acres in cultivation. There is a railroad which runs to Cazadero, and he is three and a half miles south of Estacada, and Cazadero is east of him about two miles. They ship their produce to Portland from Estacada. There is no shipping point at Cazadero. That railroad used to be known as the O. W. P. but it has changed hands and he does not know just what the name of the road is now, but he understands that the Portland, Railway, Light & Power Company has bought it. There is a power plant at Cazadero. It is quite a large plant. Referring to his statements about helping his neighbors herd cattle a few years ago, they would turn out a few head of stock cattle on the range and let them go back up southeast towards the foot of the mountains. These cattle ran clear up on the mountains, and they range all the way from Springwater ten or fifteen miles, and would range over quite a lot of Government land that had been taken up, where the parties had just fenced three or four acres, and the rest was laying outside, and some railroad land, and some school land. These unfenced lands out there used to have quite a lot of timber on them, that is, up close to the foot hills of the mountain, but down off the foot hills there was scattering timber, and more or less underbrush, and a good deal of old rotten logs that were laying down and had been down hundreds of years. There are some saw mills, not any large mills that cut very much timber around that vicinity, and they locate themselves where there was just a small bunch of timber. There was not timber enough for a large mill. The demand for timber lands in his neighborhood became pretty active about ten or twelve years ago. He does not know much about any increased demand because there is very little timber in there. There is not enough to make it an object.

Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified that he bought a small tract from the railroad company once, containing about 29 acres. He bought the same piece that John Zeek contracted for after he had left it, and he thinks he paid $7.00 an acre for it. This railroad line that he lives on is an electric line running from Portland. It is 33½ miles from Portland to Estacada, and there is an electric line running out to Estacada. This electric line runs clear above Cazadero to the North Fork of the Clackamas; that is, it is graded there and the track laid almost to the North Fork, and it runs from Portland in the neighborhood of forty miles. Springwater is thirty-seven miles by the railroad; that is, thirty-three and a half miles from Portland to Estacada, and three and a half miles south to Springwater, and the lands would be about forty-seven miles from Portland, that is, the outside limit of these lands to the foothills, would be about forty-seven miles from Portland. There is some railroad land laying southeast of him on Clear Creek, and some railroad land lying on the south side. There is an eighty lying on the south of this piece he bought from the railroad people. That land has a little patch of second growth, pretty good saw timber on it. About half of it could be cultivated, and the rest would be a pretty good little bunch of timber, and would make good pasture after it was logged off. He believes that the rest of these tracts that lay below the foothills, off of the side of the mountain, that fifty per cent of them could be put in cultivation and farmed. Of course there are canyons running through that would be too steep, but on the benches and up on the ridges there could be farmed, he believes, fifty per cent of it. The railroad land down on Clear Creek, of course that lay, quite a lot of it, on the hillsides. There could not be quite so much of that farmed, but it could be worked into pasture land by burning off and sowing with orchard grass and timothy, etc. There is no railroad land adjoining him at the present time. There used to be some land there adjoining him that Mr. Bonney bought right over south of him, a forty, and that forty joined the 29 acres that he bought. Mr. Bonney used to own it. A man by the name of Mr. Miller bought that forty and the 29 acres from him. The title has passed from the railroad company, and Miller has made a good little farm of it. The demand for timber commenced about ten or twelve years ago. People paid no attention to timber in that section up to about ten or twelve years ago, and then they commenced to want to get hold of a piece of timber land. The people who settled on the even sections burned the timber up in every possible way they could, to get rid of it. That community where he lives was generally a timbered section, had scattering timber over it. They had no prairie land in that county at all. They had timber scattered all over their farms. There has been an increased demand for agricultural lands the last ten or twelve years, and the price of agricultural land during this period has increased materially. There is a good demand for lands for settlement purposes, but there is not very much land for them to get hold of any more.

Whereupon on recross examination witness testified that free from buildings, his land is worth $100 an acre.

The average value of the unimproved land out there, taking it as it runs, say for four or five miles east of Springwater, and four or five miles south of Springwater, eliminating the improvements, will run from $15 to $35 an acre. He is seventeen miles southeast, almost east, a little south of east, from Oregon City.

Whereupon A. W. RIGGS, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he is sixty-three years old, and lives 2.9 miles from Canby, which is situated in Clackamas County, Oregon, and has lived in Clackamas County sixty-three years, except about seven months at Hood River and a few years in Portland when he was a child; his father settled on 640 acres within a mile of the river at East Portland in 1847 or 1848, or somewhere around there. He dug three wells to get water, and had to pack water from the Willamette River for a mile, and so left the place. He has been farming most all of his life, in the neighborhood of Canby, and he is pretty well acquainted with the farming conditions of Clackamas County, Oregon, and the products and stock that they raise, and the ability of the land to produce. He notices Canby on Defendants' Exhibit 259, and he could hardly tell the unsold lands of the company marked in green on this map, Defendants' Exhibit 259, but he has 160 acres in section 12, township 7 south, range 2 east, on Cold Creek, which is not used very much for the reason that there is not very much of a settlement in there; but they use it for grazing purposes and strawberries and all kinds of fruit. He bought 160 acres of a homestead for $2.50 an acre, six years ago last January, and then sold it the other day for $10.00 an acre. That land was burned land, he calls it. He thinks they said the fire ran through there in 1849, and the timber is getting pretty well rotted. There has been no timber on that part of the land that is worth very much. There is some piling on it—there is timber there a foot and a half or two feet through, now, but not on very much of it, just in places. Of the 160 acres he bought, he thinks there could be about seventy-five per cent of it rendered suitable to cultivation, and most of it around there could be rendered suitable for cultivation. One might drop over to the Molalla Canyon, and there is a whole lot of that, that is not worth anything excepting for pasture, it is too steep. As to saying that he is acquainted with the railroad land, he could not say, because he does not know what sections are railroad land, but he has been all over the mountains in that vicinity, hunting elk and deer, and he is acquainted for several miles around there, some four or five miles, pretty well, and he would judge at least one-half of it is taken, the even sections, homesteaded. A man right south of him had a homestead of eighty acres; that is all he could get in one body, and there was another eighty acres he thought he could get after he homesteaded this. They told him he could take two eighties, or hold one at a time, but he said another man jumped the other eighty acres. He homesteaded that, and has proved up on it, and the most that he raised of any value was strawberries. Last year on about half an acre he had sixty crates of strawberries, and sold them at $1.50 a crate, at Soda Springs, seven miles, and he said they turned right around and sold them to a man who came from Portland in an automobile for $3.00 a crate. This land produces other products than strawberries. There are settlers living in this community; a few settlers around there, and the reason there are not more is because they cannot get the railroad land, and there is no school. This man east of him had to move out to school his children, and he was afraid he would lose his homestead. He had five children there and it is four miles to any school. They raise on these homesteads, in this settlement, mostly hay, for the reason that they have mostly stock. There is no threshing machine comes in there to thresh what little they raise. They raise hay and such as they can feed to their stock. He knows of railroad land there; he knows of one forty acres that could all be cleared, it is easily cleared—quite a lot of open land already to plow on it. This homesteader plowed part of it and raised hay for his stock. There is but little land cleared on the farm there that witness owned, in township 7 south, range 2 east. He bought it on account of his stock. His grandson went up there one summer and cleared an acre and a quarter of land without a stump on it—flat land, as good land as one ever saw; nice flat land, bottom land. It was a homestead, but there was not more than an acre cleared when it was proved up on. They had fenced it with wire in order to keep stock there. The title passed from the government to that land during Cleveland's administration. He would think on an average, generally speaking, that seventy-five per cent of the land in that vicinity, if it was cleared up, could be cultivated, but it is just like other land, it is hard clearing. There is a burn there, just this side of the burn is green timber, and he is just in the edge of the burn. There is 640 acres of railroad land just this side of his place. Six years ago there was a time when people commenced thinking they were going to get the land and they all squatted and put notices on it. That land is still timbered. There are open places where they could put in garden or a little stuff, but it is timber land. It would not pay a man to go on that timbered land and make a home on that land in that township. It would not pay him because he could not live there. There is too much timber, and to cut that timber and waste it, would not pay him. He thinks this is in section 1, township 6 south, range 2 east. The land there is good—the land is number one, and could be cultivated if it was cleared. He thinks very nearly every bit of it could be cultivated. That timber land has no grazing on it—it is in the green timber. All the grazing part is out in the burn; then there is so much fern grows that there is not a great deal of that. That is what he said about grass. This mesquite grass has to be sowed. On the place he bought there is quite a lot of grass in through there, where they had stock. It would be good for sheep, but there is a heap of it just fern and logs. There is fern up there that grows away up high, measuring nine feet long, which prevents the grass from growing. The cow has to wade right around and knock that fern around to eat the grass. There is lots of grass among it in places. The soil, most of it, is good. The only thing against that country is, it is up and down hill, and the stone on those steep places, it is, rocky. In that timber, there is good soil. It is not any harder to clear than some other land was. It is not any harder to clear than right here, he thinks; his father was here, —meaning East Portland,—when this was all timbered. He tried to purchase a piece of this railroad land down near his home, forty acres, but did not get it. The railroad company said it was not for sale, and they would not give him an option on it. They wanted him to write to them and advise them as to the quality of the land, and he did that when he wrote to them. It is forty acres of land on the Molalla River, between Molalla and Mill Creek, and has small timber on it. It has been skinned of the timber by settlers. One would cut in on it a little ways and another one on the other side, until there is not much left only second growth timber, but still it has good second growth timber, such as piling, and cedar for telephone poles, and cotton wood. He never took up a homestead. He filed on thirty acres once, sold the improvements to another fellow and threw it up. That was all the land there was in the bunch, thirty acres. That was in the settlement there where he lived.

Whereupon on cross- examination witness testified that the 160 acres that he owns out there is in section 12, township 7 south, range 2 east. He does not remember exactly how long ago that place was homesteaded, but it was proved up in Cleveland's administration, about thirteen years ago. He supposes the man lived on it five years. It was a homestead. He supposes that a good part of the 480 acres in section 6, township 7 south, range 3 east, and 80 acres in section 32, township 6 south, range 3 east, and 40 acres in section 8, township 7 south, range 3 east, a good part of that was government land at that time. He thinks the southeast, or the northeast quarter of that was taken before his was, by a man by the name of Bonney. There is no government land there that is of any account now; it is no account because it is too steep. Section 6, township 7 south, range 3 east, 480 acres, is on the streams where it is too steep. His land sets in between two streams, and is comparatively more level there than where the land breaks over on to the Molalla and Butte Creek. Where it breaks over on the side it is too steep for a man to plow. He could not farm it, but could use it for grazing land, that is all. If this government land is there now, it is not worth taking; people could not take it and make a living on it. These people that five or six or seven years ago tried to get on to a railroad section there, three or four of them going out there —did not build cabins, they just put up notices, except one fellow built a cabin and lived there for a year and then moved off. They thought maybe they could homestead the land if the railroad company lost it; that is, if the railroad company lost the land, they thought they would get in there and settle on it. One fellow was on a piece of that section at that time that was pretty nearly all timber, but there is some open land on it; three or four acres of open land in spots, it is flat open land; one could plow it. The section is pretty well timbered —saw timber. He does not know the price of timber there. His father-in-law owned a piece right adjoining that land, but he never would tell him what he got for it. He does not know what the stumpage is worth, or what they pay a thousand for good saw timber. He is not acquainted with the timber business and never dealt in it. That was pretty good timber there. The quarters that did not have any timber on were pretty well picked out—that was the trouble. They selected this section, where three or four people put up notices on it, about the time this controversy commenced as to whether the railroad could hold the land.

Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified that this section of land that he mentioned as having notices posted on it, was section 1, township 6 south, range 2 east, but he does not know anything about the stand of timber on it. He never cruised any and never knew anything about that business. His father-in-law homesteaded a piece right adjoining him that is as timbered as it is. There are some settlers living in there, in township 7 south, range 2 east. That 640 acres was pretty well covered with timber, but from his place out the other way, where the settlers are, it is all burned country, no timber of any account. His place has the best second growth timber that there is in there. There is quite a lot of piling on the creek bottom, but most of it is barren land—nothing but willow brush and fern. The burns do not destroy the soil. Burned land is good land, if one gets in and cultivates it.

Whereupon on re-cross examination witness testified that he does not know when the burn was, but the people tell him that it was in 1849, but he has timber there that is from six inches up to two feet through. These trees that are two feet through are very tall. They may be one hundred feet or more than one hundred feet. He thinks they have all grown since the fire. He would say that he had on his place probably thirty-five or forty acres of fir timber. He knows that this fir timber does come up, and inside of sixty years makes saw timber.

Whereupon on re-direct examination witness testied that his knowledge as to the growth of the fir timber is limited to this section of the country where he has lived. Large saw fir timber generally used for logging purposes, does not grow in any such length of time as that, but this second growth will make saw timber, that is what he means. Now, there at his home, he knows that when that brush was only so high, he could drive over it with a wagon, and now they have made saw timber out of it. They had a little mill in there and sawed up a lot of this timber and made lumber out of it, and made fencing and rough lumber. Some of those trees were about two feet in diameter. He knows that to be the case because he saw wagons drive over them. He does not know how much the general conditions as to the natural formations and possibilities of agriculture, and the timber conditions, since 1870, have changed. He does not know that they have changed; he could not say that they had. Timber growth always, since he has been there, is just the same. Whenever one makes a burn and leaves it, it is soon growing up into fir brush. The general conditions in that country have been the same since 1866. He remembers well when his older brother slashed a piece of land, and now witness can show one tree two feet through on it. That has always been timbered country during that period. It seems as though that burned country does not set to fir like it has down in the valley; he thinks it has been burned off so many times. That timber of his up there, is on a creek bottom, and the rest of the land up there has no fir on it to amount to anything. The fir timber grows in the valley where he lives that he knows of, but this up in the mountains is on a creek bottom, where it is rich beaverdam—would be called beaverdam land; it is real black land.

Whereupon on re-cross examination witness testified that he thinks that this burned area up there has been burned over a good many times, and that probably kept the timber from growing up.

Whereupon W. R. LAMB, called as a witness on behalf of complainant being duly sworn testified that he is forty-seven years old, resides near Medford, Jackson County, Oregon, and has lived in that County about thirteen years, and has been farming most of that time in the Big Butte Country and on the North Fork of Little Butte and near Medford and owned lands there. He first lived and farmed in the Big Butte country.

His land was in section 26, township 34 south, range 3 east, where he had two hundred acres. He took up a homestead in Jackson County, he thinks in section 26, township 34 south, range 3 east. He lived a little while at Talent before he went up there to the Big Butte place; he took his homestead when he went up into the Big Butte country right away, it was 160 acres. He had a timber forty beyond there about a mile which he filed on under the timber and stone act. He lived on his homestead there about four years. The character of this land that he farmed there was reddish like loam; it was partly timber, partly open country, mostly timber. He cultivated about 25 acres, as near as he could tell, not all on the homestead, right close to it though. Part of the land required clearing and part of it did not before it could be plowed or cultivated, but not all on his own land. He had a family and earned a living there and supported himself and family on that land. He left that country on account of school for his children. When he first went there, there was no school and they organized a district and built a school house which burned down. They built another and it burned down. There is railroad land all through that country, the odd sections. There was difficulty in getting a sufficient number of children to organize and maintain a school in that vicinity at first, but they had enough children by going a good long distance for school. The reason he left his homestead was in order to get better facilities for his children than there were in that vicinity. The school house burned down and he had no way of educating his children. He should have said two school houses burned down. He sold the land and does not know if it is still farmed as he has not been there since he left it five years ago. There were settlements in there, people living in that community when he left. He farmed on Little Butte Creek, on the North Fork of Little Butte. He farmed near Medford, in Jackson County and a little near Talent before he went up into the Big Butte country, all in Jackson County. His experience is sufficient to acquaint him with the possibilities of farming and the farming business in Jackson County in the vicinities where he has been acquainted. Farming has been his business practically ever since he resided in Jackson County. He worked a short time in the sawmill but very little. His homestead was in section 26, township 34, 3 east, and referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259" he does not know that he could tell just how much of the land in the vicinity of section 26, township 34, range 3 east he has been over, but he has been over an area, he thinks, of ten miles, from there to Butte Falls and perhaps five miles south and east of the land he is speaking of; that is east of this township 34, 3 east. He could not tell exactly the boundary lines, how far he was, referring to township 34 south, range 3 east. He is fairly well acquainted with that country in through there, four or five miles either way from where he lived on his homestead and ten miles to Butte Falls. Butte Falls was south and west of there. He is fairly well acquainted with township 36 south, 2 east. Lake Creek runs through that township and Little Butte

Creek according to this map, "Defendants' Exhibit 259." He has been all up and down the North Fork of Little Butte Creek. Lake Creek is on the forks between the North and South Fork of Little Butte Creek and he is acquainted with the land on the North Fork of Lake Creek and has been back to Soda Springs and is fairly well acquainted with the lands in the vicinity of Soda Springs, but has not been in there as much as he has around Lake Creek. The County road goes right to Soda Springs. He has been off the road along towards Soda Springs and has hunted through that country and has run stock through there some, not very much, not as high as the Soda Springs but he has around Lake Creek. He had a farm in the vicinity of section 34, township 36 south, range 3 east, which was two miles up the creek from Lake Creek, up the North Fork of Little Butte. Lake Creek is the postoffice. Forty acres of the land was railroad and forty was school land. He does not know what the source of title of the balance of the land was. The farm contained 300 acres. He has a farm near Medford, about a mile and three-quarters from the depot of the Southern Pacific Company at Medford. He thought that land had been taken up some years ago, it is an alfalfa ranch that he is living on at present close to Rogue River. He is not much acquainted west of Eagle Point, but east of there he has been through that country. The map shows Eagle Point in township 30 south, range 1 west, and shows tracts of railroad land in that township, comparatively small tracts. He has been around Brownsboro and is fairly well acquainted in that vicinity. He would not know railroad land from any other there as he had never had it mapped out to him. He has been around by Central Point, near Jacksonville, close to Medford, north of Medford. He is fairly well acquainted about Jacksonville, which is the county seat of Jackson County, about five miles west of Medford, something like that. He has been to Ashland and about seven miles south of Ashland on the railroad, as well as on the wagon road, only years ago on the railroad and he has been on the wagon road from Ashland. He is acquainted with the lands in the vicinity of Butte Falls and he has been up Willow Creek east of Butte Falls. He has not been over the lands in that vicinity away from the bed of the creek, but has just been up the road and it was sufficient to give him a knowledge of the lands in that vicinity. As far as he could say there is a great deal of timber in through there, in the area he has described around his homestead, there are open glades and there is a large amount of railroad land in that vicinity. He believes about half of the country is railroad lands. In their raw state, the way these lands are at present they are good grazing land.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. What percentage of those lands do you think, in your opinion, would be suitable for settlement purposes, that a man could go on there and take up 160 acres of land for the purpose of making a home there?

A. You mean just taking the country over; how much per cent of the quarters—quarter sections?

Q. How much per cent of the 160-acre tracts, regardless of whether they were quarter sections. They might be in a T-shape or L-shape, 40-acre legal subdivisions of land contiguous, lying contiguous, 160 acres.

A. I would think about 75 per cent.

Q. How much farm land would you think on an average a man could get from the lands?

A. Well, I would think about 60 per cent of it could be farmed after it was cleared.

Q. Now, in this other territory out from Lake Creek that you are acquainted with—

Mr. Fenton: That is on Little Butte.

Q. Little Butte Creek, on the north fork there, out from Lake Creek, the Soda Springs country?

A. That is grazing land a great deal of it through that country.

Q. Well, what per centage of it do you think would be suitable for settlement purposes, that is, for a man to take 160 acres for the purpose of making a home there and farming it?

A. I would think about the same as it was on the other creek, about 75 per cent.

Q. How about the average of tillable land?

A. It won't run as high a per cent, I don't think, through there; that is, it is hilly more—it wasn't quite as level as it was up in the Big Butte country. A man could farm it, but it wasn't as easy farmed as it was in the Big Butte country.

Q. How does that land compare as to having any timber on it with the other country that you are acquainted with?

A. That hasn't got near as much timber as it has in Big Butte. The timber is scattering.

Q. Now, are there lands of similar character, that is, that have been timbered lands there, are any of those lands being farmed in these viciniites?

A. They are.

Whereupon witness testified that they raised in these vicinities wheat, corn, well he would say all kinds of small grains that he has ever seen grow, stock, hogs, cattle, horses, all kinds of poultry, and there are settlers living in that community who have gone into the timbered country and made farms on lands similarly situated.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Mr. Lamb, in your opinion, what has been the effect, if any, of the railroad company's failure to comply with the conditions in their grant in failing to sell the land in tracts of 160 acres to actual settlers for $2.50 an acre and in selling in large tracts to big companies, and in withdrawing these lands from sale?

A. Will I answer it?

Q. Just go ahead and answer it.

A. It has hurt schooling, hurt the population of the country.

Q. By hurting the population of the country, do you mean—

A. Kept settlers out of there.

Whereupon witness testified that he applied about five years ago to purchase land from the Oregon and California Railroad Company, being the southwest quarter of section 27, township 34 south, range 3 east. There was a great deal of timber on most of it, some open glades in it, free soil, reddish colored loam, and was well situated for agricultural purposes. There was good grazing land on it. He had farmed land adjoining this and had raised two tons of wheat hay to the acre adjoining this land of the same general character. The lands that are not adapted to tillage and could not be plowed would raise good grass and could be used for pasture land.

Whereupon on cross-examination witness testified that he took his homestead April 27, 1903, lived on it four years, commuted and paid up at $1.25 an acre. It was in section 26, township 34 south, range 3 east, and was not on a creek but close to Camp Creek, a branch of the North Fork of Big Butte. It was about ten miles by wagon road from his place to Butte Falls. There were about five acres in cultivation on his homestead when he left. His five acres was bench land. It was not on running water. His improvements were not on this five acres, but right by it. His improvements consisted of house, barn, fence, wood shed, smoke house; his house was 16x24 with a kitchen 14x16. The kitchen was a box, and the balance of it which he made would be called frame. He cut the poles, used studding, split out pieces for the sheeting and used what they call shakes or clapboards in that country. The shakes were made out of sugar pine. The main part of the kitchen was made out of sawed stuff and the rest was hewed out. The kitchen was boxed and had studding and the house was ceiled with lumber on the inside, the main house. He floored the house with lumber. He built his barn out of hewed pieces and sided it up and covered it over with shakes. It was all made by himself or hired men on the ground. The five acres was originally partly open. It was a deadening and he could not tell how much timber he cut off of it. He cut the snags as they called them, or dead trees down and rolled them up and burned them. This five acres was a deadening and it was practically clear. It had been burned over timber land. The old snags and logs and things of that kind were left from the fire and were still there. He lived on that place four years. His family consisted of himself, wife and four children.. He did not have any hired man during that time, and did all this work of clearing this five acres himself. He left the stumps and burned around them. He sowed wheat on this five acres. He could not tell how much wheat he raised in any one year on his five acres, he mowed it for hay and did not thresh any of it. There were no threshers in that country. It is fairly well up in the mountains but he could not tell the elevation, but it is a good deal higher than Medford, but he could not say how much higher. He could not say whether it was in the frost or below the frost line. He planted some young apple trees there but they were not old enough to bear when he left that country. He planted potatoes for his own use and had no frost early in the fall. He did not raise anything on the place to sell. He worked outside some, carpentered some and worked for some of his neighbors. The twenty acres that he farmed was about a mile away, something like that, he rented that. He thinks that twenty acres was on a homestead and was on a creek called Freeze Creek, a little branch, there was water in it in the winter time but none in the summer. This farm of twenty acres had been cleared out of the timber, and he does not know how long it had been cleared, but he farmed it. This twenty-acre tract was not on the stage road, there was a building on the land. He rented this place from Fred Rapp, who he thought had owned it for about seven or eight years. He paid one-third of the wheat hay, which yielded about two tons to the acre, as rent. He had some horses and four head of cattle. The cattle roamed out over the country around there. He ran his own cattle, turned them loose at the homestead and let them go, but they would not go far. He also had some calves. He received $22.50 an acre for his homestead from the purchaser, Woodbury of Kalamazoo, Michigan, whom he supposed were timber people. There was scattering timber through his homestead, except the five acres he cultivated. He does not know what the purchasers bought his homestead for. He never made any cruise or estimate of the timber on his homestead. He did not think that he had a good timber quarter section of land. He does not know what a merchantable timber quarter section of land would be. The forty acres that he took under the timber and stone act was not adjacent to the homestead but was about half a mile from the nearest corner of it. This last mentioned tract was timber land and he sold it to Woodbury. Woodbury resides in Kalamazoo, Mich. He sold this land four years ago last March. He commuted on the homestead about 1906 or 1907, he does not remember. He had no thought of selling the homestead to Woodbury, before he made his proof upon it. This sale was attended to for Woodbury by B. H. Harris, who paid for the land through the Medford National Bank. Harris was a sawmill man up on the Big Butte, but he does not remember the name of the company. He had heard that Harris was operating for W. S. Dewing, Kalamazoo, Mich., and had heard that Dewing has a lot of timber lands on the Big Butte. He had never seen Woodbury, who bought his homestead. He has not been to the homestead since he sold it and does not know whether anybody lives on it now. There was fir and a little sugar pine on the homestead. Most of this timber is saw timber. The two school houses that burned down were built by tax. He does not know how the railroad lands were taxed. They levied a certain amount of tax, so many mills tax and built the school houses and he supposes whatever land was in the district had to pay a proportion of the taxes. The last school house burned down the fall before he sold his homestead in March or February. He farmed on the Little Butte, owned 320 acres there which he purchased from a man by the name of Peck. Part of this land was a homestead, forty acres railroad land, forty acres school land and he does not know what was the origin of the title of the remainder. He paid $3,000 for this land and owned it over two years and sold it for $5,000 to Mr. Farrar who is in Portland at present, but he does not know where he makes his headquarters. He did not know where Farrar lived when he purchased this land, but does not think that he was a timber man, or dealing in timber, and did not know whether Farrar lived on the place. In this 320-acre tract there are 60 acres in cultivation and part has not very good timber on it and would hardly be called timber land. Some of it was desert land which was good for pasture.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. What kind of soil is it?

A. Part of it was what we call sticky soil, part free soil.

Q. And rocky?

A. Part of it was rocky.

Q. Hardpan that you can't get through without pretty nearly blasting?

A. Some of it was; some of it was not.

Q. A good deal like the desert out there north towards Eagle Creek from Medford, that they are trying to break up now with these plows that go below the hardpan?

A. Yes, and they are making good ranches of them.

Q. A Spokane concern is trying to put water on it, and put out a few trees, and sell it to suckers?

A. They are making a good living on it. If you had attended the Jackson County Fair this year you would have seen good products grown on it.

Q. What made you sell this 320 acres of land?

A. Well, I don't know, the same as anybody else would take a notion to sell anything.

Q. Now, you say that in your judgment sixty per cent of these railroad quarters, in the vicinity of your homestead and in the vicinity of this farm on Little Butte where you are acquainted, could be farmed after it was cleared?

A. Yes.

Q. Well now, it would have to be cleared of the timber before it could be farmed, wouldn't it?

A. And brush.

Q. Well, I mean the timber that is on it would have to be cleared, too, wouldn't it?

A. Well, a man could farm around the stumps if he wished, raise grass.

Q. I know, but wouldn't he have to cut the trees down and cut the timber and logs?

A. On North Fork it ain't very heavily timbered.

Q. But just answer my question without arguing.

You would have to cut the timber down, wouldn't you, before it could be used for farm purposes?

A. Part of it could and part of it couldn't. Part of it is already clear.

Q. How do you mean clear?

A. I mean nothing on it—glades open, what we call open glades in that country.

Q. How large an open glade is there on any one of these quarter sections?

A. Section 15, township 36, 2 east, there must have been five or six acres adjoining the forty that I owned clear.

Q. That has an open glade on it?

A. Clear, clean, no brush on it.

Q. What kind of stuff is there on it—anything at all?

A. Grass.

Q. What kind of grass?

A. Wild grass.

Q. What kind of soil?

A. Sticky.

Q. Any rock?

A. A few.

Q. Is it steep or level?

A. Neither one. It is just a gradual slope.

Q. Now, how many settlers, Mr. Lamb, can you name that lived within a mile of your homestead, that lived on the same character of land, and did not live on the creek bottoms and on land that had been settled years ago? In other words, how many settlers within a mile of your place clear around can you name that lived there when you were there?

A. Mr. Aldrich. Very few, because the railroad took a mile out of each corner, and we couldn't get settlers very close to us.

Q. Now, these people that lived there, did they take homesteads?

A. Mr. Aldrich did.

Q. When did he take his homestead?

A. The same time I did, I believe.

Q. Has he sold his place?

A. No.

Q. Is his timber land?

A. Partly.

Q. Now, name someone else within a mile on either side clear around. Take a two-mile circle. I mean a circle, and leave your place out—

A. Two mile?

Q. Yes, two miles, a mile on each side.

Mr. Rabb: It is a mile on each side. The radius is a mile. A mile from your place.

A. Mr. Byden.

Whereupon witness testified that Byden relinquished his homestead but not to a timber company. He thinks he relinquished it to some party in Medford, but does not remember the name and does not know what became of it, or how much was received for it. The land that he applied to purchase from the Railroad Company, the southwest quarter of section 27, township 34, 3 east, was about half a mile northwest from his homestead and part of it had timber on it. He made application to the Railroad Company to purchase this land. He and one of his neighbors wrote to the Railroad Company and he does not just remember where they wrote to. He had his application recorded in Jackson County. He offered $2.50 per acre to the railroad for this land, and it was as good a quarter section as the homestead that he sold.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. If you had got that for $2.50 an acre you would have got it for $400, and then you could have sold it for $3600, couldn't you?

A. I suppose I could have if I had wished to have sold it.

Q. You looked around, did you, to find a good quarter before you made your application?

A. Yes, a good average quarter.

Q. Yes, you wanted to find a good piece of timber land, didn't you?

A. Well, I wanted to get a piece of land to run stock on.

Q. And you would take the timber if they would throw it in, wouldn't you?

A. Oh yes.

Q. And you wanted to run stock on it while this timber stood? Wasn't that the idea?

A. Well, I might slash some of it off.

Q. Yes, a little, enough to build a cabin.

A. I don't know what I would have done with it until after I had got it.

Q. You didn't move on it, did you?

A. No.

Q. You didn't make a cabin like some of these Lafferty clients in this record?

A. No. I didn't think there was any use when they wouldn't sell it to me.

Q. Although you went to the trouble to have them file your application and make your contest in the records of Jackson County?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were advised to do that?

A. I was told the railroad company had agreed to sell it to settlers for $2.50 an acre, that I might settle on it.

Q. You didn't want to settle? You wanted to run your cattle over it?

A. Wasn't that settling on it?

Q. Is that the way you wanted to settle on it?

A. I would have moved on it if they had let me have it.

Q. The timber would have paid you to move on it for a while, wouldn't it?

A. The timber would have paid me to move on it for a while?

Q. I say, honor bright, wouldn't it have paid you to move on it for six months to get the timber?

A. Yes, it would have paid me to move on and hold it for five years.

Q. To get the timber, that is the fact, isn't it?

A. Ask that question again, won't you?

(Question read.)

A. Not only to get the timber. I would have liked to have the land.

Q. You would have liked to get the timber too?

A. Yes, I would have taken the timber along with the land.

Q. As a matter of fact the real reason you applied for that quarter section over a quarter section that didn't have any timber on it was because there was timber on it —now, isn't that the real fact about it?

A. It would have been hard to take a quarter in that section that didn't have any timber on it.

Q. I know, but you were not looking for a quarter section that didn't have any timber on it, were you?

A. I couldn't have found it in that country.

Q. I know, but knowing that—you knew it was all pretty good timber, didn't you?

A. It was not all timber. I testified there were some open glades on it.

Q. I understand, but the quarter section that you applied for, and offered $2.50 an acre for was a pretty good quarter section of timber as that timber runs in there?

A. Yes.

Q. And you picked that out because it had pretty good timber on it, didn't you?

A. Well, I don't know that I picked it out any more than I would a good many other quarters. It wasn't any better than some other quarters.

Q. I understand, but you picked that quarter section out because it had good timber on it, now, didn't you?

A. Well, it had good land, too, on it.

Q. I understand, but answer my question. Didn't you pick that quarter section out because it had good timber on it—yes or no?

A. Yes.

Q. That is all.

A. Partly, I might answer.

Whereupon on re-direct examination witness testified that during his residence in Jackson County he had been engaged mostly as a farmer but never engaged in the timber business. At the time he took his homestead he had no land, no home, and wanted a home. He purchased the other farms mentioned for the purpose of making a living off of them by farming and raising stock. The sticky land referred to by him is black land and is a productive soil.

Whereupon upon re-cross examination witness testified:

Q. Will a plow scour in this sticky land?

A. Not good.

Q. Don't you know you cannot drive two hundred feet with a plow in the ground in that sticky land until it chokes up and you cannot get any further?

A. No, I don't.

Q. Fills the mold board so it is clear and smooth and you cannot keep it in the ground?

A. Oh yes, you can.

Q. Do you tell me that that sticky land, that the plow will scour in it at all?

A. Not scour good.

Q. It won't scour at all, will it, unless it is wet—half water?

A. In the fall of the year, when the first rains take place it is as good as any land we have got.

Q. Do you know that land over about Jacksonville belonging to the Hanley estate that you cannot get a plow to stay in the ground unless it is wet as water?

A. Yes, you can.

Q. That is sticky land, isn't it?

A. I am not acquainted very well with the Hanley ranch.

Q. How many acres of that sticky land have you tried to plow?

A. I don't know as I could just tell you that.

Q. You have never had very much experience if you think a plow will scour in it.

A. Yes, I have. I say it won't scour good in it—I don't argue that at all.

Whereupon on re-direct examination witness testified that the Rogue River Valley is on sticky land. This soil produces grains, fruits and vegetables and is used for general farming purposes in that county. The land in the vicinity of his homestead that was in cultivation and that which he cultivated was good farming land. Nearly all of the lands that were cultivated in that section of the country contained more or less timber. He was up in that country five years ago and people were living up there, farming timbered land which was cleared and slashed, part of it and part of it was open glades. Nothing would prevent the farming of this land except the timber that grows on it, except where there were patches that were rocky, but the bulk of it was very easily cleared of rock after the timber was off. This would be a good farming country after the timber is removed. It will take some work to clear the timber of course.

Whereupon CHARLES RANDLES, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is forty-five years old, resides at Lake Creek, Jackson County, Oregon, and has lived in Jackson County since 1881. He was born in Redding, California. For the last twenty years he has been engaged in riding after stock. He ran a farm, along with stock raising, which was located on the south fork of Little Butte in Jackson County, Oregon. Lake Creek is a post-office and there is a stream there that is called Lake Creek. The post-office is right at the mouth of this creek and he should judge that that ranch is about twenty-five miles from Medford. When he came to Jackson County in 1881, he came with his father. He was at that time fifteen years old. He moved from California to Jackson County with his father and mother. His father and mother lived in that Little Butte country—Lake Creek country as it is called. They settled there and his father took a homestead on the south fork of Little Butte creek, about fourteen miles south of Butte Falls. His father and mother lived there until twelve years ago. They proved up and got a patent to the land. He was not at home much after he was seventeen years old. He rode after stock, worked over in Harney Valley, and some west of the Cascade mountains.

This homestead of his father lay part of it on the creek, part of it was hill land, and some scattering timber on it, principally pine, some fir. Some of it was good sized timber and some small. It was scattering hill timber. Verp little of it was saw timber. His father cleared and grubbed the land out of the creek bottoms, cleaned them up, put them in garden stuff, alfalfa, and so on, and they cleaned up about seventy-five acres of brush and timber land. They lived there from 1881 up to twelve years ago, which would be about nineteen years.

His father went from Jackson county to Yreka, California, and stayed a while, and at the present time he is in Medford.

The land that his father cleared was cultivated and put into alfalfa, a good part of it, a portion of it raised potatoes, onions, beans, corn, oats, wheat, barley, all kinds of grain. That land is something about 1860 to 1865 feet in elevation, about the same as Ashland. Part of the land is sticky land, and the creek bottoms was land that had been made from time to time, sandy loam, and is good, productive soil. His father had about forty or forty-five acres in alfalfa there. He raised small grains on most of the balance of the land. There was some waste land on it, pasture land. The waste land was used for pasture. He had one hundred and sixty acres, and then witness bought one hundred and sixty acres adjoining from a man by the name of Davis, which was all hill land. They then had three hundred and twenty acres of land there. He farmed a portion and pastured a portion of this land that he bought from Davis. It was in township 36 or 37, range 2 east. The nearest post-office was Lake Creek, about four miles east. He doesn't remember the number of the section, but it was in the southern part of the township, near the central portion. Most of the riding after stock that he did was in that vicinity, in the Butte Creek country on the head of Dead Indian. He became familiar with the country there in riding after stock that way. He had ridden all through that country. He was riding most of the time and had been over the lands quite a good deal and observed the extent to which the land is settled there, and has observed the use to which the land has been put there for the purpose of growing agricultural and horticultural crops to quite an extent. It is hard for him to get at the size of the country that he has been over, but he has been through the head of Dead Indian country, which is as far south as he is acquainted with the country, being about twelve or fourteen miles from Lake Creek, and he has been about twelve or fourteen miles north from Lake Creek as far as Butte Falls. He has been through the Butte Falls country, but he is not very much acquainted on Butte Falls but in the vicinity of Butte Falls. He has not been very much along the Rogue River. He is not much acquainted with the Rogue River country. He has been east of Mt. Pitt from Lake

Creek straight to Mt. Pitt, about twenty miles; he has been all through that country west from Lake Creek to Medford, which will be about twenty-five miles west. He has ridden after stock in there something like twenty years, and also in eastern Oregon. He has been at the business about twenty-five years, and he thinks he has put in about twenty of it in this section (referring to the places mentioned in Jackson county). He does not know in a general way where the railroad lands are situated in that territory. He never paid any attention to railroad sections or government sections. He knows as a whole, as a general thing how the country looks and the lay of it. The principal part of the territory with which he is acquainted in that territory compares very well with the land homesteaded by his father, and that he bought adjoining his father's homestead. There are settlers up Lake Creek about fifteen miles, from Lake Creek post-office. Some of these settlers are engaged in stock raising, some in farming, raising vegetables, etc. That is a pretty fair alfalfa country in there. On the south fork of Little Butte, most all of these settlers have their bottom lands in alfalfa. On the north fork, they raise mostly meadow, and on the hill lands they raise grain, hay, corn, wheat, oats, and all such as that. Take the land in general from Lake Creek for eight or nine miles east, and it is all good corn country, and wherever one can get the timber off and the land cultivated, one can raise good corn. That condition extends south clear through to Ashland, and all of that country and north in and about Butte Falls, which is as far as he knows much about the country, that condition exists as far as he knows the country there. That country is a broken country. One comes to creeks; there will be canyons along there, and the side hills, and benches; there will be quite a draw which they farm, and then one would come on up to this level country and timber. Most of that level, flat country has good timber scattered over it, some heavy, some not so heavy. All of that land practically could be farmed if the timber were off. The land where the heaviest timber grows is about the same character as the other land. There is not much difference in the formation of the land in that section of the country.

Q. Now, speaking generally with reference to this large area that you have become familiar with, I will ask you whether that land is of such character and is so situated generally that it will support a settler, if it is properly cleared and properly handled?

A. Yes, I think most of those quarter sections they could get enough on them of land to support a family if they were properly farmed and cleared up—cleaned up and worked.

Q. Did your father support his family on that homestead of his?

A. He did. He supported about ten children on it.

Q. So that land will grow children as well as alfalfa, will it?

A. Yes, sir, it seemed to.

Q. Now, just in your own language state a little more definitely about how many of those quarter sections in that area that you are acquainted with would support a family if properly handled, Mr. Randles?

A. Well now, as to that you take the country as a whole, I will say, you know, of that, what I speak of as that base timbered land, I think that there could be about forty per cent of that would be agricultural land—just take it as a whole.

Q. Well now, what percentage of agricultural land does a settler need in the 160 acres in order to maintain himself, using the balance of the land for pasturage when it is good pasture land?

A. Well, if a man can get 25 acres of good land he will support a family on it.

Q. This tillable land, does it lie in large tracts, or is it distributed through the country there?

A. Well, it is distributed, pretty evenly distributed.

Q. Are there very many quarter sections there that could not be cleared and cultivated and maintain a family?

A. Not many.

Q. How many quarter sections out of one hundred, in your judgment, in that general territory that you have described, would support a family, if cleared and handled in the proper manner, take it on an average through that whole country as you know it?

A. Well, it would reach eighty per cent of them.

Q. Did your father clear his lands of the timber or was it already cleared when he went there?

A. There was a good deal of timber on it.

Q. How did you clear it?

A. Not so much timber as brush land, a good deal of brush land on the place my father had, and some large—quite large timber, cottonwood and all such timber as that, hazelbrush, salal brush, hawthorne and all such as that.

Q. How did you clear it?

A. Grubbed it out with a grubbing hoe the biggest part of it.

Q. Now, in testifying that that land would support a family, or settler's family, if properly handled, do you take into consideration the difficulties of clearing the land?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you seen the land cleared down there?

A. I have seen quite a good deal of land cleared there. In fact there isn't a ranch right in my neighborhood there but what the greater portion of it has been cleared.

Q. Well, do you know why the balance of it has not been reduced to settlement?

A. Now, in regard to that, there is people would make homes there if they could buy this railroad land and buy it right, they could make good homes on it; but they are kept out because it is withdrawn from the market.

Q. Well, this land that is withdrawn from the market and that is not settled upon, is there any difference between that land and the land that has been settled on?

A. Oh, as I said a while ago, it is just about the same character of land.

Q. I didn't ask you with reference to the land that is not tillable. How is that as to being grazing land, and what quality of grazing land?

A. Well, the principal part of that country is good grazing land; both timber and open land is good grazing land.

Whereupon witness testified, that the timber, when one gets pretty well back in the mountains, is principally white fir. When one gets a little lower down, there will be considerable red fir and pine. His father's homestead is now used for farming by Bonny Brothers, but right at present it has been turned back to his father. His father sold it to them and he had to take it back. It is still in cultivation. His father did not leave the place because he could not make a living on it, but got too old to farm any more and sold out on that account. Land is worth there, after it is cleared and put in cultivation, from fifty to seventy-five dollars an acre, taking a whole quarter section of land. Cost of clearing that land and putting it under cultivation depends altogether on the kind of timber and brush that is on it. There is some of that land that cannot be cleared, some rocky land that would not pay to clear up. Take a quarter section, there might be portions of that land that would be too rough and rocky, but there is very little of it that would not pay to clear. That applies to land that has large timber on it, as well as that which has small brush on it. The heavy timbered land would be the most expensive to clear to get out the stumps. They do not clear the brush before they grub it, they slash it and they clear it different there. Some slash it down, burn it off, and then grub. Others grub and burn as they grub the brush out, and some use a stump puller, and some grub it with a hoe. There are all ways of cleaning it up. They blasted a good many of the stumps out in his part of the country, and some few have used the charpitting process, but they have mostly cleared by blasting. The principal part of that country there now will grow all kinds of small grain, corn, oats, wheat, barley, potatoes, cabbage, onions, beans, and all such as that, and fruit grows all through that country wherever he has been—such as apples, prunes, peaches—some parts won't raise peaches, but then the greater part of it will, and pears also. Blackberries, raspberries, strawberries, all kinds of berries like that grow good there. The quality of the fruit is just as good as they have in the main valleys there. The altitude at his father's place was about 1860 to 1865 feet, and the altitude gradually increases as one approaches Mt. Pitt on the east. He could not say what the altitude is about twenty miles east of this Lake Creek post-office,—that is, up about Fish Lake or next to Mt. Pitt. There are settlers about ten miles from the summit of Mt. Pitt. The kind of crops that can be grown does not change very much when one gets into the higher altitude. They raise quite a good deal of stock in that country at the present time—a good many cattle are raised in that country. They raise hay to feed them in the winter, and turn them on the range in the summer—range them back in this Mt. Pitt country, all over from Lake Creek up to Mt. Pitt and all through there cattle are ranged, and the head of Dead Indian country is summer ranged. The land that is cultivated is fenced so that the balance can be used as range. Dairying business is carried on to a small extent there, but not a great deal. They are about fifteen miles from Eagle Point market, and about twenty-nine miles from Medford from where he is at the present time. He is now working for Mike Hanley at the Hanley ranch on the North Fork, about four or five miles east from Lake Creek. They grow meadow mostly on that ranch, meadow and fruit, they have a home orchard there but they do not market their fruit. They are engaged in stock raising and raise fruit for consumption on the ranch there. The roads between there and Medford are not very good. There is a wagon road east from Lake Creek to Fish Lake, which is fairly good. One can go over it with a wagon. There are a good many settlers up there in each township in that general country he has been describing, something like twenty or twenty-five in the back district, and down in the Lake Creek country all the land is settled with the exception of the railroad land.

Q. Do you know whether the holding back of the railroad lands has affected in any way the development and settlement of that country?

A. Oh, I think it has to a certain extent.

Q. How does it affect it?

A. Well, it keeps people out, that there is homes there that they could make homes on it if they could get hold of the land.

Q. It has been testified here in this case that there is not a quarter section of railroad land within this entire grant that would support a family, a settler and his family. Is that true?

A. No, I think that statement is a little off.

Q. As these other lands have been settled up, to that extent has that reduced the available range in there?

A. Why, certainly, it has reduced the stock range. The more they settle the less out range we have.

Q. Have you noticed any change in that respect during the twenty years you have been riding in there?

A. Oh, a great change, yes.

Q. When did this increase in settlement take place?

A. Well, now, in my country it has just gradually settled up. They keep getting back, you know, gradually. It has been that way all the time you know. There was no rush of settlement. It just gradually settled up.

Q. And that applies to this territory generally, does it?

A. Yes.

Whereupon, on cross-examination, witness testified: that George Ratcliffe joined his father's place on the east when his father went in there. There was also Swingle up Lake Creek, and then just above there was his father's brother, Sam Randles; then came Tongue, a German, and then just across the creek was Peck, and then came his father's place and George Radcliffe, and then Perry Farlow at that time. Those people were all there and were on homesteads. These homesteads were not on Lake Creek at all, but were on the South Fork of Little Butte Creek. They settled on the creeks in those early days because it was natural that a man would go along a creek to settle where he has a chance. The land along the creek bottoms, a man has access to water and all. The bottom land was not more open than the others, it was not so much that the land was level as that the water was there and the bottom land is a little better land on an average than hill land. The lands of these settlers ran on each side of the creeks. They put their houses on the bottom along the creeks in those early days. There is some vacant Government land within a radius of twelve or fourteen miles of Lake Creek. These Government lands that are left would average about one-fourth agricultural land.

Q. Well, now, you said 25 acres is enough on each quarter section to support a family of this land, if it was cleared.

A. It is, when they can get in and work it, it is enough.

Q. Why don't people go in and take these vacant Government lands that are in there?

A. A good many people don't like to get in and work hard enough to make a living on that.

Q. Well, there is forty acres in there, and there is eighty, and there is 120 and there is 160 acre tracts, and there are some much larger tracts in that territory, all of Government land today, has been from the beginning, and is unsettled, nobody on it.

A. Can you tell me where those lands are?

Q. No, I say within twelve miles of that Lake Creek settlement that you have been over.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you say there is some Government land there. Whatever there is there that is vacant, why don't the people take that?

A. Well, that I can't say.

Q. Isn't it because those lands are not worth taking up?

A. No, at the present time I don't think there is, that you could get but very few 160 acres there that is not worth taking up.

Q. Well, if there are any Government lands in there, you think they are worth taking?

A. Yes, sir; I do.

Q. You don't know why they are not taken?

A. No, sir; I don't know why they are not taken. But I don't think you will find them in that area up there but what is worth taking up.

Q. Well, now, then, most of the settlements in that twelve by fourteen miles each way from Lake Creek and then east of Lake Creek to Mount Pitt, and from Lake Creek over to Big Butte, are on the streams or headwaters of these various creeks, are they not?

A. Well, they are close to the creeks, most of them.

Q. Now, your father cleared his land along the creek bottom, didn't he?

A. Yes; also hill land.

Q. The alfalfa is on these creek bottoms?

A. Certainly the alfalfa is on the creek bottoms.

Q. They don't raise this alfalfa up on these hills?

A. No, they don't raise it on the hills.

Q. And the orchards are nearly all down in these creek bottoms?

A. Well, there is orchards there that is on hillsides.

Q. I am not asking you to say that there are no orchards anywhere else, but the orchards most of them are on the creek bottoms now?

A. Along those farms, those home orchards are mostly.

Whereupon witness testified that, they do not raise any fruit for the market up in that country and there are no apples shipped East that he knows of from anywhere except down around the valley around Medford. Eagle Point is on a little railroad known as the "Jim Hill" road, the Pacific & Eastern. It was built a short time ago. It runs out from Medford to Eagle Point and then to Butte Falls, and is in operation. There is a saw mill at Butte Falls but it has not been there a great while. It was put there just before the railroad went in there, he thinks. There is a portion of the country there that is owned by timbermen. He thinks that probably right through that Butte Falls country, the timber would average a little better than some other parts of Jackson County. He has been through the Jenny Creek country, but does not know anything much about it and does not know whether it is good timber or not. He never cruised any timber. In his riding after stock, he gathers up stock and takes them on to the range and goes out and salts them. He did this for Mike Hanley, who has a ranch on the North Fork of Little Butte. The water supply for Medford is taken out of the North Fork of Little Butte. The settlement above the intake on the North Fork of Little Butte is very thin. That is the only place the town of Medford could select to get water. He would not say that they selected it on account of settlers but he could name the number of settlers if desired. There is Ilinger and George and Ed Frye, Gus and August Alder, Milo Conley, John McAllister, Charlie Turrell and D. Bradshaw, who all have claims. The Fry boys have been settled there for the last seven or eight years, and Conley settled there twelve years ago. There is no cleared land on the creek. He did not get any clear land at all, excepting a little glade up on the side of the mountain. The rest of his land is brush land, has been a burn at one time, part of it, and part of it is timber. He raises goats for a living and has about two hundred head, which pasture mostly on his place, which is partly fenced. He would judge that there is about sixty acres fenced, and about eight or nine acres cleared and under the plow. The Frye Boys are up on a bench, clear away from the creek on the side of the mountain, about a mile and a half from the creek. It has been timber land at one time, pretty heavy timber in there, and a fire burned it and they raise meadows on this place. One of them has sheep, the other has a few goats, and they raise vegetables and work around various ways to make a living—he couldn't tell just what. They sell a few vegetables to farmers around there—that is, to other settlers, while they are making a living, some few. They do not sell to the saw mills—there is only one little saw mill in there that they could get to. It depends upon the location about the timber—what kind of timber it is. In this country up there that he has just been describing, timber is very scattering. There isn't any timber there where that old burn was that is of any account much. He is not acquainted with the Lamb homestead. He has been through that country, but don't know anything about the sections and would not know what part of the country the sections were in if one would name them.

Q. You could hardly apply for a quarter section up there outside of these burns, but what you would get pretty good timber on, could you?

A. The timber is not bad. It is scattered timber all over that country.

Q. I know, but a good many people have gone in there to buy this land for the timber? That is right? Haven't they?

A. Well, that I don't know much about. There has been quite a lot of timber dealing done, as I have heard of, but as to know it myself, I couldn't say.

Whereupon witness testified, that he never took a piece of Government land himself, either homestead or timber claim. He has been there about thirty-one years, something like that, and was fifteen years old when he went out there, and never took a homestead or timber claim. He was a stock man.

Q. You were a stock man?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, this stock, have you ever herded, or driven, or rounded up several hundred head of cattle into the range, driven them up or collected them up?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whom did you do that for?

A. Mr. Hanley.

Q. Well, now, these cattle that are herded in that way all the way back to Mount Pitt, they roam over all that vacant land, whether it is owned by timber people or by the Government or by the railroad company?

A. They do.

Whereupon witness testified, that practically the only thing that is enclosed is the land that they farm, or that they want to pasture lower down. There is a lot of that land, Government land and railroad land, that is not fenced. If all of these quarter sections were fenced, the herding business would have to stop. He thinks that about 40 per cent of this land would be agricultural if the timber were cleared. Bonny Brothers bought his father's place about two years ago last August and agreed to pay $8,000.00 for the three hundred and twenty acres. They were not able to make the payments and his father had to take it back.

Q. What is this land that you have described, in a general way now, I mean, outside of these lands that have been settled upon, like your father's place, land that is owned by the railroad company, for instance, and other land that is not actually occupied by settlers, excluding now the improvements in houses or barns or fences, what would you say these quarter sections were worth per acre today on an average?

A. Well, now, that is a hard question to answer. I am not posted on the land prices.

Q. Well, you said, in answer to counsel for the Government, that this land was worth from sixty dollars to seventy-five dollars an acre. Now, what land did you refer to?

A. I referred to lands—he asked me about these lands that was cleared up ready for——

Q. Those bottom lands?

A. No, these lands that is settled, and been settled, been partly cleared, and what is left that is about the way they would range. Not the outside range country, that has no settlement or anything on—that I didn't have reference to at all.

Q. Well, now, what would you say that was worth, that that is outside of these that are settled on, say on railroad sections in that vicinity?

A. Well, I would just have to make an estimate of my own.

Q. Yes; well, now, what is your judgment of what it is worth an acre, take it a quarter section apiece as they run, and average it.

A. Well, I would say about $30 an acre.

Q. So that if a man applied to purchase a quarter section of this land from the railroad company at $2.50 an acre, and he was sold this land at that price, he would make about $27.50 an acre, in your judgment, without having to do anything in the way of clearing it up.

A. Well, that would be my judgment on the land, that that would be about what it would be.

Whereupon witness testified, that he had never applied to purchase any of this railroad land. He is now and has been working for two years for Mike Hanley by the month, and gets $75.00 a month and board for his family. He is an experienced stock man and the stock business of Mr. Hanley he thinks is profitable. He thinks he makes some money out of it. Hanley owns and pastures over his lands 750 to 800 head of cattle. He ships some and sells some right there in the home market, sells to local butchers, and some he ships by rail. He is about the largest stock man in that vicinity. There are others who have quite a few head and they all follow the same general business—when they are in the stock business. They turn their cattle out and the cattle go where they please, and they do not pay anything for the use of the lands that they range over that he knows of. Some of the stock goes into the Government reserve, the Cascade Forest Reserve, but he does not know what they pay for running on the reservation. A part of Hanley's cattle go into the reservation. He gets permits. There is good grass on the reservation.

Q. Well, it is pretty nice for the United States to have the reserve there for these stockmen to pasture on, and for this railroad to have these lands out so they can pasture on, isn't it, quite profitable to them?

A. There is good grass on it.

Whereupon witness testified, that there is no shipping of apples done from Lake Creek. There are quite a number of little small orchards all through that country for use as home orchards. There are a few strawberries shipped, not a great many. They do not ship any pears from there, but ship quite a bit of butter and eggs—such as that. They are taken down to Medford and sold there. Lake Creek is just a postoffice and was established about twenty-two or twenty-three years ago. and is about twenty-five miles from Medford. The foothills begin east of Medford, going out to his place, just after one gets across the desert, less than ten miles. The country around Medford is practically level, and the level country extends almost from Tolo clear up to Ashland, where it begins to get quite hilly before one gets to Ashland after passing Phoenix. At Phoenix, it begins to climb pretty well. It is nearly level as far west as Jacksonville. The foothills begin almost at the town of Jacksonville, and the foothills begin about ten miles notheast of Medford on the way to Eagle Creek.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that this land could be used also to raise goats on. This is not being done to a very big extent, there are quite a few goats. Mr. Coshow and Mr. Conley have some, and he cannot name the parties who have several small bunches. There are quite a few goats in there.

Q. You think at least eighty per cent of the quarter sections in there would support a settler and his family?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, this remaining twenty per cent, is that general in its distribution, or is it in certain localities?

A. It is just in certain localities. Well, there would be some quarter sections, you know, that would be rough, and some that would be along like say in canyons and places like that.

Q. Well, are those quarter sections that could not be utilized for the purpose of settlement on the even numbered sections as well as the railroad sections?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether it is a fact that the lands that have not been taken up for homesteads, by homestead entries down there, are lands of that character?

A. It might be. I don't know where those lands that he had reference to—I don't know where they are located.

Q. It is your best judgment that the available lands that were Government lands have been taken up?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you say you think these lands will average about $30 an acre in there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Counsel for the defendants asked you if an individual could purchase them at $2.50 an acre if he would not make a profit without doing anything. I will ask you, if the railroad company has only a $2.50 interest in those lands, and it can keep them, will it not make $27.50 an acre without doing anything?

A. They would make the same profit, certainly.

Mr. Townsend: I will withdraw the question.

Q. Take 160 acres, with 25 acres of good land that can be cleared and cultivated, such as you have described, and the balance of the land being average pasture land that there is in that country, about how many head of stock can you raise on that 160 acres?

A. On that 160 acres about 50 head.

Q. Would that make a comfortable living for a settler?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You mean cattle?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would that make a comfortable living for a settler?

A. That many head of cattle will.

Excused.

Whereupon CHARLES A. EDMONDSON, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is forty-five years of age, lives at Butte Falls, Jackson county, Oregon, and has lived in Jackson county about twenty-seven years. Since residing in Jackson county, his occupation has been farming and stock. His father lived in Jackson county and was a rancher there. He has lived and been engaged in farming near Butte Falls, in the Butte Creek country, and has resided in that teritory for twenty years. The character of his farming was hay raising and such as that, and cattle, but he raised no grain to thresh. They sowed grain for hay. He is not a great deal, but is a little, acquainted with the farming business in Jackson county, and is acquainted with the farming business in the territory with which he is acquainted at Butte Falls. Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, he is well acquainted from Butte Falls around there in townships 33, 34 and 35, ranges 2 and 3 east, and has been over these lands sufficiently to acquaint himself with the farming business of these townships quite a little. The general character of that country there is that it is a timbered country. It is a free, loamy soil, and of the same general character, generally speaking, pretty much through there in this territory. There are several farmers in that area. They raise mostly hay, vegetables, berries, and such as that. They raise grain, sow lots of wheat in there for hay. They raise oats, some rye, barley and wheat, and some corn—but not much corn because they do not get so much to the acre for feed. They raise cattle, hogs and fruit there. He went over this land riding through for stock, hunting and looking through the woods, referring to townships 34, 35 and 36, ranges 2 and 3 east.

Q. Township 34, range 2 east contains between three and four thousand acres of unsold railroad land, township 35, range 2 east the railroad company still retains a substantial part of the original grant in practically every section, and the same conditions exist as to 36,

2 east?

Q. How much of the land in that area that you have testified concerning would, in your opinion, be suitable for settlement purposes by a man who would settle upon the land for the purpose of making it a home and engaging in the farming business; that is, on each 160-acre tract described, not necessarily by quarter section, but by legal subdivisions of forty acres lying contiguous.

A. Oh, I think half of it.

Q. What percentage of plow land would a man be able to get on a 160-acre tract, in your opinion?

A. I think it would average forty acres on every 160.

Q. Well now, do you mean, Mr. Edmonson, that only half of it, half of this entire area, would be suitable for settlement?

A. No. I meant there would be half of it would be agricultural to the plow—would be plow land.

Q. I intended to ask you, Mr. Edmondson, how much of this land could be taken in 160-acre tracts, for settlement purposes, by a man who was seeking to make a home, engaging in the farming industry to make his livelihood from it.

A. Oh, I expect a person could take 75 per cent of it probably as homestead land that way.

Q. How much land in this community would you have to have on 160 acres to supporta family; that is, how much plow land would be required by a man engaged in farming?

A. Oh perhaps forty acres.

Whereupon witness testified, that his father lived in township 34 south of range 3 east, and raised hay and other crops on his ranch there. There is quite a little of this area in flats on the creeks that run through there, and there are bench lands in that country. The bench lands are timbered and have a loamy soil through that country, and brush. The benches in area vary somewhat, some of them are good big benches and some of them are not so large. It is practically a level country from the mouth of Willow Creek north five or six miles, just a bench bottom. His farm or homestead had one hundred and sixty acres in it, and he had six acres under cultivation. He made his home and maintained his family there, and made a living on that and his stock, made his living in the farming business—right in the stock. He was on the homestead. There are prairies scattered through the country, open land that is free from timber, and this covers a considerable area. There are quite a few prairies there, but he does not know the extent. He does not think the expense of putting those lands in cultivation would be great, and it would not be necessary to remove any timber from the prairie lands. He does not think there is any growth on any of that land that would prevent the land being farmed. The soil is such as would raise grains, hay, vegetables and fruits mentioned by him as being raised in that community. The land that could not be tilled would be good grazing land, unless there would be some rocky point or something that it just happened to be. Outside of a little grazing, there might be places that would be rocky and perhaps worthless for any purpose, but not many of them, not much of this land would be that way.

Q. In your opinion Mr. Edmondson, what has been the effect of the railroad company's failure to comply with the conditions of this grant and sell these lands to actual settlers in 160-acre tracts at $2.50 an acre—what has been the effect upon the community?

A. I think it has kept our settlement back in there.

Q. Has it affected the farming business in that country?

A. Why, to a certain extent, I suppose.

Whereupon witness testified, that some of the lands that have been timbered have been cleared in that community and are now under the plow. Farms of that character exist in that country.

Whereupon, upon cross-examination, witness testified, that he does not mean, by saying that these farms have been cleared that a few acres on each quarter section have been cleared,—not exactly that,—and he does not mean that a whole quarter section has been cleared. He don't know any whole quarter sections that have been cleared. Generally, the lands that have been cleared are where each settler would have from five acres to probably forty acres cleared. Fredenburg, near Butte Falls there, has fully forty acres cleared. He has been there quite a little while. The balance of his land is pasture land, with scattering timber on it. The homestead of witness is in section 32, township 35, range 3 east, which he took in 1904, and proved up on it in six years, living on it all the time there, keeping his family there. He still owns and lives on his homestead. His nearest post-office is Butte Falls, seven miles distant. None of the land in the vicinity of his place has been logged off in there. Some of it has been sold to timber people. He does not know W. S. Dewing, but thinks he is a Kalamazoo lumberman or timberman. He could not tell in regard to the acreage of timber in that general section of Butte Falls. He has heard that Dewing had timber holdings in there. There is a saw-mill company there at Butte Falls, called the Butte Falls Lumber Company, in which Dewing is interested, but he cannot tell who the Company is. They do not operate. They have suspended at present. They have not cut a great deal of timber in there. He thinks these timber quarters in that section around there are now worth perhaps thirty dollars an acre, or something like that. If a man had a good timber quarter and there were no impovements of any kind on it, he could sell it for about thirty dollars an acre, but he does not know of any being sold at the present time. Timber is regarded as valuable in that country. There have been timber deals going on there, he thinks, for six or seven years, but he does not know exactly how long. He does not know of many timber deals there lately. He knows that quite a lot of timber is in there yet, and there are quite a lot of private holdings in there in the hands of homestead claimants. He thinks some of these homestead people have sold to timber people. He is not so well posted in regard to who has their land, only those around him. Near him there, he knows in his neighborhood about who holds their land and those away he could not tell. There is some good timber on his homestead and it is about all saw timber. He thinks it would run somewhere near about three million feet, board measure, on his hundred and sixty. He could not tell what he could have sold his quarter section for, for the timber that is on it alone, in the last four or five years, as he has not had it on the market and he never had an offer for it. He expects his quarter section would be worth thirty-five hundred dollars all right. He knew it was timber when he took it up—he knew there was timber on it. He had lived in that vicinity for twenty years and he is now forty-five years old. He filed on this homestead in 1904, that was about the time the country started to settle up in there. People began to come in and take homes but at that time he does not think there was any timber selling in that country. About that time people began to look at the timber and consider that the timber was worth something, he thinks. He never had much experience in the timber business, and was not posted in the timber business, and was no timber dealer. There were not many timber deals in Jackson county until about eight years ago. He does not know of any old pioneers that have taken land in there. They were most all of the second generation—the drifters came in from other countries. He supposes that he was like a good many other fellows,—did not take his homestead in time, did too much running around, or something or other.

Q. Now, don't you know, Mr. Edmondson, that it was because homesteads became more valuable because the timber began to be worth something? Isn't that the fact?

A. Yes, and our government land began to get more scarce.

Q. Well, but the land was still there—the land didn't run away?

A. And I had a right to 160 acres of it. Therefore, I took it.

Q. I understand. Well now, Mr. Edmondson, will you, under your oath, say that you didn't really take that for the timber that was on it?

A. Not altogether I didn't, no.

Q. Well, but you wouldn't despise the timber because there was timber on it?

A. Oh no, I didn't, no.

Q. It was a pretty good inducement, wasn't it?

A. It was an inducement, and I have got good land with it.

Q. Yes, I know, when you cut the timber off it is all right.

A. Yes, it is. You are right.

Q. But the timber was what made you take it, wasn't it?

A. Not altogether, no.

Q. Chiefly, it was the chief reason you took it?

A. I could get a bunch of land with timber on it, and I took it.

Q. Well, I will ask you this question: As a matter of fact, didn't you take it because it was a good quarter section of timber land, that had three million feet of saw timber on it?

A. And agricultural land, that is the reason I took it.

Q. Well, how much have you got cleared?

A. I have got about six acres.

Q. You expect to be how old when you get the rest cleared?

A. I don't know.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, you never expect to clear the rest of it, do you?

A. Well, now, I couldn't say to that. If I get some way of disposing of my timber some way or other so I won't have to burn it and waste it on the ground, I will clear it probably.

Q. In other words, if you sell the timber to good advantage you may clear up some of it, unless you get too much money for the timber? Then you will live like a gentleman.

A. If I could sell the timber, I can probably clear it, as you say. But I can't cut my timber and waste it there on the ground.

Q. You wouldn't think of doing that?

A. No, I wouldn't think of doing that.

Q. The timber is too valuable to burn it up, isn't it?

A. That is true.

Q. I say the timber is too valuable to burn it up, isn't it?

A. I cleared six acres there and burned it, and found it quite a job.

Q. I say the timber is too valuable to burn, isn't it?

A. It is too valuable to burn.

Whereupon, upon re-direct examination, witness testified, that he has made this homestead his home with his family ever since he took it up, and never engaged in the timber business, and is no speculator in timber. His purpose in taking the homestead was to get a home.

Q. Now, about the time that you have testified that a demand from people commenced coming in there, taking timber, was there any increase in the demand for land for settlement purposes?

A. Sure there was.

RECROSS EXAMINATION.

Q. Why didn't you take a quarter section of that good land there that didn't have so much timber on it for a homestead, if you didn't want the timber?

A. I didn't know where to get it.

Q. Is it all timbered?

A. Pretty well the government land is all timbered in there.

Q. Couldn't hardly get a quarter section in there but what has pretty good timber on it?

A. There are others ahead of me that gobbled that up.

Q. Did you ever apply for a railroad quarter?

A. I applied for a railroad forty.

Q. Where was that?

A. Section 9, township 35, range 2 east.

Q. Was that a timbered forty?

A. No, sir.

Q. That was pasture land?

A. There was about thirty acres on the forty that is just black sticky land, oak.

Q. How much did you offer to pay for it?

A. I didn't make them any offer.

Q. You just wrote to them?

A. I wrote to the man at San Francisco, and he answered me back, and that settled it.

Q. When was that?

A. That was in 1907.

Q. You didn't make an application on these blanks that these timber brokers have sent all over the United States and have men sign, to offer $2.50 an acre and file on the land and claim it under an act of congress—you didn't do that?

A. No, sir, I didn't. I wrote to the land commissioner at San Francisco, and he answered me back and said that the land was not on the market and the letter would not be recognized, and so that was all there was to it.

Q. Now, let me ask you are most of these quarter sections out there on the railroad quarters about as good as your quarter section, so far as the timber is concerned?

A. Well, in that territory there, they are.

Q. That is, they would run on an average of about three million feet of saw timber, in your judgment?

A. I think so.

Whereupon, upon re-direct examination, witness testified, that part of the land is heavily timbered and part of it more sparsely timbered. Part of this land that he has just testified about is heavily timbered, and part of it more lightly, but taking it on an average, he would judge that it would go somewhere near what he has stated. There are some parts of it that are glade land, and such like as that, but just to average it up he would judge it would go about three million feet. The glade land would be prairie and open land.

Whereupon on re-cross examination, witness testified:

Q. It would be here and there a little spot that would be what you would call a glade—four or five or ten acres in a spot?

A. Yes, sir; and here and there four or five acres with timber on some of it.

Q. That is what you mean by prairie land?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon, upon re-direct examination, witness testified, that this glade land would be two or three acres in lots of it. He does not know of any that he can think of that would be any larger on any of the railroad holdings there. There are some open prairies there, but he does not include those in these little glades. He thinks the most of these open prairis were taken before the grant was given in there,—most of those big, open prairies. Titles to those had passed before the grant took effect.

Whereupon W. T. HOUSTON, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is forty-seven years old, lives in Section 20, township 34 South, Range 1 West, Trail precinct, Jackson County, Oregon, on a farm, and has resided in Jackson County all his life. He was born in Medford, Oregon, and has lived about eighteen years on his homestead. He took his homestead of one hundred and sixty acres about eighteen years ago, and received a patent about seven years ago. He has a family of eight children. He has twelve or fifteen acres of land under cultivation on his homestead. It was brush land when he first took it, some oak timber on it, and he had to clear all that he has in cultivation in order to render it tillable. He has principally supported his family and himself from his homestead since he took it up. He raises corn, wheat, oats, any kind of small grain, potatoes, beans, cabbage, anything most of every kind, and it is average land for these purposes. He raises apples, peaches and pears. He has been engaged in the farming business all his life; was raised on a farm, and his father was a farmer in Jackson county and has a homestead in township 35 where witness was raised until he was twenty-one and was married. His father's homestead was one hundred and sixty acres, and he had five children. What is not in cultivation of the homestead of witness, he has fenced and keeps goats and a few cattle, he has only twenty goats. He uses that land for grazing. It is cheaper than grubbing for goats to kill the brush. Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, he is near Rogue River in section 20, township 34 south, range 1 west. He was raised at Beagle post-office,—his father owned the place where that post-office is, in section 12, township 35 south, range 2 west. He is pretty well acquainted in township 35 south, range 2 west. From there he moved to township 34 south, range 1 west, and has lived there ever since. He knows pretty well the railroad sections in township 35, range 2 west, and township 34, range 1 west, and has a pretty fair knowledge of the country about twelve miles north and south of there, about five miles from Rogue River, north or northwest, through the Meadows country. Asbestos is a postoffice in the Meadows country, in section 26, township 33 south, range 2 west. He is somewhat acquainted with that land extending from where he lives to that postoffice and some of it beyond the postoffice, and he is acquainted with the general character of the land in the area he has mentioned, and north of where he lives up to the divide, to Douglas County, up Trail Creek,—he has been through that country some and enough to gain a fairly good knowledge of the character of the land there. Where he lives and in township 35, the land is mostly without timber, with the exception of oak and a few pines. As one goes north up Trail Creek, it becomes more timbered. Up pretty near the Umpqua Divide, the timber is pretty heavy. The land that is not taken up and cleared, in township 34 south, range 1 west, is mostly brush, low brush with oak timber, and is about the same thing as his homestead.

Q. Now, Mr. Houston, in your opinion, how many of the 160-acre tracts, what per cent or proportion of the 160-acre tracts in this area that you have mentioned, described by contiguous forty-acre tracts, but not necessarily by legal subdivisions, would, in your opinion, be suitable for settlement purposes, that is, for a man to go on there, as you have done on your homestead, and make a home of it for the purpose of engaging in farming?

A. I should think that about probably half of the quarter sections something about like the one I have taken.

Q. About half of the quarter sections are?

A. Yes, about the same, worth about the same, that is considered as good as mine was when I took it up.

Q. That is in that township?

A. In that township.

Q. Well, how much plow land could they get on each one of these 160-acre tracts?

A. You could get at least fifty per cent of plow land if the brush was off in 21. That is right due east of me. And in 17, corners with me, and in 29, corners on the south, it would make, I should suppose, about 50 per cent; about half the land would pay to cultivate if the brush were off so you could plow.

Q. How many of the quarter sections would be suitable for settlement, would contain enough plow land that a man could support himself, in this township, leaving a comparison of your own homestead out of it.

A. Well, what I am acquainted with—of course, I don't know how many has been taken up; I don't know exactly how many railroad quarter sections there are in that township—but what I am acquainted with, why, I should think about three-quarters of those quarter sections would support a family, if he had means to clear enough land to commence on.

Q. Well, now, with this other area outside of the township that you are in there, what would you say as to a man's ability to go on 160 acres of that land, described as I have mentioned before, and engage in farming and make a living?

A. In township 35, it is just similar, about the same thing there is in 34. But north, towards the Umpqua divide from where I live, is a different country. It requires more clearing—there is more timber.

Q. How about the character of the soil?

A. It is just as good.

Q. And the conditions except for the clearing would be practically the same as in the other townships.

A. The land is just as good, if not better, if the timber were off.

Whereupon witness testified, that the failure of the railroad company to sell this land to actual settlers at $2.50 an acre in the community in which he lives has delayed settlement to an extent. If this land was on the market, there would be at least half of the quarter sections that there would be someone on if it was put on at a reasonable price,—say from $2.50 to $5.00 an acre. People would settle there as he has done on his homestead and make a home out of it. If it was government land, there would be more than half of the land settled up.

Whereupon, upon cross examination, witness testified, that his father's claim, by the road, is six miles away from his. The nearest postoffice or trading point of witness is Trail Creek. Trail Creek has a couple of stores and a postoffice. There has been a postoffice and small store at Trail Creek ever since he lived there, about eighteen or twenty years. He is now living on his homestead, but his father sold his homestead a few years ago. The homestead of witness is in Trail Creek precinct, on a branch called Long Branch, about five miles south down the river. Trail Creek is marked on Defendants' Exhibit 259, Stewart Creek, but it has always been called Trail Creek, and it empties into Rogue River, about a half a mile below his homestead. He cannot tell how large Rogue River is, but he thinks it empties into the ocean and rises in the Cascade mountains north and east of him. He has been living on his homestead eighteen years, and went on the homestead when he was twenty-nine years old. At the time he went on his homestead, there could not have been possibly more than half an acre of it clear or open.

Q. Now, this brush that you have cleared up on your homestead—I think you said twelve to fifteen acres you had clear?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of brush was that?

A. Well, it is manzanita and chaparral, what it is called up there—I don't know what you would call it.

Whereupon witness testified, that the brush on the ground is pretty thick, but it only grows up about as high as one's head mostly. The chapparal don't make a very large root,—one can pull them with a good team when the ground is wet. The scattering oak grubs, they either have to grub or pull with a stump puller. These are what might be called foothill lands. He cannot tell the exact height above the river at that place.

There is a break near the river and he is up on what one might call bench land. The Rogue River at this point has a narrow bottom, probably, on an average along where he lives, about a couple of hundred yards back from the river. The valley known as the Rogue River Valley, in Jackson County, in which Central Point, Tolo and Medford are situated, lies south of him a considerable distance. Central Point is about eighteen miles distant. There is a valley opposite his place. The valley opens out down the river after one goes down. There are streams that empty into Rogue River, and of course there is flat counrty. The valley proper, the bottom of the Rogue River proper, does not open out to amount to anything in farm lands until one gets down to Grants Pass or below. The bottom near the river is comparatively narrow until one comes to Table Rock, which is about ten or eleven miles from his house. He is north of the Rogue River valley, and Table Rock lies just north of Rogue River and south of Table Rock is the Rogue River valley. There is no valley of any consequence west and northwest from Table Rock. The valley lies back, Sam's Valley country runs back a mile. There is the Modoc orchard in Sam's Valley country, and between the two Rocks there the bottom widens out after one gets to Table Rock, and there is a pretty large valley runs back plumb out between the Rocks, and it is all level back to Sam's Valley. He thinks that the valley where the Modoc orchards are, along the Rogue River, is just about a mile and a half wide back to the Rock. It is a large valley as measured by valleys out there, for bottom land. It is wider than anywhere north or northeast of there. The mountains at lower Table Rock close in near the river from that on, and next to Gold Hill, these mountains are pretty steep and abrupt, but he could not tell how high they are in there.

"Q. Those mountains are not much account, are they?

A. I cannot tell you that either. I have never tried."

I am not much acquainted from Sam's Valley down the river.

Q. Don't you know, Mr. Houston, that any man riding along the railroad there, following from Grants Pass up to Gold Hill and from Gold Hill on to Tolo, where you have Table Rock in view, and these mountains on either side in view, can see the Rocks from the train on an angle of nearly 45 degrees, most of that country? Isn't that true?

A. Some of those peaks run up.

Q. Well, it is nearly all peaks all the way down to Grants Pass, on both sides of the river, isn't it, excepting this little valley of about a mile wide in places?

A. I cannot tell you anything about the country below about Gold Hill.

Whereupon witness testified, that he had been on the train along there, and could see how it looks, and it looks pretty rough. It looks like there was a good deal of chaparral and manzanita on the ground. One cannot see the rocks everywhere. He hasn't taken notice along the road going down the Rogue River. He has been along the line a few times and to look at it, it looks rough and he has seen some rocks, some canyons. He could see a few rocks but he could not tell how many. To the best of his knowledge, he had six acres of cleared land on his homestead when he proved up at the end of five years. Before he proved up and during the time he lived on his homestead, in order to make a living he bought a small tract of about ten acres, and of course worked out more or less around different places. This ten acres that he bought was mostly cleared—there was six acres of it cleared when he bought it. He doesn't know whether this ten acres was part of a homestead or a donation. It was a water lot in section 21. It had been settled a long time before he came there. He cultivated that during the time he lived on his homestead, and when he worked out he did most everything, — sometimes plowed for other people, and did most anything for people that lived near there. He never sold any wheat but had sold corn. He could not tell how much corn he had raised in any one year on his twelve or fifteen acres on his homestead. He sold the corn to his neighbores for feed or seed corn, or something like that, and sold by the bushel. It would be hard to tell how many bushels he had sold for feed or seed to his neighbors during any one year, but he had sold not over, he supposes, fifty or sixty bushels in any one year. He could not tell how much corn he raised this year, but he did not raise any to sell this year. He had roasting ears for his family, and raised some corn as feed for his stock. He has twenty goats and about twenty-five head of cattle. His cattle run around, he does not keep them inside of a pasture, except the calves. The cattle run out on the range around close there. He had a few cattle that went back with other people's cattle who had larger bunches around the foot hills and up towards the head waters of the divide looking over towards Douglas county, and he occasionally rode back to get them, although he never had more than thirty or forty head of cattle at any one time. He sold some few cattle some years, and some years he did not. In the last few years, some of his neighbors had their cattle run back as far as the divide, about ten to twelve miles up to the head of Trail Creek from his place. When one gets to the head of Trail Creek, along near the divide, the timber is heavy in places. He would judge that most all the timber lands on the even sections up there was mostly taken, although he is not very well acquainted after one gets up near the divide. There are not very many settlers up near the divide, and he could not tell how much of these even sections had been taken up. He thinks there is probably a few kind of waste tracts of government land left up there where there is no land or timber. He has no map of the country and he could not tell exactly. He never cruised any timber nor applied to the company to purchase one of these quarter sections of good timber, up there, and no one ever asked him to sign an application to the company and offer the company $2.50 an acre, and he never knew about people doing that around in Jackson county, but he had heard of it before he came to court in this case. He usually sold about twenty-five to a couple of hundred sacks of potatoes raised on his place, and some small vegetables like that,—a few grapes and apples, different things. He thinks he could sell four hundred boxes at present. He has about two or three acres of an orchard. There are some Spitzenbergs and Newtown Pippins, a few Baldwins and Bellflowers. He would judge that the market for Yellow Newtons and Spitzenbergs first came up about eight years ago when they began to sell those two varieties or setting them out. He has not shipped any apples by railroad, nor sold any to dealers this year who did ship. He does not think he sold to anyone last year who shipped them out of the county. He never has sold any butter or milk to the creamery. He might occasionally sell some butter to his neighbors, some small amount, but not to amount to anything. He means when he says that about half of this land could be farmed, that after it has been cleared, after the brush and what trees there are, are off, it could be farmed. Further north and into the fir country where the timber is heavier, it would be more expensive to clear than where he is. Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, he is on the opposite side of the river from Eagle Point, six miles up the Rogue River. Beagle postoffice is where he was raised, and he is nearer the river than he was when he lived there. He is now in 34 east, and the postoffice is in township 35. There used to be a postoffice at Etna. He lived right near there about five miles south of Trail, which would bring him just about to the edge of the yellow field shown on Defendants' Exhibit 259, which shows the Rogue River valley country. These are what one would call oak and chaparral foot hills, most of that country. There is as much as about half or three-fourths of those quarter sections in there that are suitable for cultivation, that would pay to clear up, and some whole forties. He might mention a few whole forties that a man could clear, the whole forty and farm it all after clearing them of these oak grubs and chaparral. Chaparral and manzanita and oak brush is the principl growth in that country. There is occasionally a little pine. There is some rock on those foot hills around there. In places it is rocky, but he would say there is half or more that could be plowed without the rocks bothering to much extent. It would not all have to be cleared. There is an occasional one hundred and sixty that one might get. He might mention one or two where one could get fifteen or twenty acres on that is reasonably good land, without clearing at all. That country is mostly south. Trail Creek is five miles above him. It is called Stewart Creek on this map. They always call it Trail there. There are several settlers along in there on the even sections above Trail, but he could not give the quarter section or the exact numbers of their land. They live along the creek and back. Some of them live back along west of Trail. There are several who live back pretty well up on the hill. Some of them have been there about ever since, he has been there from fifteen to eighteen years. After one gets up Trail four or five miles, most of these even sections have pretty heavy timber in places. There is a little road work up there for the people who live there, and they work in different ways around, and most of them raise pretty good gardens and generally keep a little stock. They run their stock outside all through that country mostly. He thinks the reserve only charges them about thirty cents a head a season for pasturing their cattle. There is quite a lot of that land there in the reserve. He does not know that they have to pay the railroad people anything. It seems as though the country is partly settled where it belonged to the railroad, and they were never asked to pay. The stock roams all over that not fenced. The rule there is if you keep stock off the land you must fence it,—that is, one must fence against the stock. The majority of his hundred and sixty acres is fenced. He might have a few corners around,—he has never had it surveyed exactly.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified that, speaking of the quarters of waste land up in the northern part of the Umpqua divide, he means that it is rock, a good part of that country. There are some canyons and deep places where it is broken land, which one might say is worthless without it was just for pasturage. He is in section 20, and section 17 corners with him, and sections 29 and 21 lay right to the east of him in township 34 south, range 1 west, where his homestead is situated. He is pretty well acquainted, of course, with those three sections, and they are pretty much the same land as his, some probably a little better. He took his because he was right along the road and wanted a handy place to get at. This road he refers to runs from Medford to Crater Lake.

Whereupon WILLIAM BRENNER, witness called on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is fifty-three years old, resides at Scio, Linn County, Oregon, and has resided in Linn County fifty-three years. He is a farmer by occupation and owns a farm about three miles below Scio, and about ten acres in town, and raises on his farm wheat and oat hay, and raises fruit and vegetables at home, such as potatoes, cabbage, beans, onions, apples, pears, plums, cherries, and he thinks there are a couple of prune trees. He has been engaged in farming in Linn County about three, possibly four, years, and was in the livestock business before that time. He is acquainted generally with the farming and soil conditions in Linn County. He is personally acquainted with these unsold railroad lands in Linn County, township 10 south, range 1 east, township 10-2 east, township 11-2 east, and part of 11-3 east,—that is, the western part of 3 east. He is not personally acquainted in township 10 south, 3 east, but has passed through it and he thinks he is acquainted with the general formations of land there and the conditions of the soil in those townships. He would place the percentage of lands in these three townships that are susceptible to cultivation, that could be cultivated, at about 90 per cent straight through.

Q. What proportion of the 160-acre tracts in fortyacre legal subdivisions but not necessarily by quarter sections, in your opinion, could be made a home for a settler there, a man who wanted to settle there, and engage in agriculture, if he would go on the land and make a bona fide effort to clear the land of whatever might be on it, and farm it?

A. That varies quite a good deal. Some quarters are practically level, others are rocky.

Q. What would be your opinion as to the percentage of 160-acre tracts, take it straight through, that a man could select there, confining his selections to a section, not permitting him to go out of the section?

A. I cannot explain that exactly. Because some of it is too rough, and the rest of it, part of it would be say a rock cliff on it, and the rest of it you might say practically level, or in canyon shape like.

Q. Well, how many 160-acre tracts, in your opinion, stated by percentage, could a man clear off enough land and cultivate it to support himself and family?

A. Well, I am not posted on that. It would take a good big piece for me to make a living. Some people would make a living on a small tract.

Q. That would depend somewhat on the living that the man had?

A. Yes, sir, and how he worked his land, too.

Q. You testified that 90 per cent of this land would be susceptible to cultivation after it is cleared?

A. That is to the best of my knowledge.

Q. And the other ten per cent, now, what is that?

A. That is rock.

Q. That is waste land?

A. Yes, sir, it is rock.

Q. That is the land that you referred to when I asked you the question relating to the ability of a man to make a living on this land, settling on 160 acres.

A. This land cannot be cultivated at all where those rock are. It is impossible.

Whereupon witness testified, that there is some awfully good timber on this land, and some that is worthless. Take it in five, township 11, 2 east, take it in 8 and 9, there is nothing in that. It has been burned off, it is a big burn, there is nothing there. In 4 there is quite a rock cliff running through there. The timber does not get heavy until one gets farther back in these ranges. It is better after one gets back from the settlements a few miles, but it is pretty good to start in with. The Oregon & California Railroad Company retains a substantial part of its original grant in these townships and ranges, and he is informed that the Northern Pacific Railway Company has large holdings there.

Q. Isn't it a fact that several of these townships are owned practically altogether by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon & California Railroad Company?

A. I think the railway company owns all of 3, 11-3 east, and I think there are just two homesteaders, if I remember right, that have taken it as homesteads. I believe that is all in 3, township 11.

Whereupon witness testified, that he owns about a hundred and fifty acres on his farm, which he rents. The farm is situated near Scio in the Willamette Valley, and a part of it had a growth of timber on it, which has been cleared. There is other land in that vicinity that has been cleared and put under cultivation, and these lands that have been cleared produce good crops.

There was no cross-examination.

Whereupon J. W. HAYS, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is seventy years old, resides at Gold Hill, Jackson County, Oregon, and has lived in Jackson County thirty-five or forty years. He farmed continually there for about ten years, two miles west of Gold Hill in township 36 south, range 3 west, immediately west of Gold Hill two miles. It is just a mile from the center of town to the end of his line, straight through by line on the south side of the river. He raised everything on his farm that is generally raised on a farm, wheat, oats, barley, hogs, chickens and cattle. It takes all to make a farm. He raised potatoes, apples, peaches and corn. He has his place rented out. He is pretty well acquainted with farming conditions there and soils that produce, and reasonably well acquainted with lands that can be cultivated and crops that can be raised. Some of the land that he has farmed there was river bottom, sandy loam land, and some of it lays back off the river and is clay soil. The land that is up from the river bottom is called up-land, it is back up-land. It lays on a little creek, close to the creek, and is rolling, not flat, land. It is inclined to be rolling. Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, he notices Gold Hill on the map and he has been all over this country in through 35 south time and time again. He couldn't name the places that he has been over because he ran all over the hills prospecting, that is where he ran when he was doing nothing else. He ran all over the hills, but he could not name the sections. He was at Wimer, all through that land and through that country, all through west of Wimer. Pointing to 35 south, range 4 west, where Wimer is situated, and 35 south, range 3 west, where Sardine Creek is, the lower end of this creek is in township 36, 3 west, where it empties into the Rogue River. The upper end of this Sardine Creek is in 35 south, range 3 west, and he is, generally speaking, acquainted with the lands in that township and in township 36 south. Wimer is in township 35 south, range 4 west and he is generally acquainted with that and with the township south of that, 36-4 west, where Woodville is situated, just about the center of township 36 south, range 4 west, he is fairly well acquainted with that. Gold Hill is in township 36 south, 3 west, and he is acquainted with the railroad lands in that township and in township 37 south, 3 west, which is directly south of Gold Hill, and he is pretty well acquainted with portions of that—the north part of it. He is acquainted with and has been through the vicinity of Draper, which is in 37 south, range 4 west, and has been over the lands in that township. He has not been recently over the lands in Applegate country,—not for several years, but he has been there sufficiently to acquaint himself with a knowledge of the country and the soil and the lay of the land there. He was raised in Applegate, and he was twenty-four years in the Applegate country in Josephine county. Applegate is a postoffice, has a little store, and is in township 38 south, range 4 west. He has been in there, principally along on the river, but has never been back on the side of the mountain. He has been on the main road. There is a creek in 38 south, 3 west, on the main road just before one gets to Jacksonville. He is not very well acquainted through where Ruch is, and he cannot give an intelligent view of the land north of township 35. He knows the lands on Sardine Creek, but he is not acquainted farther north in Jackson county than township 35. West of Beagle, he is very well acquainted, running up into township 34 south, range 2 west, and in 3 west. He has been over in 2 west in the Beagle country. He has been over these lands for different purposes. He has prospected all through that Sardine country, has been over every acre of it. For several years he spent his odd time prospecting in through there, also on the south side in the Gall Creek and Foote Creek region in there, which is about five or six miles from Gold Hill,—probably not that far by lines but in traveling the way they go. He has been over the land other than when he had prospected. He had stock in there. Years ago he had stock which ran in on both Sardine and Gall's Creek. He had cattle and horses in there. He has been over and is acquainted with the railroad lands in the township in which Gold Hill is situated, 36 south, 3 west, and the land is generally clay soil, with some rocks on it, scattering rocks, covered with brush and scrub timber. From 35 per cent to 40 per cent of that land, from his observation from seeing land like that, that has been worked through the country there the last few years, could be made susceptible to cultivation. They grow most everything on it, when a practical farmer gets to work on it. The other lands that he has mentioned as being acquainted with, compare about the same with the railroad lands in the township in which Gold Hill is situated, take it through, conditions would be about the same.

Q. What is your opinion as to the ability of a man to take 160 acres of this railroad land and make a home of it, use it for farming purposes?

A. Well, that is a question of the ability of the man. It depends on the ability of the man in regard to that. If he is a practical man, why, he could make a living, and there are some men that couldn't make a living on 160 acres of good land.

Q. His ability and industry would have something to do with that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, take a man, an industrious farmer, what would you say as to his ability to make a living?

A. Yes, he could utilize it by raising what stuff is there, and having his chickens and cow and hogs with him, and that all counts in with practical farming with me. I couldn't farm unless I had cattle and some cows and pigs and chickens to help make the farm pay, to use right at home to feed up your waste.

Q. What has been the effect, Mr. Hays, of the railroad company's failure to comply with the conditions of this grant and sell the land to actual settlers at $2.50 an acre in 160-acre tracts—what has been the effect in that community where you have resided for 35 or 40 years?

A. Well, it keeps the settlement down so that it would be sparsely settled, you know, is the effect, because I know of persons that wanted to buy that and couldn't buy that, wanted to settle and had to go away.

Q. Are lands of similar character farmed there and used as homes by farmers?

A. Yes.

Whereupon, upon cross-examination, witness testified, that his place was a part of the Jacob Gall donation land claim, and is at the mouth of Gall's Creek, and is on the south side of the Rogue River, and originally consisted of three hundred and twenty acres. There are about sixty or seventy acres of it bottom land. The balance of the land is clay soil and runs back up Gall's Creek, on both sides of it.

Q. Have you any hills on your place, any of that rough hill country on your land?

A. Nothing but benches, old bench land. It is not hill, because this was taken in an early day.

Q. They took it just the way they wanted it?

A. Took it the way they wanted it, yes.

Q. Under the donation act they could take it in any shape they please?

A. Yes, sir, at the time they took it, they could have taken it that way.

Whereupon witness testified, that in prospecting over these townships, he was sticking holes and prospecting for gold. He does not consider that country around Gold Hill, all through there, a pocket mining country. It is a mining country. He has prospected these lands for minerals of some kind. He located several mines and has taken out some money. Then he has located some mines and let them go back. He didn't have money enough to develop them. He never developed a mine himself. He means when he says that he prospected and took out some money, that he took out some specimens of rock and had it milled. There was a mill there in the country to mill it with, part of the time, he had it milled at the Sardine mill and some at the Gold Hill mill. There is a quartz mill at Gold Hill. The valley between Gold Hill and Grants Pass, along the Rogue River, is a narrow valley along both sides of the river. In some places, the hills back of Gold Hill and on either side of the Rogue River go up very abrupt right at the river and then they break back. The greatest elevation is next to the river, and then they break off back, it is more accessible to travel. Some places one cannot get straight up from the river. He does not consider the timber on these railroad lands in these townships that he has been over merchantable timber. It is scrubby pine, oak and fir. There are spots of rocks on some of these quarter sections and on the government land, just the same as on the other, the whole country is more or less spotted. There is some government land in there adjoining his place, it is too steep to be taken up and there is no timber on it worth taking. There are some of these railroad lands—some of these railroad quarters in that same condition—that is, the railroad land is spotted. Where the peaks run up abruptly it may be a railroad or it may be a government forty or eighty right on the top of one of these back-bone or ridges that run through there. The lands along the creek are best as a rule—really a little the best for certain purposes, and you really get more level land along these creeks as a rule. These farmers that live back on these farms back of Gold Hill have real farms. Some of them have one hundred to a hundred and fifty acres in cultivation back in these hills. There are some right up on Sardine Creek there, just up on the high benches away from the creek, not right immediately on the creek, they come down to the creek, but the land they cultivate is back on a high bench.

Q. Sams Valley is a pretty good farming country, isn't it?

A. Right in Sams Valley, yes, sir.

Q. And the Evans creek country is pretty good too?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are all little tributary streams that run into the Rogue River?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, don't you know, Mr. Hays, that this railroad land that you have been over until about seven years ago was on the market at $2.50 an acre, nearly all of it, especially that that was prospected over for mineral purposes?

A. No, sir, I don't know it.

Q. Don't you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever apply to purchase any of that land that you prospected over?

A. I had a partner that applied for a piece on Foote creek that they wouldn't sell it to him.

Whereupon witness testified, that his partner wanted one hundred and twenty acres for orchard land; this was about eight or ten years ago. He does not know that he offered to pay anything, but the company refused to sell it to him, as his partner reported to him. They were partners and it was a business transaction, but he did not see the communication from the company. He applied himself, personally, to purchase only one little piece. There was a little seven acre tract lying between his place and the river—a little fraction of seven acres—which was sandy loam land, mostly sand, and was on the river bottom. He did not buy it, but applied to purchase it about twelve years ago. The Company refused to sell it to him on account of the water front, or something of that kind. He paid but little attention to it because it was a small fraction. That piece of land where it lays is worth one hundred dollars an acre because it is water front. He wanted it because it joined right on to his land and connected him with the river and he could use this land and would join his donation land claim. He owned stock which roamed back five or six miles from his place on Gall's Creek, for two years, which pastured all over the land that was unenclosed, including the railroad land and even sections just the same. If he had stock now, they could not do that. They would have to have a different system now because they would have to eat the brush which has grown in there. It has been protected and has crowded the grass out and many stock could not live in there, but it could still be used for stock to a certain extent. The brush has grown up on this land and it was formerly burned off. The farmers and stock men used to burn the brush out all they could to keep it down so they would get good pasturage. They did not kill any timber there. The stock men would burn off this land and clear off the under brush and in that way would get fairly good grazing and free pasture. He owned that place down below and made about as much on the ranch as he did on the stock. These small ranchers that had homesteads away back all had to have some stock, and that was a part of the proposition to make a living and was a part of the problem with him. They had to have stock to range out to make their living.

Whereupon witness, upon redirect examination, testified that the upland and land away from the stream higher up is good for fruit raising, as far as he has seen it tried, fruit does first rate. Fruit raising had been tried on these hill lands and he has seen fruit growing.

Q. What effect, if any, has the withdrawal of these lands from sale and the failure to sell to actual settlers—what effect if any has that on the schools and the ability of people to obtain schools for their children?

A. Why, their being isolated, they cannot have the facilities of schools as they can where it is thickly settled, on account of those alternate sections laying around, a man being on one and the other not being settled, I would judge.

Q. Mr. Hays, please describe if you can the lands as they have been settled up in this country; that is, what lands were taken first and what lands have been taken up gradually—the character of them.

A. The first locations that were made there were in the openest places, in the low land; and then as they go ahead they keep going up, working higher up in the hills, working up on the upper land, gradually going up as it passes along. Now, I have noticed the last few years that where there have been roads opened out they have settled all along these roads and cultivated all kinds of stuff—apples, peaches and all sorts of stuff right on this road; that it was settled up.

Q. The first land was taken up under the donation law?

A. Under the donation law, yes. The next was homestead and pre-emption.

Q. Have the settlements advanced into the timbered sections as years have passed?

A. Yes, they are going that way. They keep going and growing that way all the time.

Q. That is, the first settlers took the lands that were the easiest cleared, and the men who came later had to take lands that they would have to devote more work to putting in a state for cultivation?

A. Yes.

Whereupon J. W. KELSOE, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he is twenty-eight years old, and resides five miles from Derby, in Jackson county, Oregon. Derby has a post-office and a little store. He is a rancher and stock raiser and lives on his homestead there, which he has had about two years—a little over two years, and which consists of one hundred and sixty acres and is described as the northwest quarter of section 2, township 34 south, range 1 east of Willamette Meridian. He has lived in Jackson county about twenty-eight years, practically all his life. He has not had a great deal of experience in farming for himself but did quite a little farming for wages and has worked on a farm at intervals, half of the time for himself, the other half for other people—since he started to work on a farm when he was fourteen. He is acquainted with the soils, climatic conditions and farming business in Jackson county. Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, his homestead is located in township 34 south, range 1 east, and the town of Derby is marked on this map near the corners of sections 14 and 15, 22 and 23. He is acquainted from Derby to Big Butte, taking two or three miles on the northeast of Big Butte and along Big Butte from the mouth of it, in around Butte Falls and also a strip on this side of Big Butte. He is acquainted with the lands five miles east of Derby and about five miles north of Derby. He is not acquainted northwest of the town of Trail, excepting to the Rogue River and a very little south of Derby, just along the road, there is a road that runs in there and he has been across it in a couple of miles. He is acquainted very little on the west of Derby. He has worked farming in sections 14, 2 and 3, and 23, in township 34 south, range 1 east, where they raise berries, hay, fruit, apples, wheat and oats. Wheat and oats are the main crops, it is not threshed, it is grain hay, used as hay. They raise corn and vegetables in these places where he has worked, such as potatoes, cabbage, carrots, rutabagas, and turnips. There are settlers in that township besides himself. The even numbered sections are nearly all settled up. There are quite a few of the odd numbered sections which are settled, pieces out of them are settled. The remaining unsold railroad lands in that area with which he is acquainted will average about with the even sections and is about the same kind of land. The unsold lands of the company, the lands that have not been settled upon, that have not been purchased from the railroad company, would average approximately half that could be cultivated and crops raised on them—that is, 50 per cent of that land could be cultivated, and he thinks that 50 per cent or half of a one hundred sixty acre tract would be sufficient for a man who is an actual settler to maintain himself and family on. The other half of the land would be suitable for pasture for sheep, goats, hogs.

Q. What effect, Mr. Kelsoe, has the failure of the railroad company to comply with the conditions of the grant and sell this land to actual settlers at $2.50 an acre, in tracts of 160 acres, had upon the development of the country that you are acquainted with there.

A. It has been a detriment in roads and schools is the main thing.

Q. Has it retarded settlement?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon, upon cross-examination, witness testified, that his homestead is the northwest quarter of section 2, township 34 south, range 1 east, about five miles northeast from Derby, which is not a town but has a postoffice and a little store, but he could not tell how long it had been a postoffice and little store. He has resided there seven years and it was a postoffice when he went there and there has been a store built there. The store was erected about three years ago. Leeds is a farmhouse and postoffice close to the Rogue River, about twenty miles up Rogue River from Eagle Point, something like that. At Trail there is a postoffice and little store combined, and there was a livery stable and kind of hotel there, he thinks. He is not so well acquainted at Trail, although he has been there. Derby is on the Big Butte and Eagle Point on Little Butte. The section in which his homestead is located, is not on the head of any stream or creek and there is no stream or creek running through that section. His homestead is not timber land but is covered with brush and timber. What he means by timber is, that it is not covered with saw timber—it is wood timber. He would term wood timber oak and scrub timber. He has about a quarter of an acre cleared on his homestead. He lives on his homestead with his wife. He has no fence on his homestead. Moved there a little over two years ago and lived there continuously, excepting the time that he was off. There is a piece of land in section 23 which he spoke about farming, and he has been at his father's place during the time he was putting that in. His father's place is in section 14, about two and a half miles from his place. Most of the time he took his wife with him when he was farming that place. There is a house, barn, sheep corral and well on his homestead. His house is sixteen by twenty-four with a four foot addition built on one side, and then cut through so that the four foot addition is all under one roof, and he built a bedroom. It is a three room house, sawed material, which he obtained from the mill that used to be on the top of the mountain. That is a timbered country above where he is. He did not take a timber quarter for the simple reason that the timber was higher up than he wanted to go. The Government timber was about all owned at the time that he had taken his homestead—the quarter sections that had been public land had nearly all been taken, it was not occupied but was held by owners as timber claims. Most of them entered this under the timber and stone act. Some of it had been homesteaded but the largest part of that country was entered under the timber and stone act. He supposes they took it for the timber, as it is pretty fair timber. These homestead people up there who took timber lands did not, to his knowledge, sell out when they got title. He knew of no abandoned homestead cabins up there in that best timber, where the cabin has gone to wreck and the land has passed to timber companies or timber investors, except that he now recalls two. He recalls two of these abandoned cabins and does not recollect more than the two that he knows have been abandoned. He could not say how many settlers there are in township 34 south, range 1 east, outside of the postoffice and the people who live at and run the postoffice. It is what he would term a pretty thickly settled country for a mountain township. Right around in that country, most of the mountain townships have many people in them and have good schools. There are two schools that he knows of in that township, one of them has something like ten or twelve children and the other one there had eight on the list. They have six months in their school year, supported by a two mill tax last year. He couldn't tell if the tax is levied on all the land in the school district as he is not posted in school laws enough to know. He does not pay any taxes on his land because it is a homestead, but everyone who has a title has to pay taxes and he supposes the railroad is included. They have good summer roads in that township, but mud in the winter. Some places are worse than others. Some places in that country would mire a saddle blanket. He has been through the Willamette Valley, up about Eugene, in the winter time with pack horses and the roads are very bad. He has counted thirteen settlers that he knows of in that township where his homestead is situated. There are families in there with whom he is not acquainted. Three of them he would say live on the stream of Big Butte, and three at the postoffice and store. He does not know of any forest rangers of the United States living in there, but knows that some of these forest rangers do live out towards the forest reserve. He has run stock on the outside range up towards the mountains east of him, and it is quite a common way to turn the stock loose and let them go in the summer months. There are quite a few cattle ranged up in that country that belong to these ranchers and others down in the valley farther. There are not so many north of him in the summer that would get to the Rogue River, but there are some northeast of him and about something like three hundred to five hundred head of cattle range in there that really don't belong there. The main cattle man in that country is Nichols. Most of these ranchers that he speaks of in this township and others, have a few head of cattle that they turn loose on the summer range. To make a living he has sheep, wool, hogs and cattle to sell. He sold twenty mutton sheep before he came down to Portland. His sheep range along the Big Butte on the commons. He got a boy from the Aid Society in Portland who generally goes out and brings his sheep in at nights and looks through them once or twice a day. He has never sold any beef cattle. He bought a bunch of cattle, and pretty nearly all the cattle he has sold have been yearlings. He sold out the cattle business. He sells his hogs at Central Point and Medford. Medford is about thirty miles away and Central Point twenty-five miles, and Eagle Point fourteen miles. Eagle Point is where he has always hauled his stock from. He generally rounded up at his father's place. The place of witness is sixteen miles and a half from Eagle Point, which is quite a little trading point on the Pacific & Eastern Railroad, which has been there for about two years. Eagle Point is on Little Butte, just before it empties into the Rogue River, and he expects Eagle Point had been settled before he was born. Eagle Point is a place of something like one hundred fifty to two hundred inhabitants. He does not know whether donation land claims were taken around Eagle Point, that was before his time, when he came there that country was settled up.

Q. You say fifty per cent of these lands could be cultivated. You mean if the brush or whatever there is was cleared? You mean the soil is good enough and the ground is sufficiently level that it could be cultivated?

A. No, not necessarily. It is level enough to cultivate, I think, yes. I think it would have fifty per cent, that much, now.

Q. You mean if the brush was cleared?

A. Yes, sure.

Whereupon witness testified, that he cleared a quarter of an acre last year to see what it would do, after the farming season was over. They told him the land was too dry to raise anything. He cleared that for an experiment and raised wheat. He let the stock eat it. He put it in and let it come to a head to see what it would raise. He has not raised any vegetables. He has not lived on the place in there he was farming near his father's place. His father was on his farm and what time he was farming he was at his father's place. Most of the time during the two years he had been back and forth to his homestead. It was not his intention merely to comply with the law by being on the place only every six months and doing a little improvement. His stuff had all been at his home and it had been his home when he was not at work. He was away from home most of the time at work. He did not go away from home necessarily to make a living. He expects he could have made as good a living, probably better, if he had stayed at home—he don't know why he did not stay at home, except that he needed the crops that he was raising on this other place. He didn't have his place cleared and he would have to make something while he was getting ready to improve his place. He has one child of his own, and also a little boy from the Aid Society. The boy goes to school but his girl is not old enough to go. His family is not at present on the homestead. They came to Central Point with him when he came down to Portland as witness in this case and his wife is there waiting for him, but they have not moved away. He did not take a timber quarter up there because he was not looking for timber. He wanted the land for a home. He does not know that he could or could not have gotten a good timber quarter if he had wanted to, he never posted himself on the timber back there, he never paid any attention to it, never looked to see whether any of these railroad quarters had good timber on them—never paid much attention to timber at that time.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that this homestead of his, contains no timber of any value except for fuel, that is about all. There is some timber that would do for fencing and probably little improvements. It would not pay him to mill it, but if he had a mill of his own, it would probably pay him to cut it for fence and improvements. He has forty-one head of goats that have ranged most of the time since he has had them on railroad section 3 out on Butte. He does not range them on his homestead, only turns them loose and watches them awhile and drives them back. He has a little piece fenced in on the railroad land and he keeps them confined. Goats are a great deal of assistance in cleaning off the land, by eating the brush out, killing the brush off, opening it up on the brush land. His purpose when he took this homestead was to make a home out of it and that is what he intends to do with it. There is a spring above the house about a quarter of a mile that he intends, as soon as he can, to pipe down there to irrigate his garden and berry patch. There is a man living right by the side of him, and he and this man had been talking about going in together and building a ditch for about six miles out of Clear Creek, and they went over and surveyed the ditch but they haven't thoroughly decided whether they will do it or not. He intends to clear up enough of his land so that he can make a living from it. Oak timber is hard to clear and it will be slow to clear, and he intends to clear it as fast as he can. The character of the land his father lives on, is mostly black, sticky and brush, and the character of the land is good as to its productiveness. He raised on his father's place, garden and vegetables and hay. The main crop is hay, about all. They just raise garden enough for themselves and what hay they need. He would think that the less schools they would have in that section, the less the railroad land would be taxed—if the railroad pays the taxes levied on its land. The wheat that he raised on his land grew good. He measured it and it was about four feet high. It headed out good heads four inches in length and the grains seemed to be full.

Whereupon, upon recross examination, witness testified, that this grain he raised was on that quarter of an acre. He did not cut it at all but turned the horses in and let them pasture it off. It was just a little patch, in a circle—and it would be hard to guess at the size of it, he estimated it as something like a quarter of an acre. It was below his barn. The buildings and barn were on the same forty acres with the clearing. He has this clearing in one place and his buildings in another place. It is about a hundred and fifty yards from his house down to the clearing, he did not want to farm the land right in his yard, he wanted to put that into berries or something, in fact he had set it in berries. He has nothing fenced excepting that little piece, and that only with a brush fence, he has a little wire fence around his house, the yard is fenced in around the house. The quarter of an acre that is cleared is fenced with brush fence. He pulled the brush off the trees and threw them around for a fence and sowed this wheat in there to see whether it would produce. He had been told it was too dry there to produce.

Whereupon W. A. BOGARD, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is twenty-six years old, resides at Roseburg, Douglas County, Oregon, and was born in that county in what is known as Sutherland Valley, on a farm. He lived on a farm with his father until he was sixteen years old and he has been on a farm off and on since, his father resides on a farm there now. He has not farmed any since that time—that is, to go out in the fields and actually farm, but he has been out there every month on the farm and he thinks he is acquainted with farming and farming conditions generally in Douglas County. His father first had a forty-acre homestead there, and then afterwards bought a hundred and sixty acres adjoining that. The homestead of his father was about 50 per cent of it agricultural land, may be more, something like about twenty-five acres of the forty he cultivated. Of the hundred and sixty that he bought later on while he was there with him, he would guess that his father had something like about forty acres that he cultivated and could have cultivated more. The balance was good pasture land and was a sandy soil, some of it was rolling. It was all good pasture land and more of it could have been farmed. Part of it was timber and slashed off. In fact, the entire forty that his father homesteaded was all timber and that was slashed, and then something like forty acres of the hundred and sixty was slashed. Clearing was required for that place, and his father certainly made a living from the land that he farmed. His father had a family of five children. The present business of witness is that of a timber cruiser and he has been engaged in that occupation during the last seven years—that is in the timber business. He milled one year, 1907, and he has been in the business for seven years. He has worked pretty much over Douglas County. There are some parts of Douglas County with which he is not so well acquainted, but along west of the railroad and some of the northern part of Jackson County, he has been over considerably. In his business, he located some homesteads, and he is in the real estate business at the present time. As a timber cruiser, a man generally examines the timber lands and the soil, and the possibilities of taking the timber off, and what the land would be fit for when the timber is removed, and the expense of clearing also. He takes notice of all these facts in cruising lands, and would make a thorough examination of the land as well as the cruising and the possibilities. Referring to Defendant's Exhibit 259, he can give the townships and ranges in which are the unsold portions of the railroad lands with which he is acquainted and over which he has been. Starting in at township 22-6 south, ranges 7, 8 and 9 west, he has been over that a great many times. In fact, over the entire Smith River country. That is where he learned his business, with the Smith-Powers Company. He was going to include that down to township 25, which is practically the same, and then the ranges beginning at range 5 and running to range 9 west, all west. He is not acquainted east of the meridian. Beginning at township 26-2, and all down the line, all the way down the line till one gets down to township 28, he is acquainted, but he is not much acquainted in township 29. Township 26-3 is the farthest north. He has been very little through township 28-4 west, but he has been in township 28 south of ranges 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 west, through that country a good many times. In fact, through the entire country there. He does not know but what he is as well acquainted with one part of it as with another, excepting a few points, as he stated, in township 29-2 and in down to township 32 he is not so well acquainted. The farthest north of these lands with which he is acquainted is about township 22. He has been over a good portion of that township a great many times, beginning at ranges 4 to 9 west.

Q. Well, now, what is the character of that land as to its agricultural possibilities, possibilities of settlers going in there on 160 acres of land, and settling there, and making a living on the lands, as to the railroad lands indicated there on the map by the green?

A. In my experience and examination of the land I find about 35 per cent of it would be agricultural land, and I judge 95 per cent would be agricultural and grazing lands.

Whereupon witness testified, that some of the timber on that land is pretty good timber, and part of it is not. Ranges 8 and 9 in there are very good timber. The timber varies, it is not all solid all over. There is not a township in there that is solid timber all over. His estimate is based upon the clearing of the land, and all his estimates are based upon putting the land in cultivation. There are some places where a man could get some land that is clear. Of course, further back and in the mountains there would be less. There are townships there with a good many sections that the land could be cleared very easily, and some of it is prairie land, that is on railroad lands. What scattering land there is, in townships 28 and 29, quite a bit of that is open land. He is acquainted in township 23 from ranges 4 to 9 west, and they are practically the same as those he has described in township 22; very little difference in township 23, if anything, a little better—more of the land is open, especially ranges 8 and 9, that is very good land and the timber is about the same, very little difference in general. He is acquainted in township 24 from range 2 to 9 or 10 west, and the agricultural possibilities of the railroad sections are about the same, as those described in reference to townships 22 and 23, he would think they were not quite as good in a portion of it—very little difference. He does not know but what they are about the same there in township 24—very little difference. He is acquainted in township 25 south, ranges 2 to 9 or 10 west, and a portion of these railroad sections, compared with the others, is better. Take it as a whole, they would average about the same, but he would state that township 25, range 8, is tolerably rough—that is, township 25 is rougher, but there is a burn and not much timber in there. It is a large burn, one of the largest burned areas in that district is in that township. That burn covers three or four sections, at least, in one solid burn, and then there is a strip of timber and other burned areas on and on all through the township—half of it is burned. He is acquainted with the railroad lands in township 26, running from ranges 3 west to ranges 10 or 11, and it is about the same as the railroad land and other outstanding land—practically about the same as the other. He is acquainted in township 27, beginning with range 3 to range 10, and the agricultural possibilities of those lands are very good. The township in ranges 3 and 4 is very good land. Then they are more abrupt towards the coast and more timber. The soil is good, most all the land the soil is practically good on that, only it is not so level. This territory consists of a good many areas of bench lands and flats in 1 and 2 west. He is well acquainted in township 28 south, beginning with range 4 west, that is in the wagon road grant, and there is very little railroad land in that excepting in ranges 4 and 5. The railroad land in that township is very good—that is all good land in there and he thinks there is more agricultural land and less timber land as compared with these other lands he has mentioned—quite a portion of the railroad land in township 28, range 5, is better land. There is a good deal of prairie land. This is about eleven or twelve miles from Roseburg, which is a city of about 6000 population. He is acquainted with the railroad lands in township 29-4 to ranges 13 or 14. A part of these lands are very good for agricultural possibilities. The townships over near the coast, in ranges 11 and 12, are better than the balance. The other lands are about in proportion with the lands in Douglas County. He does not know whether ranges 11 and 12, township 29, are outside of the grant. About 65 per cent to 70 per cent of ranges 11 and 12, township 29, could be cultivated and the balance would be good grazing land. It is all good soil in there, low rolling hills. He is acquainted with township 30, range 4 to range 13, of these railroad lands marked in green on Defendants' Exhibit 259. There is a variation in these townships, at the coast. There is very little difference in all of that, that is east of the railroad, that is practically the same—the water sheds and the land—excepting township 27, which is better than the balance of it. From township 30 south, ranges 11, 12 and 13 west, he does not know whether the grant takes in that or not. that is a good deal like the townships he has described above. There would be 65 per cent or 70 per cent of it good grazing or could be cultivated. The land in ranges 11 and 12 west is rolling land, low hills, and benches and flats, none of it is steep or rough to speak of, and does not rise like some of the other land. Beginning with township 31, ranges 5 to 13 west, he would like to class that with the balance of it. Beginning with range 10 to 13, it would be about 65 per cent agricultural land in township 31. He is acquainted with township 32, ranges 4 to 9 west, inclusive, and 30 per cent of these lands could be cultivated. He is acquainted with township 33, ranges 4 to 7, inclusive, and 30 per cent of these lands could be cultivated. He is acquainted with township 34, ranges 5, 6 and 7 west, and the railroad lands in that township and those ranges are pretty fair, the most of it—perhaps 45 per cent of it would be agricultural land. He is acquainted with township 35 south, ranges 5, 6 and 7 west, and he does not believe they are quite as good as the lands in township 34 south, ranges 5, 6 and 7 west. Township 35 south, range 7 west, is pretty fair, there is about 35 per cent could be cultivated. He has been through the other ranges in this township from time to time, but would not care to pick them up because there are others there that he knows better. He is acquainted with the other townships south of there, but not very much, he has been through there a great many times but is not as well acquainted with them as he is with others, he has been through there generally and has cruised in there a good many times, but these townships here and there, and pieces here and there—he has made a trip on Evans Creek in township 34 a good many times, but then not generally speaking of the country. He is not particularly acquainted with the character of the lands in ranges 1 west to 4 west, in the township that he stated he was acquainted. He has been through them, but then these that he has named he has been over a great many times and he would not care to pick up those he is not particularly acquainted with. These percentages, in his estimate, would hold good if the lands were divided into one hundred and sixty acre tracts by contiguous forty-acre subdivisions, and in his opinion that much land would be sufficient to support a man and his family, taking this land up for farming purposes. If one gets twenty acres of agricultural land on one hundred and sixty and the balance is any good at all, he can support a family.

Q. What would you say as to the availability of these lands in their present condition for settlement in 160-acre tracts, by actual settlers, for the purpose of going on the land and making a home there, farming, going into the farming business?

A. Why, I think they would be all right. I don't see any reason why a settler could not obtain a home and maintain his family there.

Q. I am speaking now, Mr. Bogard, in their present condition. Have settlers gone onto lands similar to this and cleared it up and made farms out of it?

A. Yes, sir; certainly. Certainly, practically everything was taken.

Q. Has that been of frequent occurrence or rare?

A. No, very frequent. There are a great many people through every day looking for such land.

Q. For what purpose?

A. For unimproved land or public land, for small homes. What I mean is, men with little means.

Q. Mr. Bogard, are there many people who have gone onto lands that contain timber in this area that you are acquainted with, cleared up the lands and made farms of them—homes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In small tracts, 160 acres, or, as your father did, on forty acres?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon witness testified, that in his work as a timber cruiser, he ran the lines and became familiar with the various parcels of land. He did a good deal of that work for different people. He has come across settlers in the hills there or on the benches, and in these even numbered sections near the railroad lands, he found them settled all over the country. These lands are adapted to fruit raising and he knows they are good for that purpose because he has seen fruit growing on similar lands. He found on these or similar lands, grains of all kinds and vegetables.

Q. Mr. Bogard, in your opinion what has been the effect of the railroad company's failure to sell the lands in this grant in tracts of 160-acres to actual settlers at $2.50 an acre, in compliance with the conditions of the grant.

A. Well, it has been a detriment to the country. It has kept out schools and roads, kept out business in the towns, owing to the fact that they don't get the market for produce that might be grown on this similar land. It has held the country back in every way that settlement could, or non-settlement.

Q. That is brought about by keeping out settlers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Bogard, from your knowledge of this country, please state how the development has taken place as to the lands that have been first taken up by the people who went in there some years ago, and as to the lands that have gradually come under cultivation and settlement.

A. Well, of course all I know about the land that was taken up is what I get from the records, some of it, before my time; but first the donation claims, and they followed along the river, on the bottom land, or along the military wagon road. That was one view possibly in locating there. And then came the homesteaders, pre-emptions, and they worked on from time to time until they have taken all the public lands.

Whereupon witness testified, that the bench land or hill land there has been put into cultivation or clearing, homes are built all through the mountains. The first lands taken were those that were easiest put under cultivation. The settlements and cultivation have gradually extended further out from the streams and up into the hills and into the more timbered sections, and have extended clear through, from the river to the coast. There has been an increase in the demand for settlement lands by people who are seeking homes to engage in the farming business. There has been a great demand for lands and the demand has increased in recent years, in the last six years. He knows of some people that have attempted to buy this railroad land, and knows of settlers that are on it now and are making a home on it.

Whereupon, upon cross-examination, witness testified, that his father's homestead is in section 12, township 25 south, range 5 west, about sixteen or seventeen miles from Roseburg north, and five miles from Oakland southeast, and about five miles from the railroad. His father is not residing there now, having sold the place about five years ago. He had 200 acres of which 160 acres was a homestead. He cannot tell how long ago it was taken, but it was taken before they settled in there, a good while ago. He is twenty-six years old past, and this homestead must have been taken in the early settlement of the country. It was taken, he would say, thirty years ago. There are quite a good many donation land claims along the rivers in Douglas County. Roseburg is the county seat of Douglas County and is a town of about 6000 inhabitants, situated on the railroad, and the country around Oakland is an old settled country. His father did not take up a claim under the timber and stone act, but witness got a quarter section under the timber and stone act in Curry County in section 23, township 35, range 14 west, which he took four years ago for the timber that was on it. There have been quite a good many entries taken under the timber and stone act in Douglas County. It is pretty hard to say whether there were more quarter sections taken under the timber and stone act of these timber lands than under the homestead act. He does not know as there has been a great deal of difference. He would judge there would be about half and half—that is, he thinks that of the timber lands of Douglas County, so far as he knows from his knowledge and acquaintance with the records and with the lands themselves, about one-half of the number of timber claims have been taken under the timber and stone act, and the other half under the homestead act. In going over Douglas County and these various townships of which he speaks, he was part of the time in the employ of timber people, cruising part of the time. When he first began he was with the Gardiner Mill Company, located at Gardiner, on the coast, at the mouth of the Umpqua River. He then worked some with the cruisers of C. A. Smith, with his cruising parties, something like five or six months, and worked with the Gardiner Mill Company off and on for four years. They had a lot of land that they bought, ranches and timber lands and all. They bought off the timber of some of them, and some places they bought the timber, ranch, farm and all; some places they bought stumpage, and in other places they bought the title. As a rule, these timber people did not buy the title—they have up to late years but the last year or so they are not buying as many titles. If a man has a sawmill, he will buy stumpage somestimes, but when he has not a sawmill and wants to buy timber, he will buy the title if he can get it. He has cruised, he expects, for a thousand different individuals and would not undertake to name them here. He could name a good many different people. He has not followed the business of locating people on timber quarters very extensively in Douglas County, most of them were taken before he went into the timber business. He has cruised for probably a thousand individuals and has located some of these people. He does not know how many he has located on timber claims since he has been cruising, but has located a few—probably thirty or forty. The timber cruisers for individuals do not charge so much for finding the quarter that has good timber on it and then go out and ascertain or cruise the amount of timber and then bring the buyer and seller together. Most of his locating has been down in Curry County and northern California, in townships 40 and 41, ranges 13 and 14 west, and on up the coast. He cruised for these individuals simply because he was in the business. They wrote out here for someone to cruise a quarter of timber or a piece of land they had bought. They had land cruised to ascertain how much timber there is on it, to know the character of the land and how much it might be worth. They like to know about how much timber there is on it, as they might want to sell it, mill it off or clear it off. They cruise to find out the stand of saw timber there is on the quarter, if it is a timber quarter they have and are handling it for the timber, buying it for the timber, selling it for the timber, but this is not always the case in cruising, the main purpose of cruising is to ascertain the amount of timber there is on a quarter section. He cruises what timber there is on it, what he actually thinks it would saw out, to the best of his knowledge. It doesn't make any difference whether his cruising is for the buyer or seller. He has been at this business for the last four years in Douglas County and has made a living at it. He does not know about how many million feet of saw timber he has cruised in the last four years, but a good deal. Seven or eight million feet is a good stand of timber to a quarter section and the best that he has cruised. The average stand of timber per quarter section in Douglas County is about two million feet, and such a timber quarter with two million feet is not very saleable, but is considered merchantable—it could be sold. The best price that he had known people to pay for timber quarters in Douglas County is four thousand dollars. In his travels through this timber belt, there is an old cabin here and there, occasionally one on land that has been homesteaded, that has been abandoned. These timber claims are all the way up to the summit of the Coast Range. The Government lands are practically all taken in Douglas County, here and there a quarter—very scarce. He does not think that Douglas County has some of the best timber in western Oregon, the best timber, in his judgment, is in Coos County, adjoining Douglas County. Douglas and Lane counties are both considered good timbered counties, and there is pretty fair timber in them, but they are not the best. Speaking of agricultural land, he means that after the timber is removed these lands would be agricultural to the per cent that he has stated, in his judgment. There has not been a great deal of demand in the last three or four years for timber in Douglas County. The demand was greatest, within his knowledge, about seven years ago, and began to be active about 1902. Before that time he does not know whether the timber in Douglas County was considered worth much or not, or worth anything. He doesn't remember before that time, he was not in business and does not recollect. Before timber became of commercial value, in clearing the land they did not try to save much timber until there were some fire restrictions. He did not know who caused them, but there were fires. Until timber was worth something, if they did any clearing they burned it up and they are doing it today. In a great many places, they are burning up good saw timber today. They are burning up timber to clear up the land. They are clearing up some of these good timbered quarters. Those that are living on there today are burning the timber, clearing it down and logging it together and burning it. They have all the way from three to fifteen or twenty acres cleared on some of these timbered quarters. They slash the timber down, aim to haul it as near together as they can, and then burn it. They slash saw timber from three to six feet at the bottom or butt of the tree, if it happens to be near where they are improving. They are working right on through, he does not think they are saving the timber. They leave no timber standing. Some places they leave here and there a tree, but mostly they are clearing it, they generally start in on the brush land or where there is less timber, generally start in where there is no heavy saw timber—naturally would do this. He does not know whether they leave the saw timber until they have cut the other down, but they are clearing it, logging it off, he knows a good many cases where they are taking it off. These clearings he speaks of are from three to fifteen acres, and some of them have as high as forty acres, they have not cleared that, because it has been on a burn or something of that kind, some of them that have more land cleared, have taken advantage of an old burn. His business is that of timber cruiser and real estate, and his partner is Finis Dillard. He does not know of a timberman down there who has located four or five thousand people on these railroad lands, or who induced a lot of people to file applications, or tender applications to purchase this land at two dollars and a half an acre, and then got them to intervene in this suit. He is not personally acquainted with a man named Leavengood at Myrtle Creek, but knows of his operations down there, but does not know that he induced three or four thousand people in Douglas County, and who lived abroad, to come in there and make application to purchase these timber lands. He never saw any of them on the land, never saw him or saw him going out with any of them. He does not know of any of those applicants having applied for valuable timber quarters in Douglas County, and he never cruised any of these lands for these so-called applicants, nor applied for a timber quarter himself. The land was off the market before he knew anything about it. He never applied under this act of Congress that they are trying to enforce here or declare a forteiture under. He took a homestead in section 26, township 22 south, range 4 west, about thirty miles north from Roseburg on Elk Creek, a tributary of the North Umpqua. It had about three million feet of timber, most of it on an eighty. He took it about a year ago and then relinquished it for $925.00, and the man to whom he relinquished it filed on it and is still there. There was about three million feet of timber on the hundred and sixty acres. The man that he relinquished to is a single man and is making improvements on it. He is putting in cultivation about fifteen acres, or will have in the spring. This land is up on the bench, up on the side of the mountain. The man is clearing it himself, some small brush on it, perhaps half a dozen trees on this fifteen acres. He felled several trees of saw timber there. He doesn't know whether the man can sell his timber if he gets his title, he might. The stumpage in that country out there is worth about sixty-five cents, taking large tracts. There are no large timber holdings in Douglas County that he knows of, that he had anything to do with. He never cruised any of these large timber holdings out there.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that that land in this general area with which he was acquainted was originally, judging from the present state of it, covered with more or less growth of timber. There is timber scattered here and there of different kinds on most all of the lands, excepting the river bottom land. The river bottom land would cover just about the area that was taken with donation claims, that is about on an average. Of course, there were some donation claims that ran up on the hill to take in timber, but that would be just about an estimate. There is a wagon road grant in Douglas County, running from Roseburg to the coast, the Coos Bay Military Wagon Road, and covers practically township 28. He does not know just how wide that grant was, but something like six or eight miles, he observes the yellow marking through Defendants' Exhibit 259. It is principally in townships 28 and 29 from range 6 to the end of the grant, and he notices the marking "Coos Bay Military Wagon Road." Most all of the people that filed on timber and stone claims were non-residents of the state. The original applicants were 90 per cent of them non-residents of the state. A good many scrip locations have been made in Douglas County, but not as much as in some of the other counties, he thinks not as much as in Coos County. Those who purchased under the timber and stone act were mere speculators in timber. There has been a change in recent years, as the values of land have increased, in the purchasing, or rather in the selling of timber. Generally if a party has a timber claim, he wants to know what the value of the land is and if there is a portion of it that can be reserved for good farming, without too much timber on it. That has occurred in the last three or four years. In the last five years, land in that section of the country with which he is acquainted has gone from twenty dollars an acre to two hundred dollars an acre, and on up close to five hundred dollars; but the land in the raw state has gone from twenty to two hundred dollars an acre. The timber has not increased in value in the last five years. In fact, one cannot get as much for timber now as he could five years ago. The average stand of timber on these lands with which he is acquainted would be about two million feet, taking the timber land, land that has timber on it, on an average, to a quarter section. Four million feet is a very good claim in through that country. There are breaks in the timber by reason of lack of growth of timber or burns. There are very few sections that are all covered with timber, very few quarters that are all covered. There are either four or five acres to the quarter that are open, sometimes more of course, but take it on the timber claims there are very few sections that are entirely covered with timber. In recent years there has come up small brush, such as hazel and arrow wood, on the open places. Eighty acres of his homestead was timber. The rest of it was scattering trees, but all fair land. There is not an acre of rock land on it. There is probably thirty five or forty acres, at least that much, of it that can be cultivated. The man who purchased this land from him is using it as a home and is staying right there and improving it, and makes his living on that place. He has been on there less than a year, he has not raised a crop, but then he is preparing to put in a good crop this coming spring.

Whereupon, upon recross examination, witness testified, that there was about three million feet on this eighty acres of his homestead. There was about forty thousand feet to the acre, eighty acres of that. If the whole quarter section had been as good as the eighty, there would be about six million feet on the quarter, but it is like most of them, the timber is in patches. The value of these unsold lands on an average, through where he has traveled and over which he has gone and with which he is acquainted, in his judgment, taking into account the timber and soil and everything that enters into the value of a piece of land, would be from fifteen to twenty dollars an acre, possibly twenty-five—some of it—take it on an average. There is a portion of these quarter sections of unsold railroad land that is worth as much as a hundred dollars an acre. It is the land as land that gives them that high value at the present time. He means that he could sell some of these quarter sections for a hundred dollars an acre that is not covered with timber. There are forties of these quarter sections which are not covered with timber, that he could sell for one hundred dollars an acre. He does not suppose one could find a quarter section right through that one could sell for one hundred dollars an acre, but thinks one will find portions of them that can be sold for a hundred dollars an acre. There is a forty in township 28 south, range 5 west, about twelve miles from Roseburg, that one could sell for a hundred dollars an acre in its present state. That is creek bottom land. There is as much as two hundred acres of creek bottom land. That land is worth from two hundred to three hundred dollars an acre, and the land around it is old settled land, part of it under the donation claim. One can come down the Willamette Valley around Lane County and buy cleared land for from one hundred to a hundred and fifty dollars an acre; but one cannot buy much bottom land around Roseburg, out towards Myrtle Creek, for less than a hundred dollars an acre. One can buy some of that hill land for sixty, seventy or eighty dollars an acre, but there will be some brush on it. One would have to pay for land over about Myrtle Creek, around the railroad, up to two hundred or three hundred dollars an acre, that is where there is an orchard on it, some of it, and some of it has no orchard. A man doesn't like to cut off a portion of his place from the orchard and sell it. He thinks two or three hundred acres around Myrtle Creek would sell for two hundred or three hundred dollars an acre; it would, if it was in the bottom. Around Sutherland there is quite a valley, about a mile or two wide and eight miles long, that land is all cleared and level. He does not suppose there is as much as two hundred acres of it irrigated. A great deal of it is being put out in young trees from one to four years old, and is being held and exploited by land companies, by Frank Waite, who has sold some of it as high as seven hundred dollars an acre. He is not acquainted with the land in the Rogue River Valley around Medford, but that Sutherland land is not like this railroad land, that is out in the mountains. There is some of this railroad land, he will say, that is better than that Sutherland land that they have in fruit there—but, take it as a whole, it is not. One will find a forty, some places a hundred acres on a quarter, that is better than the land of Frank Waite. Some of it has timber on it, some of it is not very heavy, some of it is quite heavily timbered. He does not want to create the impression, by his testimony, that the land in this grant is generally of the character of the land around Sutherland. This land is spotted all over, some of it black heavy soil, even better than that land. That is not good land around Sutherland. He thinks the grant all over would average in value, taking everything into consideration, as far as he knows, probably somewhere from fifteen to twenty dollars an acre. If a man could get a good quarter section of this timber land for two dollars and a half an acre, he does not think he could sell it for more than fifteen or twenty dollars an acre, if there was timber on it, to some timber company. He is sure he could not. If he wanted to sell it, perhaps he could sell it, there is a demand for land, that a man can sell any kind of land less than twenty dollars an acre any time. He does not know how much land he sold last year, but he thinks a couple of thousand acres. The title has passed. His partner is Finis Dillard, and they operate a real estate business in Roseburg, and have no men working for them. He has only been in the real estate business the last seven months. He did not buy out a business that had been already established. He and his partner started up together; his partner had some few lists, but very few. Real estate has not been very active during the last year, rather quiet.

Whereupon, on redirect examination, witness testified, that if the railroad company had only a two dollar and a half interest in this land and is permitted to retain it at a value of fifteen to twenty dollars an acre, it would make the same profit that an individual would who would purchase the land at that price and sell it at fifteen or twenty dollars an acre. It is the fault of the company if they have paid taxes on it for thirty-five or forty years. The reason why this two hundred acres of railroad land near Roseburg remains unimproved is that the railroad company won't sell it. There are other small tracts in the same township that are equally good. These tracts are about eleven miles from Roseburg by wagon road, and less than that on a direct line.

Whereupon B. F. SHIELDS, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is forty-six years old, resides at Roseburg, Douglas County, Oregon, and has lived in that county thirty-eight years. For the last ten years he has been a timber cruiser most of the time. A timber cruiser is supposed to go out and look claims over, estimate the timber, and see the character of the land, etc., and report as to the character of the land, the amount of timber on it, and the agricultural value of the land—at least he does so. As a general rule, he estimates the agricultural value of the land before and after the timber is removed. He was raised on a farm in township 28 south, range 8 west, Douglas County, Oregon, about fourteen to sixteen miles west of Roseburg. This was his father's home of eighty acres of rolling land, partly timber—oak grubs. His farther was engaged in general mixed farming, and cultivated on his farm thirty to thirty-five acres. His father had a family of nine children. Witness took a homestead in section 30, township 25 south, range 2 west, and sold that to Frank E. Alley of Roseburg, who sold it later on. There is a fellow who has it rented, raising hay and stuff on it, using it for agricultural purposes. Witness filed on that claim April 1st, 1902, and sold it in 1907, he thinks it was. It has been used for farming purposes all the time. He had about ten or twelve acres cleared in one piece, and six or eight acres in another piece, and raised hay and garden stuff, potatoes, corn and vegetables of all kinds. He had a family. Hay and garden stuff are generally raised in that community; some fruit—but just for their own use, very little fruit. They raise corn there, and the hay is mostly oats, wheat and timothy. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259," he is acquainted with these unsold railroad lands and the lands under contract, especially the unsold lands marked in green from township 21 south, ranges 7 and 8 west, located on Smith River, and in his opinion probably 35 to 40 or 45 per cent of township 21 south, ranges 7 and 8 west, of the unsold lands of the company could be utilized for tillage; and that in the next township (22), about 30 or 35 per cent would be suitable for plowing and tilling, and about 25 per cent of township 23 south, ranges 2, 3 and 4 west. He would think that in township 24 south, ranges 2 and 3 west, probably 35 per cent would be suitable for tilling and plowing. In 24 southwest, there is only part of that, about half, the south half, which runs up pretty high into the mountains, but it would do for grazing land. Township 25, ranges 1, 2 and 3 west, there would be about 35 per cent that could be tilled, and in township 26 south, ranges 1, 2 and 3 west, from 25 to 30 per cent could be rendered suitable for cultivation. Township 27 south varies. That township would vary from 25 to 35 per cent, somewhere in that neighborhood, that could be rendered suitable for cultivation. He is acquainted with ranges 2 and 3 mostly. In township 28 south, ranges 2, 3, 5 and 6 west, he is acquainted with the unsold lands of the company and they would run about the same as the others. It might be as one gets closer to the valley that it would run a little higher. In township 29 south, ranges 1, 2, 3 and 4 west, they would average about the same as the others. Of course, as one gets closer to the valleys, the percentage of land that could be rendered suitable for cultivation would run higher—further out it is not so high. He is acquainted with ranges 1, 2 and 3 in township 30 south, and it will average about the same as the others. In township 31 south, ranges 1, 2 and 3 west, he is acquainted, and the lands in township 31 would range pretty well. It is pretty well open in township 31, there is a good deal of open land, probably 40 per cent of that in township 31, range 1 west. He is acquainted with some of the lands in township 32 south, ranges 1 and 2 west, and this would run from 25 to 30 or 35 per cent, somewhere in that neighborhood, as agricultural land. He is very little acquainted with any of the lands in township 33 south, and is but little acquainted with any of the lands south of that, in the grant. He has been through there. He is acquainted with the railroad lands on the west side of the railroad in township 25 south, ranges 8 and 9 west, some of that would run 40 per cent, while others would run about 30 per cent. He is not acquainted with any of the other townships on the west side of the railroad, to speak of. He thinks that the average that he has given would generally carry through as to one hundred and sixty acre tracts of railroad land, selected by forty-acre legal subdivisions, but not necessarily by quarter sections.

Q. What is your opinion as to whether tracts of land such as the railroad land is that you are acquainted with in this area as to being suitable for settlement purposes, for the purpose of a man going on the land with his family and making his home, engaging in farming, earning his living?

A. He can. He has got to first clear the land, of course, it takes a little means to start with.

Q. He would have to have something to start?

A. Yes, something to start with. Of course, he could go on there and work out part of the time, you know, and then part of the time on the place.

Q. Doesn't that same condition prevail as to any raw land that a man would go on?

A. Yes, sir; it does, if he hasn't got means.

Q. Are there settlements on lands of similar character to these unsold lands of the railroad company that you have been over?

A. There are, yes, sir.

Q. I mean by settlements, people actually living on the lands and farming them, making their living there?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon witness testified, that these people go in there and build homes and clear up the land. They have some stock, such as that, raise hay and garden stuff. These lands generally raise fruit in that area, most all kinds of vegetables, and most places they raise corn, wheat and oats. Away high in the mountains sometimes one cannot raise such as tomatoes, but they can raise most of the stuff. He has seen wheat, oats and timothy raised there, mostly grains, and apples, pears, prunes, peaches and cherries, potatoes, cabbage, carrots, squashes and rutabagas.

Q. In your opinion, Mr. Shields, what has been the effect of the railroad company's failure to comply with the conditions of the grant, failing to sell this land to actual settlers at $2.50 an acre, in tracts of 160 acres?

Mr. Fenton: Objected to as assuming that the railroad company has failed to comply with the terms of the grant.

Q. That is, the effect upon the community.

A. Well, it has been tending to hold the people back and keep out schools, and the building of wagon roads.

Q. Has it affected the settlement of the country in any way?

A. It has.

Q. Materially or not?

A. Materially; yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Shields, there have been some questions asked in this case, and some testimony relating to the manner in which the lands have been taken up in the areas covered by this grant, or in part of the area covered by this grant, that is, of homesteads and timber and stone claims. Now, will you please tell what your experience has been with reference to the people who have taken up homesteads in this country—this general country?

A. Why, in what way? What do you mean? In what way?

Q. Have people generally abandoned their homesteads?

A. Why, no; not as a general thing they don't.

Whereupon witness testified, that no residence whatever was required for timber and stone entries, and he thinks most of the lands transferred by entrymen from the Government obtained their title under the timber and stone act. These people who filed on these timber and stone claims were principally from the East and Washington, the most that he knows anything about. They were from all over the eastern countries.

Whereupon, upon cross-examination, witness testified, that he is a timber cruiser by profession, and has been so practically the last ten years. He has not cruised for any timber company in Douglas County, but mostly for individuals. Timber first became an object of inquiry, as he remembers it, about seven or eight years ago, somewhere along there. In places, these lands with which he is acquainted, over which he has been, are considered fairly good timber lands. These unsold railroad lands, taking them on an average, would carry something like two million feet or a little better, not much more than that, take it as an average on the whole. When a claim carries two million feet of saw timber, it is considered an average timber claim for that country. The highest stand of timber on any quarter section which he has cruised or known of being cruised in Douglas County, would run to eight million feet—some of them ten million feet, and the value of such a claim that carries ten million feet to the quarter section depends upon the locality, etc. If it is on the coast where there are saw mills, probably one will get a dollar and a half to two dollars a thousand feet, but take it west of the railroad, if one can get fifty to seventy-five cents he would be doing well. That would mean selling the land as well as the timber. They generally buy the land and all together, as a general thing. He has known of very few people who have taken homesteads, proven up on them either by commuting or living the five years, and then selling the land to timber people.

Q. There are cases of that kind, though, all through this timber belt?

A. I suppose so.

He means that this per cent of agricultural land mentioned by him would be agricultural after the timber is removed or cleared up.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that there has been an increase in the value of farming lands in the last five or six years in his vicinity. In the last four or five years there has not been much demand for timber, it has been about on a standstill. In fact, he does not believe one could sell it for as much now as one could four or five years ago.

Whereupon JAMES S. BAILEY, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is forty-one years old, resides at Ashland, Jackson County, Oregon, was born in that county and has lived there most of the time. He was born in Rogue River Valley, township 38 south, range 1 west. His father was a farmer and rancher and farmed in different parts of Jackson County. He owned a farm in the Rogue River Valley for a while, farmed in different parts of that valley, and then in 1894 bought a ranch on the Ashland-Klamath Falls road, twenty-four miles east of Ashland. It was what one would call a mountain ranch, consisting of one hundred and thirty-three acres. It was the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 4, township 40 south, range 4 east, and the south half of the southwest quarter of section 33, in township 39 south, range 4 east. It was rolling land, some of it was rocky. There were small patches of good soil on the place, and perhaps out of one hundred and thirty-three acres there was thirty acres of what one would call good tillable soil; this hundred and thirty-three acres was all the farm that he had, and he farmed about thirty acres of it. His father earned a support for himself and family on that land, and had no other means of support. Section 33 was all railroad land excepting eighty acres that his father owned in that section, who had part of it fenced in, made application to the railroad company for it, but for some reason did not get it. He does not know the exact date of the application, but it was about 1888, and the company replied that it would send an appraiser out and appraise the value of that land, and the company put a price on it of seven dollars and a half an acre. At that time, the lands were selling around there at two dollars and a half an acre and his father felt that the company was holding him up a little, and he tried to see if there was not some way of what he called getting fair play. Later on his father offered the railroad company seven dollars and a half an acre, with the result that he could not get it because the land was withdrawn from the market. He made this offer somewhere along in the 90's. It dragged along for quite a while before his father finally decided to pay seven dollars and a half an acre for it. This land that his father applied to purchase was agricultural land, fit for nothing only for farming purposes, and that was the use his father had in view, the only thing he wanted it for—for farming. Witness farmed quite a little in different parts of Jackson County. The first farming that he did for himself was on Emigrant Creek, about eleven miles east of Ashland, in townships 39 and 40, range 2 east. He farmed there for three years and then went to Klamath County on Spencer Creek, and was there for a year or two. He farmed the old Spencer ranch one year, and in 1899 he bought a place on Corral Creek on the Ashland-Klamath Falls road, twenty-two miles east of Ashland, consisting of a hundred and sixty acres in section 6, township 40 south, range 4 east. He farmed that for four years. There was not much land cleared on the place when he took hold of it. He cleared considerable, and in the four years that he had it, he added, he thinks, twenty acres to the agricultural part of it. That was a timbered tract, portions of it was heavy timber. He left his father's place down in township 40 south, range 4 east, in section 4, in 1890. He worked on his father's farm there continuously from the time his father bought the place until he left home. In his experience, not only the flats that exist along the rivers in Jackson County, but the high lands and hills and mountains there, will produce most anything one will plant, except lemons and oranges. Apples do well, vegetables of all descriptions do well. From his personal experience, he knows that lots of the higher ground there will grow good timothy, any of it will grow good grains, good fruit—grow orchards, that is, to a certain elevation. The elevation where his father lived and where he lived, in what is called the Jenny Creek Basin, fruits do well there, such as apples, plums and pears. The altitude of Klamath Falls is forty-two hundred feet, and there is farming there at that altitude, where they raise alfalfa and grains of all descriptions, apples, potatoes and onions. They raise them for the market. He does not remember the exact elevation of his father's place in township 40 south, range 4 east, but thinks it was thirty-four hundred feet. His father raised everything in the way of grain, vegetables and hay. Vegetables do as well or better there than they do in the lower altitude. His father's farm was in what is known as the Jenny Creek country. It is known as the old Jenny Creek Station on the road between Ashland and Klamath Falls. It was the old stage station. He does not think his father ever kept the stage station there while he was there. It might have been used that way before his father went there, he could not say as to that. This land that his father bought was homesteaded by James Purvis. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259," witness points out township 40 south, range 4 east, and states that Shake is the name of his postoffice, and that he is familiar with the country in general and is personally acquainted with all of it—that is, townships 38, 39, 40 and 41 south, ranges 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 east. Eight east is not within the limits of the grant, excepting as to a very small area. He has been pretty thoroughly all over these townships and the greater portion of it that is in the Government sections in particular, he has looked that out by tally in five-acre tracts. He had been there on different occasions. He located a good deal of country out in townships 38, 39 and 40, ranges 6, 7 and 8 east, and over in township 41, range 8 east, and then he has worked for different timber companies cruising through that country, all the timbered portions of it, and has been on practically every section of it, has been over it thoroughly in the even sections, and in some instances the odd sections. He notices the blue color shown on this map in townships 39 and 40 south, which indicate lands that have been deeded by the railroad company. He has been thoroughly over townships 38, 39, 40 and 41, ranges 6 and 7 east. He will start in east and come back on it—on 5 east, and in ranges 4 and 3 east. In 1 and 2 east, he has looked that over pretty carefully in different ways. When he lived in township 40, range 2 east, he lived there for three years and had stock on the range, and was over the range continually, and had looked over different sections in township 40 south, range 2 east for people. He was looking after them with a view of getting a homestead in that country. He has been in townships 38 and 39. In 3 east, he was never thoroughly all over except on the east side of 38 and 39 in 3 east. He was looking for timber in that country for different people. His first trip in there was with a man by the name of Angell. He thinks Angell had something to do with the Hopkins estate. Angell came to that country with the Pierce Brothers and bought up lands for the Hopkins, and they were the ones that bought that tract for Hopkins in that country. Witness went up into townships 38 and 39, range 3 east, and worked in there about three months with Angell in that country up there. He knows about townships 38, 39, 40 and 41, about as well as he could any country. He always looked forward to the possibilities of agriculture and farming whenever he was in the country, and as a timber cruiser it would be a part of his duty to classify the soil and the land. They make that up in their notes, what per cent of it would be fit for agriculture and grazing. He could take the blue prints of each township and point out practically every forty acres in it which would be suitable for cultivation. There are sections in there through townships 38, 39, 40 and 41, ranges 3 and 4 east, that he presumes with a little time he could name. He would say that fifty per cent of it could be used for cultivation. Now, when he says that, he speaks from people that he knows have gone in there and removed the timber off the lands. For instance, in township 38, in township 40, range 8 east, parties went in there, and on land he did not himself at that time think was any good, they took the timber off and put it in cultivation and are making a living there. Also old man Clyder, who lives at Green Spring Mountain, on the Ashland-Klamath Falls road, the old man has been there, he does not know how long, but ever since he can remember, and his land is a side hill, he thinks he has a hundred and sixty acres on a side hill, and it is pretty stony and rocky, the old man has made a living on it continuously. He raises fruits and vegetables, some hay, keeps a few milch cows, a few pigs and chickens. In the territory west of Ashland and west of the base line or the meridian line, he is not so well acquainted till one gets into Josephine County. In Josephine County he is pretty thoroughly acquainted with townships 39 and 40 south, ranges 7, 8 and 9 west, and has made a pretty careful examination of those lands from being employed there as a cruiser and locator on the unsettled lands. He looked at a great many sections there that are patented. In townships 40 and 41 south, range 9 west, he has made detailed cruises on all of them, elevations on every five acres. In township 40 south, range 8 west, he has been over pretty thoroughly and he would say that practically all—he would say 75 per cent of township 40 south, range 8 west can be cultivated. In township 39 south, range 8 west, all of that country in there is settled. The yellow markings on "Defendants' Exhibit 259" indicate lands that were lost by prior entries. Pointing to the extreme western tier of sections around Kerby, 75 per cent of it is fit for agriculture. He would say 40 per cent of that extreme western tier anyway, in his best judgment, would be suitable for agricultural purposes—speaking of the entire township. In townships 38 and 39, he is thoroughly well acquainted with them, and take it all into consideration, he would say that anyway 40 or 50 per cent of it could be cultivated. Some of it is rolling, but then it is good soil. The soil is good, free from stones. About the only thing one would have to do to put it in cultivation, would be to take the timber off where there is timber on it. It is not all timbered, the timber runs in bunches, it is some scattering. A section occasionally has a good stand of timber on, and may be the next section will have scarcely any on it. He is not well enough acquainted with the other sections or townships, or parts of townships, there, to pass his opinion as to the amount of agricultural land on them. He has been over a portion of townships 38, 39 and 40, range 6 west, but he has not been over this thoroughly enough to pass judgment on the agricultural land there is on them. He has been practically all over the county, but not to look it over carefully.

Q. Now, Mr. Bailey, if these unsold lands of the railroad company were divided into 160-acre tracts, and taken by a settler for the purpose of making it a home, and engaging in agriculture, what percentage of those 160-acre tracts do you think would be suitable for that purpose, that a man could go on and successfully farm in a modest way, sufficient to earn a living for himself and family, and the tract need not be in quarter sections, but by legal 40-acre subdivisions lying contiguous?

A. You want the percentage?

Q. The percentage of 160-acre tracts, in your opinion, in this area that you are acquainted with?

A. In my best judgment, 80 per cent of it.

Q. There are sections, I presume, that none of it would be susceptible to agriculture?

A. There are sections that I do not think any one could go onto and make a living, and then there are sections again that are all good tillable land—take the whole section. Of course, 20 years ago, when there were few people in the country, why, they did not look after those things as closely as they do at this time.

Whereupon witness testified, that the demand for lands for farming purposes by settlers, homesteaders and people of moderate means who are looking for farming lands has been on the increase the last four or five years, to his knowledge, rapidly increasing. There are settlers in several places on lands that he has mentioned, some of them are earning their support from the lands—in fact, most of them are.

Q. In your opinion, Mr. Bailey, what has been the effect of the railroad company's failure to comply with the conditions of this grant in selling their lands to actual settlers at $2.50 an acre in tracts of 160 acres, in the localities that you are acquainted with in Jackson County, and Josephine County?

A. It has been discouraging. It has had a discouraging effect.

Q. In what way, Mr. Bailey?

A. When people go out to look for a homestead or a piece of land that they can get hold of, acquire title to, make a living on, and they find it is railroad land and it is not on the market, they become discouraged.

Q. Has it retarded the settlement, then, in those counties?

A. To a certain extent, yes.

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified, that the Ashland-Klamath Falls road has been a public highway as far back as he can remember, and is one of the oldest roads in southern Oregon. They go over the Cascade Mountains between Rogue River Valley and Klamath Falls, also by what they call the Dead Indian road at this time, the road has been open there ever since he can remember, but they have not been traveling it a great deal until the last ten, twelve or fifteen years. The road that he speaks of as the Ashland-Klamath Falls road is a road that has been known to the travel and to those counties and to the state for a great many years before his time. His first recollection of the country is that the first stage station out of Ashland on the road to Klamath Falls was at Howard's. That is right on the west side of the top of the divide, Green Springs Mountain, about sixteen miles out from Ashland. The next station was at the old John Lacy place, which witness bought later on, in section 6, near Corral Creek, twenty-two and a half miles from Ashland. Then the next station is the old Parker station, just across the line in Klamath County, thirty-two miles out from Ashland, and the next one is the old Cooper station, about forty-six miles from Ashland. They carried the mails over this road for many years. The military operations in the Modoc war were in 1873, a little before his time.

He was not old enough to have any knowledge of that. He had been told there was a trail that goes out by Buck Lake—that is what they now call the Dead Indian road, Horseback trail, and this was the old stage road at that time. It is better now than it used to be. It is his understanding that they are planning to build a road from Medford by way of the Forest Reserve over to Crater Lake, but this would be, in his opinion, rather a round about way to get to Klamath Falls, but he knows there was such a project as that and that both counties had adopted it and the state undertook to make an appropriation to cover it, and that was defeated on the ground that it was unconstitutional. Medford was very much interested in that. The place that his father owned had one hundred and thirty-three acres and he does not remember how long ago that homestead was filed on or taken, and he never looked it up from the records. He knows that Mr. Purvis lived there for some time before his father went there, from the improvements there were on the place. Forty acres of it is a fraction, he thinks it would be lot 4 in the even section, and then there was eighty acres in the railroad section. Purvis took that before there was any railroad grant, he thinks. The grant bears date July 25, 1866, but the road was not built or definitely located, he supposes, until after Purvis took his homestead, at any rate, the railroad did not get this piece of land that Purvis homesteaded. There was no land in cultivation on the Purvis homestead at the time his father went onto it. There was a log house and barn, his father put on fences, and later built a new house and barn and cleared perhaps thirty acres on Jenny Creek, not all right on the creek bottom, it was on the creek, and then back up on the bench, the creek ran through it. There was about six acres he would think, right on the creek bottom and the rest of it lay up west of the creek, up on the bench land, perhaps from fifty to a hundred feet above the creek bottom, sloping toward the creek bottom. Some of this land his father cleared had pine timber on it, scattering pine. There is underbrush out there in places, but as a rule it does not prevail in Josephine County or in the western part of the grant. What little timber there is on that particular land is generally pine. Pine predominates in the Jenny Creek country, there is fir mixed through it. The best sugar pine and yellow pine in Oregon stands between Jenny Creek and Klamath Falls, and that is regarded as the best sugar pine and white pine in Oregon or on the coast, and is said probably to be the best in the United States. He thinks Hopkins bought forty-one thousand acres of fine white pine and yellow pine and sugar pine.

Q. Well, that is the character of the timber that I speak of?

A. Yes sir.

His father kept a few cows and hogs and raised a few horses to sell when he was making his living on this Purvis homestead, he raised draft horses, just ordinary farm horses. His father had stock—cattle—that ran at large, but not over thirty or forty head of cattle that roamed over that country. He sold cattle for beef, usually figuring on turning off from a hundred and fifty to two hundred dollars worth a year. He did not always turn off hogs for the market, he almost always made bacon of his hogs for his own use, and had some to sell to the people that traveled along the road, that is, to travelers who would come along, and he would sell them bacon by the pound as they might need it, and in that way he would sell eggs, butter and chickens, that would be to the travel that would pass over this Klamath Falls and Ashland road. Three years he dairied and sold his butter in Ashland, then milking ten cows—he thinks it was in 1902 and 1903, or 1904, somewhere along there, he would not be right sure as to the time. in summer these cattle his father had would usually be turned out on the range and go wherever they wanted to—very seldom would go over two miles from home. No one that he knew of herded cattle out into these mountains or up Jenny Creek. A few ranchers that were scattered along this road did keep some cattle and as a rule they grazed out everywhere, wherever they wanted to, wherever they would choose to go, and they were at liberty to go. These railroad lands were all unfenced. His place was not up Jenny Creek from there, it was right west about a mile and a half from his father's place, it formerly was a homestead, he could not say how long it had been taken. John Lacy took it as a homestead and later he sold it to Grenville Naylor, and witness bought it from Naylor. Lacy was the man that kept the stage station and witness kept the stage station for a year. When he was keeping the stage station, he simply rented them a barn, fed their hostler that took care of the horses, and part of the time they took their meals there, part of the time they took breakfasts at his place. The travel was not very heavy over that road at the time he kept that station. The stage went by there twice a day, once each way, it was a two horse stage. There was about six or eight acres cleared on his place when he went there and he probably cleared between twelve and fifteen acres. The lands that he cleared were timber lands, and part of them very heavy, it was pine timber, and what he did not make into wood for his own use he burned up. He thinks that everything that they raised there they sold to the travelers along the road—practically everything that they raised, and he also kept stock, too. He thinks that the most cattle for beef or stock that he ever sold in any one year while he was there, was ten head. In his estimate of all these lands with which he is acquainted that would be agricultural, he referred to lands after the timber was cleared off. The location of land there for timber or for any other valuable purpose, became active in Jackson County along in the early 80's, 1885 or 1886—he does not just remember when. He cannot remember the exact dates when timber became an object of inquiry by investors, but then it was along in 1888 and 1889, along in there, and from that up to '92 and '93. Hopkins bought in there along about 1890 — there was lots of timber changed hands in that country before 1900. He has cruised for these timber people and did cruising for individuals before they finally located on a quarter. If they came to him and asked him if he would go and look at a certain quarter section for individuals who wanted to locate on a piece of land, or if he knows of a quarter section of land that would be suitable for a timber claim or homestead, why, as a rule, they never made much difference, they took it either way they wanted it. He located a considerable number of timber quarters.

Q. Well, now, what is the practice—do you charge —a man comes into your office and says: "I want a good timber quarter somewhere in Jackson County," and you tell him that you could locate him, do you keep a set of plat books or blue prints or memoranda from which you can pick out a good quarter?

A. I do.

Q. And then do you charge him so much for locating him if he finally takes it?

A. I do.

Q. What is the ruling price? How do you govern that?

A. Well, the first locating I ever did, I got $50 a quarter for it.

Q. What do they pay? What is the current rate now, about?

A. $250.

Q. Now, what do you do when a man says, "Well, I want you to get me a quarter," what is the process? Do you go out with him and cruise it?

A. Go out with him and look it over, and run it out carefully.

Q. And then, do you cruise it by five acres?

A. If he wants it, why, we do.

Q. And then you charge him for the time that you are cruising in addition to the location fee?

A. Certainly. Certainly.

Q. Then, what decides whether he will take it or not—the amount of timber that is on it?

A. The amount of timber that is on it, and the location of it.

Q. How many claims do you think you have located in Jackson County during the last ten years, or the time that you have been cruising?

A. Not many in Jackson County. I have located a great many more in Klamath and Josephine County than I ever did in Jackson County.

Q. Well, have you located several hundred in these counties, do you think?

A. Oh, perhaps 250.

Whereupon witness testified, that he had located these people under the timber and stone act and under the homestead act, both ways. He presumes that in all the locating that he ever did, 75 per cent of them took under the timber and stone act. He has located a number of homesteads that have some timber on them. In looking for a homestead for people that wanted to take a homestead, he did not ignore the timber. If he found a quarter section that could be located under the homestead, that had good timber on it, it was evidence that the land was—the better the timber was the better the land was. The more timber a man could get on his homestead, the better the land.

Q. And of course the timber was not any drug to it?

A. It was not.

He does not know that he could say what timber is worth per quarter section there now. The best timber in that Jenny Creek country there where this fine timber was, he knows what they can buy it for. There is some timber there that is not on the market, but there is lots of timber on the market through the country there that can be bought for fifty cents and a dollar a thousand. Three million feet on a quarter there makes it a merchantable quarter for timber in that country out there, to make it worth taking. Take the unsold railroad lands that he has been over, and as a whole he does not think they would average a million feet. Twenty-five per cent of them would have as much as two or three million feet on them. The best timber has been picked out, culled out, by these timber buyers. The character of that which is unsold, in its soil is similar to that that has been sold, but the timber won't average as good. Parts of it is in the timbered country. Western Oregon is considered a timber country. Until one gets to the divide there, going from Ashland east, there is no timber that country to speak of at all, that is from Ashland out to the eastern boundary of townships 39 and 40, nge 2 east. There are people living on top of those ls in sight of Ashland. Every place that has a place g enough to build a house, most, has a settler on it.

at is about ten, twelve or fifteen miles from Ashland, d there is some of this land outside of the range of this llow field on this map, "Defendants' Exhibit 259."
ere has been lots of it settled on recently. He does t mean that there are settlers covering all that bald l country east of Ashland. The most of it is owned, t he says there are settlers living around there wherer they can get a forty, and people are making a liv-g on them. Those hills, most of them will produce ything. The most of the settlers that have gone in ere recently have not the opportunity to get a few res of bottom land, and they are tilling the soil on ose hillsides, taking off the brush, setting it out to uit, within ten to fifteen or sixteen miles of Ashland.
ess than four months ago he visited four places up on at they call Tom Spring Mountain, about eighteen les from Ashland by wagon road, by legal subdision it is about twelve or fourteen miles. These foot-ls around the Rogue River Valley are, most of them, rren except they are covered with scrubby growth of aparral, manzanita, and some pine. In this particular cality, they haven't anything there but oak and service d pine, and one will find poison oak most any place.
hese people take these lands as homesteads. In the st three, four or five years, as the lands increased in value in the valleys, of course, it increased the value of the foothill ranches. He does not know that he could place a value on these lands in the Jenny Creek country that he calls timbered lands, that is, what they are worth an acre, there is no market, of course, different prices, on an average of it right through, they would perhaps be worth fifty dollars an acre. There is not much—not any—difference between the railroad land and the even section in the Jenny Creek country. The best timber has been selected and bought up, and the most of it, both on the even and odd sections, would be worth fifty dollars an acre if it was cleared up and put in cultivation. In its present condition, in his judgment, it would be worth twenty dollars an acre. He never applied to purchase any of this railroad land and never located any one who attempted to make an application under this Act of April 10, 1869, to purchase a quarter section out there for two dollars and a half an acre from the company. He knew of that being done. He had forgotten the fact—but he had located a quarter section for a man under this statute. He does not know whether he can tell the name or not, but the land was in section 3 and 9, township 40, range 4 east, it was all timbered. Those particular quarter sections would perhaps run three and a half to four million feet. It was twenty-six or twenty-seven miles from Ashland in the Jenny Creek country, and it was a railroad quarter. The man went onto it but did not build a house on it. He posted a notice on it and made his claim under the Act of April 10, 1869. He did not pay him in full for locating him on it—he paid him part of it. This man came to witness to locate him on the railroad claims, and he told him that under the present circumstances witness did not think he could get it. He said he wanted a claim anyway, and if witness would locate him he would pay him a hundred and fifty dollars, and witness told him it was his opinion that he would never get the land. He was not to pay the hundred and fifty dollars until he got the land, and he has not got it yet and witness has not got his hundred and fifty dollars. He picked out a pretty good timber quarter, which was what the man wanted. He got about the best there was in there. It would be hard to place a value on that quarter at the present time, with the timber on the ground, it would perhaps be worth four or five thousand dollars, probably more, but the land itself, if the timber was off, would be worth fifty dollars an acre easy enough. The man claimed to him that he wanted it for a bona fide home.

Q. They all want to be actual settlers for about ten minutes, until they get the title. Isn't that about right?

A. I couldn't say as to that. I don't know anything about that.

Q. They are very careful to pick out the best timber they can find? Isn't that the fact?

Q. Isn't that the fact?

A. Well no, not always.

Q. That is the rule, isn't it, as far as you have had any experience?

A. Well, in some cases, of course, they look forward to the value of the timber, and in others they want something that can be cultivated. They would much rather there would not be any timber on it.

Q. 40 or 50 years from now, why, they think in their mind that this timber will be removed, and then they will have some land? Is that the idea?

A. I couldn't say what their idea is.

Whereupon witness testified, that he thinks this man had a family and lives in Ashland now, but he could not tell what his business is.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that there were five of these people who came to him and told him about the prospects of the railroad land being put back on the market and they wanted a claim, wanted him to go and select a claim, that is, help them select a claim. He gave them his opinion of it, and they said they were willing to take their chances, they knew they could get it, and the location where they wanted, in his opinion, had been sold to this man Hopkins, and he told them that. They said that that did not make any difference—Hopkins would lose it. At first they didn't want to pay anything, until they got their location on the land, that is, until they got their aplication allowed. He told them he could not put in his time for nothing, and they finally agreed to pay him fifty dollars apiece to go and show them the land, and then pay the other hundred dollars when they got their application allowed. They went on the land and started to build a house, put a foundation on it, put up a notice. He showed them several sections, and they made the selections themselves, then they made an application for the land, he was told—he don't know that to be a fact, but they were refused. This man from Ashland that he spoke about paid him fifty dollars, he didn't get the hundred and fitfy dollars, but only got a partial payment. He merely showed them the lands that they wanted to see, he showed them several sections in that part of the country and they made their own selections. They thought those were the better. They looked at the agricultural part of it. They could have gotten other claims there, perhaps located just as well as these, only the soil was not so good. There was more rock available than there was on those particular sections. They solicited his services but he did not solicit anyone to make a filing, and advised them against it. Most of the people he has testified to having located timber and stone claims for in that country, are people of moderate means, some of them practically had nothing—say three or four hundred dollars. They lived principally in different parts of the United States, most of them lived around Portland, Oregon, and most of the people who bought timber and stone claims were city people, merely speculating in timber. Most of the people were from the city of Portland, some were from Seattle. The Hopkins people were from Lock Haven, Pennsylvania. The old gentleman is dead, his sons still retain the title to the timber lands. They own all the best of the timber lands in this country, the

Hopkins estate and the Oshkosh Land and Timber Company own the best of the pine through that section of the country. Speaking of the land being cultivated on the mountains and hill sides, old man Tyler has been there for the last forty years, and he has nothing only a hillside ranch. It is rolling, in his opinion if it had had timber all over it he would have had better soil and would have been growing more crops than he is at the present time. These last persons that he spoke of are new people in the country, up on the side of the mountain, they are located on the side of the mountain. It is not steep like some of these coast mountains are, but they all have nice gardens and some grain there. Their grain was cut when he was there, they had it in stacks and in the barns—some of them did not have any barns. Tyler's place is about thirteen miles from Ashland by road. On above Tyler's place, still further up on the side of the mountain, where they have no bottom land at all, there is D. N. Davis and his two sons, they both have homesteads there, in section 8, township 40 south, range 3 east. The old gentleman has been there for a number of years. He is cutting down the timber, burning it up, clearing the land there on the side of the mountain, making a living for a good big family. His two sons have taken homesteads there. One son has eighty acres in his homestead, that is in the timbered country. The first lands that were taken in this country where he has lived since his birth, were the most level valley land that they could find; then as the land increased in value and the population increased, they moved out until they are up on the mountains, and all through the mountains at the present time. Most of these lands have been acquired by homesteads. He does not know but few people who got them any other way. He thinks he could mention one or two cases where they bought railroad lands, Kincaid, he thinks, bought some railroad land in what he thinks they call Hyatt Prairie country. The Barrons, he thinks, bought a little there, in Township 39-3 South, on the headwaters of Keene Creek. Practically all the lands the railroad company has sold in Jackson county were the sales made to these large companies. All the titles have been acquired from the railroad company, so far as he knows, only by what they call capitalist companies, people that wanted it for speculation. He does not know whether the railroad company has parted with the title to this land that his father wanted to buy, adjoining his farm there in township 40 south, range 2 east, and he does not know whether the company still owns that land.

Q. What is your opinion, Mr. Bailey, as to the effect, the difference in effect between holding these lands as the Railroad Company have the present holdings, and the condition that would have existed had the lands been open to settlement under the conditions of the grant at $2.50 an acre in 160-acre tracts? I mean, holding it there with this timber on it that exists there, or making farms of it—the difference between those two effects upon Jackson County especially?

A. In my best opinion, there would be a good per cent of it occupied at this time by bona fide settlers.

Q. What do you mean by settlers?

A. I personally know of at least one hundred homes that would be built in the country, that are not here now, if people could have acquired title to railroad lands.

Q. What would those people—what business would they engage in?

A. In general ranching.

Q. Ranching is a term that here in the west we apply to farming?

A. Yes, sir, farming. A farm, the way I look at it, is a large place that you raise grain on. A ranch is a general ranch, a little stock and fruit and vegetables and hay.

RECROSS EXAMINATION.

Q. You mean a stock place?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well now, suppose the Railroad Company had sold these lands, these timber-lands, at $2.50 an acre, in quantities of not to exceed 160 acres, within the last five or six years, and given them a good title, how many of them do you suppose would have sold their lands to these timber people at an advance of about $20 or $30 an acre?

A. I don't think any of them would, because I don't think they could have gotten it.

Q. Well, don't you think the most of them that paid $2.50 an acre, if they had got $20 they would have sold out, wouldn't they?

A. In some instances they might have. But then, I know of lots of good people that would have been living on those lands today, improving them, and would have taken them from an agricultural standpoint fully.

Q. I understand that is what you are here to testify to, about the agricultural end of it. I am asking you this question, Mr. Bailey: Suppose the Hopkins land had been sold to these so-called actual settlers, at $2.50 an acre within the last 10 or 15 years, they could have turned around, couldn't they, and sold these Hopkins lands for from $30 to $50 an acre, couldn't they?

A. I have been told that they could have been sold for $40 an acre.

Q. Don't you know they could have sold them for at least $30 an acre any day almost?

A. There has been times when it could have been sold for that, I am satisfied of it, yes.

Q. Well, now, then, these actual settlers, buying at $2.50 an acre that character of lands, when they got the deed, next day they could have sold it for $30, couldn't they, per acre?

A. Well, perhaps they could, yes.

Q. Well, now, do you mean to tell me that they would not have passed the title to these lands to the timber investor or speculator, under those circumstances?

A. Not in all cases.

Q. Not all cases, but in the most of cases they would, wouldn't they?

A. Well, now, that is pretty hard for me to say what people would do.

Q. Well, don't you know that that would be the case, the natural thing to do ?

A. Well, I don't know that it would, no, I don't.

Q. Do you want the Court to get the impression that you think they would not do that, when they could make $27.50 an acre by just paying $2.50 and getting the deed, and getting it right back again?

A. Well, what—

Q. Just answer my question.

A. I don't know that I clearly understand the question yet.

Q. That is your answer, is it?

A. Well, I am not prepared to say what people would do in those instances, but I can only speak from personal acquaintance with people that I do know. If they owned some of those best timbered lands, they would not part with the lands for no $40 an acre.

Q. They would want probably $100 as an investment?

A. They would consider the value of the land much more than the timber that is on it.

Q. Well, they would not consider the timber, then, of any value?

A. They certainly would.

Q. And yet they could sell their claims for five to six or seven thousand dollars a quarter?

A. Some of them, yes.

Q. What did these people who proved up under the Timber and Stone Act, what did they do, most of them, with their quarters? Hold them and sell them to timber people?

A. Most of them sold them. Some of them still hold their claims.

Q. That is, they got them for $2.50 an acre, and sold them for as high as $25 or $30 after holding them a year or two?

A. Well, I will say all the way from $5.00 to $25 and $30.

Q. From $5.00 to $25.00 an acre?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that they would do in two or three years after they have made final proof, paid their $2.50 and got their patent?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Never went on the land, and never struck a tree or cleared an acre on it?

A. They all went on the land, all that I ever knew anything about.

Q. They went on the land and looked at it, under the requirement, as they thought, of the Land Department, which required them to swear they had seen the land?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Some of them would go and look at it half a mile away?

A. I never located anybody in my life that looked at it that far away.

Q. There was a requirement of the Land Department that they had to swear in making their application they had seen the land?

A. They had to testify that they had personally examined each and every legal subdivision.

Q. Yes, and that it was chiefly valuable for timber?

A. It was chiefly valuable for timber.

Q. And was not agricultural?

A. It was not agricultural.

Q. And you have located a great many, and they have been able to sell at from $5.00 to $25.00 an acre?

A. When they have sold, yes.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that under the requirements of the Timber and Stone Act, the affidavit required that they should make oath only that the land was chiefly valuable in its present condition for the timber or stone that was on it. There should be a distinction between the speculator, as one may term the Timber and Stone Act man, which requires no residence on the land, and the settler. His way of looking at it is, that if the land was all sold to Hopkins, it would never benefit anybody but that man Hopkins, while if it was sold in one hundred sixty acre tracts, it would benefit each applicant on that tract, even if they did sell it for the timber that was on it.

Q. If they would sell, however, to an actual settler, a man who would actually settle on the land, for what purpose would he use it? For what purpose have those men who have made bona fide settlements, used the land that they have settled on in this community that you are acquainted with?

Q. Do you understand the question, Mr. Bailey?

A. I don't know that I do.

A. Well, if they would sell it, they would use the money they would get for it, generally speaking, to put themselves some place in a comfortable home, but the most—well, say 50 per cent of it, would be inhabited.

Q. Now, there are men, are there not, Mr. Bailey, who have taken up lands, even under the Homestead Act, merely for the purpose of speculating in the lands, not for the purpose of making it a home, as you would judge from their actions after making proof?

A. Well, in my opinion there has been.

Q. Now, isn't there a distinction between those men and the man who has taken up the land with the intention of making his home on it, farming it?

A. There is.

Q. Then, if these lands were sold in 160-acre tracts, to actual settlers, the lands would be disposed of practically as the Government lands have under the Homestead laws?

A. Along the same lines; couldn't be otherwise—couldn't.

Q. And fraud could be guarded against in the same manner that the Government guards against fraud?

A. Certainly it could be.

Whereupon witness testified, that he has spoken of this Jenny Creek timber, but there is no other timber in that area that compares with that as to value or stand. It is said to be, by all large holders of timber lands, the finest body of sugar pine in the United States, and it is not a fair comparison as to the area with which he is acquainted as to the timber value.

Whereupon GRANT TAYLOR, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he lives at Winchester, Douglas County, Oregon, and has lived in that county about fourteen years, eight years of which he lived in Winchester. He had a farm there above Winchester about a mile east on the North Umpqua, consisting of four hundred and seventy-nine acres. He sold that and does not own it now. He farmed about seventy-five acres of it, raised potatoes, corn, grain, and hay, and did general farming and had stock on the place. The land that he farmed was along the river, but the pasture land was rolling. He has cruised timber some. He followed locating and looking over land for companies about eight years and has cruised some land for people and made reports as to the land, and as to some of these lands in these reports he reported on the farming possibilities, soil, and matters of that kind, and in some of them he merely gave the estimates of the timber. He is acquainted with the possibilities of farming the part of Douglas County over which he has been, and he is so acquainted from his actual experience as a farmer and his observation of the farms he has seen. Before going to Douglas County, he lived three years at Salem, Oregon, and in Oregon altogether about seventeen years. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259," he is familiar with township 22, ranges 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 west, inclusive, and as far south as township 26, ranges 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 west. He obtained his knowledge of these lands in looking over the timber and locating. In locating people and cruising the timber, he would run the lines ordinarily of a section or subdivision of the land that he was looking at. If the timber was removed from those lands, marked in green on Defendant's Exhibit 259, in that area with which he is acquainted, he would say that 50 per cent of it could be rendered suitable for cultivation,—by cultivation, meaning tillage of the soil,—basing his opinion upon his knowledge of farming as carried on in the communities in the vicinity of the land. This average would apply to all these lands with which he is acquainted. Some places, a man could farm a hundred and sixty acres, and other places he could not get more than ten or twenty acres on a hundred and sixty acres,—that would vary as to the various tracts, the character of the land, the character of the country.

Q. Mr. Taylor, in your opinion, would these lands if divided into 160-acre tracts be suitable for actual settlement, for a man to go on there and engage in farming, for the purpose of making it his business, and for the purpose, of course, of supporting his family, as an ordinary homesteader would do?

A. Oh, probably one-third of the land could be cultivated and made homes of.

Whereupon, upon cross examination, witness testified, that he is forty-nine years old. His place is about a mile east of Winchester and Winchester is about five miles and a half from Roseburg. The North Umpqua is quite a considerable stream at Winchester. It rises up near Crater Lake and empties at Winchester Bay into the Pacific Ocean. He has been a timber cruiser and timber locator for about eight years, and he has perhaps located a hundred and fifty timber claims in that time. He was working for himself when he first started locating parties from the eastern states. When he started out, he charged these people about fifty dollars a claim, but finally got up to two hundred dollars after claims got scarce. As a timber locator for these people, he would take them out, show them the land, show them the lines, take them around the lines. He kept a list of what he thought was the best available quarters of timber. He had maps of them and has them yet. He located quite a number of people under the Timber and Stone Act and a few under the Homestead Act. Quite a number of these people were from Portland, some from the state of Washington and some from the eastern states. Locating began actively about seven years ago, and timber first began to be considered an object of value about ten years ago. These people that he located, finally got title to the lands, some of them sold, and some have them yet, and some of them held the land for investment. They were timber lands. A good timber quarter runs from three million to ten million feet, some of them, some better. A ten million quarter section on the Umpqua that could be logged is worthy about fifty cents a thousand for stumpage. In buying these lands, they usually bought a hundred and sixty acres, and took the title to the land.

"Q. Now when you say that probably one-third of these lands could be made farming lands, you mean after the timber is cleared off?

A. Yes.

Q. And the stumps are grubbed up and made so it could be plowed?

A. Yes."

He never applied to purchase any of this railroad land and he never located any of these people on any railroad lands. These locations were all in Douglas county that he made and were made in the timber belt.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that he spoke of one-third of these one hundrd and sixty acre tracts, he thought, as being suitable for the purposes mentioned, and a man could settle on hundred and sixty acre tracts of these lands with only ten or twelve acres of plow land, and make a living on them for himself and his family. That would depend somewhat on the man that located there. When he estimated one-third, he estimated that that would, in his opinion, make the living that he is accustomed to.

Whereupon, upon recross examination, witness testified, that these men that would go on there without any means at all, would have to work outside for a while to get something to make their little improvements and help them clear up the land.

Whereupon G. E. KELLER, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is thirty-eight years old, lives three miles south of Dillard, in Douglas County, Oregon, and has lived in Oregon since 1885. His occupation, since he has grown to man's estate, has been mostly farming and laboring in Oregon. His step-father was a farmer. Witness farms about twenty-five acres at the present time. His farm is located in section 7, township 29 south, range 6 west, and he raises principally garden, hay, stock, but not grain to thresh. He raises grain to feed. He uses wheat and oats for hay, and vetch. He is acquainted with the farming business in that locality. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259," Dillard is situated in township 29 south, range 6 west. He is practically acquainted with that whole scope of country there, township 29, ranges 6 and 7, township 30-6 and 7, and east half of this particularly, the east half of townships 29 and 30-7, and he is acquainted with these up above Dillard (pointing to yellow field just above Dillard). Those townships contain a substantial amount of unsold railroad land. There are settlers living in these townships on government land, adjacent or near unsold lands of the railroad company, as indicated by the green markings, and they are engaged in farming and agriculture. That locality is pretty thickly settled, and the lands they are using are of the same general character principally as the railroad sections. He would say that 66 2-3 per cent of these railroad lands could be rendered suitable for cultivation after removing the timber or brush, and by cultivation meaning tillage of the soil, removing such of the timber or brush as would be necessary to put them in a state of cultivation.

Q. Now, if those lands should be taken by actual settlers in quantities of 160 acres, by contiguous 40-acre tracts, what is your opinion as to the number that would be, the percentage that would be suitable for settlement, and would furnish support to a settler such as a homesteader?

A. I think 50 or 75 per cent in different sections.

Whereupon witness testified, that these settlers or farmers raised in this vicinity, grain, all kinds of small grain, corn, all kinds of berries, fruits, tomatoes and melons—all kinds of farm products. There are farms there, all the way from two-acre farms up to two thousand acres. There are not so many of these thousand-acre farms now as there were. Most of these big farms have been subdivided. The average acreage of these farmers who own and farm and use the land for farming purposes in the vicinity of these railroad lands, is from two acres to four hundred acres, and he supposed about an average farm, take the country through, would be about thirty or thirty-five acres. Most of these people live on the land and follow the pursuit of farming.

Q. In your opinion, Mr. Keller, what has been the effect of the failure of the Railroad Company to fulfill the conditions of this grant, in failing to sell to actual settlers at $2.50 an acre, in tracts of 160 acres, and in withdrawing the land from the market?

A. I should say it had retarded settlement to a certain extent, quite an extent.

Whereupon, upon cross examination, witness testified, that he had taken a homestead of forty acres in section 7, township 29 south, range 6 west, in 1896, lived on it three years and commuted it. He paid two dollars and a half an acre for it. It was in a railroad section. He did not live there at the time the railroad grant was made, but he had heard that there was a man who was squatting on there, his settlement was initiated before the grant took effect, and this man afterwards abandoned it and it became public land. It was not railroad land at the time witness filed on it. Witness cleared about six acres of this forty-acre tract, and the man who preceded him had not cleared any. The balance of the forty acres had very little timber, but was pasture and brush. This forty is southwest of Dillard, three miles by the road survey, and witness lives on this land and makes his home there. He does not own any other land besides this forty but he farms other land, having a lease of a hundred and sixty acres adjoining. It is not all open land; there are about ten or twelve acres on this 160 acres that is plowed, and a lot more that is slashed, and a lot more of it is open land that he does not farm but uses for grazing purposes. He does not run a stock farm to any great extent, but raises a few cattle, milk cows, chickens, garden stuff for sale, and sells his garden stuff at Dillard or Roseburg. He sells a few potatoes, just a few strawberries, a few chickens occasionally, and eggs and butter and cattle. The number of cattle that he sells varies with different years, he sells from one to five head. He raises hogs for his own meat, but does not sell any. The land around in that vicinity is not all fenced, there is a good deal of land out to the common. This land, other than the railroad land that is not fenced, belongs to different settlers. They have not fenced all their land. They have fenced a little piece where their buildings are, where the land is cleared, and the balance is left open. These settlers do just about the same as he does principally. Their stock can go on the common, any place they want to, and if a man wants to keep stock off his land, he must fence against it, that is the general rule in farming country, especially in timbered country.

He pastures the railroad land and doesn't pay anything for it, and pastures the government land just the same. The railroad pays the taxes, if anybody pays it, on these lands, and the farmers adjacent get the benefit of any pasturage. He does not cut any wood on any railroad land, and people do not make a practice of cutting wood on railroad lands. He never applied to purchase any railroad land directly from the company and never made any application to the company on one of these blanks, by which parties apply to the company to purchase one hundred and sixty acres at two dollars and a half an acre.

Q. You have heard about Mr. Leavengood out there at Roseburg, working up 3000 or 4000 people in Douglas county on lands, didn't you?

A. I have heard of it.

He has never done any of that and he is not one of Leavengood's applicants and never located any homesteads other than his own. Dillard is an old settled part of Douglas county, old man Dillard was an old pioneer who came there in the '50s and took a donation claim where Dillard is. The railroad went through it and bought its right of way through his place. A good deal of that land around Dillard was taken under the Donation law. It is sort of little valleys and foothills around there. Most of the railroad land that is left, with which he is acquainted, is back in the foothills generally. Not all of the best agricultural railroad land that was there, has been bought a long time ago by farmers, but that which was the easiest to get at, closest down to Dillard and in that vicinity, was bought by people, farmers and others, a good while ago. The unsold railroad land in that section that he speaks of, south of Dillard and southwest of Dillard, is on Looking-Glass Creek, about ten or twelve miles from Dillard, from this yellow land shown on "Defendants' Exhibit 259." That is all open country up as far as Ten Mile, and south of Ten Mile at Olalla is open country. As one goes further up the Looking-glass, the valley narrows along the Looking-glass, and there are some Donation Land Claims on the Looking-glass away south of Olalla, and that was settled away back in the '50s. The railroad quarters that are left in there are covered more or less with timber and brush and hills and some rock. Some of the hills are tolerably high and tolerably steep.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that this six-mile limit as shown on Defendants' Exhibit 259 of the Roseburg and Coos Bay Military Wagon Road comes nearly down to the limits, down very near the town of Dillard—it comes to Dillard. That land, according to this map, was lost to the grant by reason of the grant to the Roseburg and Coos Bay Military Wagon Road. He knows that as a matter of history. He knows that in south of Dillard there, this wagon-road grant is from Dillard north, as shown on the map, south of Dillard one will observe the green markings on the map within a mile of Dillard there to the south. The green markings on Defendants' Exhibit 259 show that the railroad holdings are practically intact.

Q. A very few of the blue markings appearing in these townships. Now, in 29-6, according to the Bill of Complaint, Mr. Keller, the Railroad Company still holds 120 acres in Section 1, 223 acres in Section 3, all of Section 5, 416 acres in Section 7, 446 acres in Section 9, 195 acres in Section 11, 600 acres in Section 13, 345 acres in Section 15, 309 acres in Section 17, 292 acres in Section 19, 492 acres in Section 21, 520 acres in Section 23, 400 acres in Section 25, 560 acres in Section 27, 160 acres in Section 29, 320 acres in Section 33, and 240 acres in Section 35. In Township 30 South, Range 6 West the Railroad Company still holds 464 acres in Section 1, 470 acres in Section 3, 476 acres in Section 5, 622 acres in Section 7, 480 acres in Section 9, 400 acres in Section 11, 120 acres in Section 15, 495 acres in Section 19, 440 acres in Section 21, 40 acres in Section 23, 111 acres in Section 25, 320 acres in Section 29, 131 acres in Section 31, 40 acres in Section 35. In Township 29 South, Range 7 West, the Railroad Company still holds all of Section 1, Section 11, Section 13, Section 15, Section 31 and Section 33, and 229 acres in Section 3, 162 acres in Section 5, 458 acres in Section 9, 200 acres in Section 17, 617 acres in Section 19, 280 acres in Section 21, 598 acres in Section 27, 240 acres in Section 29. And in 30 South, Range 7 West the Railroad Company still holds all of Sections 3, 9, 15, 17, 19, 21, 25, 29 and 31 and 420 acres in Section 1, 339 acres in Section 5, 521 acres in Section 7, 440 acres in Section 11, 480 acres in Section 13, 520 acres in Section 27, 440 acres in Section 33, and 600 acres in Section 35.

A. I think you made a mistake.

Q. Now, from the green markings on the map, Mr. Keller, isn't it a fact that these descriptions I have read here include practically all of the railroad lands that they obtained under the original grant as shown by the markings on the map?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the character of the soil in these lands, Mr. Keller?

A. What is the character of the soil?

Q. Yes, the general character of the soil.

A. In which way?

Q. Is it a clay black loam, or what?

A. Oh, its composition! Well, it varies.

Q. Please state the kind of soil.

A. Some of it is sandy. Some of it is dark loam. Part of it is clay.

Q. Is it a productive soil, or are these soils productive?

A. They are.

Q. What do they raise on them?

A. Well, the people that live on them, they raise most anything they want to grow—fruit, berries, grains and gardens.

Whereupon, upon recross examination, witness testified that some of these railroad lands were pretty rocky in that twelve miles square, and to a certain extent were tolerably steep. The country south and west of Dillard, going over the ridge to Looking-glass, south of Olalla, is pretty rough in there; that is, in that other township, though.

Q. Well, practically more than half of these railroad lands are rough and sort of mountainous?

A. Well, they ain't all level, sure.

Q. How?

A. They ain't all level.

Q. No, they are not level like this floor here?

A. No, not by a long way.

Q. Pretty steep and rocky in places?

A. Yes, in places they are."

In some places there are south hillsides that are practically without any soil, but have a little grass in the spring, that burns out by the first of June. The north hillsides that have oak grubs on them, or shrubery of that kind, have a better soil. As a general thing, the better the timber, the better the soil, the more there is on it. Some of these lands have saw timber on them. Dillard is a very small place, with a postoffice, station and two warehouses, and has a store, hotel, and several dwellings around there. There is no sawmill there now and no manufacturing. There is a prune dryer there. At Dillard and around there, there are some pretty good prune orchards in the valley.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified that it is generally an agricultural country around Dillard there.

Whereupon JOHN NEUNER, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he is thirty-one years of age, resides at Glendale, Douglas County, Oregon, and has lived in Douglas County, Oregon, about eighteen years, practically ever since he came to Oregon. He was a farmer, engaged in grain farming—general farming—for about fourteen years on the Umpqua River at a place called Day's Creek, situated in the Umpqua valley on the South Umpqua, in sections 2 and 9, in township 30 south, range 4 west. They raised all kinds of small grains, small fruits, and all kinds of stock that are generally raised in that particular country. They farmed mostly on bench lands there in Day's Creek. Bench land is land that is lying on a higher raise than that of the lower lands. The lower land through there is called bottom land, and then farther back on the next raise is the bench land. They also farmed some of the hill land. It is quite high up on the slopes. The bench lands are not as a rule necessarily level; they are also siding and sloping, some slope quite abruptly. Quite a per cent of this land was timbered when they went there. They cleared up a good portion of it, perhaps, on the entire tract, about one hundred acres. They farmed about six hundred acres there—quite an extensive farm for that country. He was farming with his father, George Neuner. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259," he is more particularly acquainted with the land in townships 29 and 30 south, ranges 3 to 7 west, and that portion lying south for two townships on ranges 3 to 7 west, inclusive. That would include townships 30, 31 and 32 south, ranges 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 west, in southern Douglas County. He has been over about every quarter of that country. He is thoroughly familiar with it, has been over it for the last six years, more or less all the time. He has cruised a good deal of that land in there and has had also a little real estate experience in through there. He is in the livery business, too. He has been over that land a good deal, with timber owners, and also with farmers, etc., small farmers and stock raisers. In his opinion, eliminating the yellow lands which were never owned by the railroad company, and the blue lands which have been sold by the company, 75 to 80 per cent of that land, especially the railroad sections marked in green in township 30 south and the ranges mentioned by him, could be used for agriculture in the broadest terms, meaning by broadest terms, stock raising and the general pursuits of agriculture. That is, after the timber is off, 30 to 40 per cent of it could be made suitable for cultivation. About 70 per cent of township 31 south, ranges 3 to 7 west, of railroad land would be fit for agriculture, and about 25 to 30 per cent for cultivation. About 80 per cent of township 32 south, ranges 3 to 7 west, would be fit for settlement, and about 30 to 35 per cent of it tillable. There are settlers or farmers residing on lands adjacent or contiguous to the railroad lands and of the same general character, and that applies to all three townships that he has mentioned. In his opinion, 75 per cent of that land in township 30 south, ranges 3 to 7 west, if it were divided into legal subdivisions of one hundred and sixty acres each, would support families, and about 70 per cent of township 31 south, ranges 3 to 7 west, would be suitable for that purpose and could be utilized by a farmer to earn his support. It is a little rougher, the hills are a little higher. About 75 per cent of township 32 south, ranges 3 to 7 west, could be so utilized, meaning in each case that if a man would go on a hundred and sixty acres of it as a homesteader, it would be suitable for settlement purposes. There are people living on one hundred and sixty acres of land in that vicinity, making a living there and earning a support.

Q. How long have settlers been in this area of this country? I am eliminating now the lands that were lost to the company by reason of prior entries and land grants, as noted on the yellow field in the map.

A. Well, that country has been a good deal of it, a good portion of it, has been settled ever since I came to the country.

Q. Mr. Neuner, in your opinion, what has been the effect of the Oregon and California Railroad Company's failure to fulfill the conditions of the grant, and sell to actual settlers in 160 acre tracts?

Q. I will add, in this area that you are acquainted with?

A. Why, to the best of my knowledge, and which I think I have a thorough knowledge of, it has greatly retarded the development of that country, in the way of keeping people out that were looking for homes. A great many people were looking for, have been for the last six or seven years, to my knowledge, have been looking for homesteads, and they cannot be secured, because the Government land that was there was taken up during the timber rush by outside speculators, and consequently that did not leave very much Government land; and that that it did leave was so far apart that it was difficult for people to get in there with families and get schools and roads.

Whereupon witness testified that a good portion of this area contains more or less timber all through it—it is called a timber country. From his knowledge of this general country, as he has observed it, it was, in its original state, practically all a timbered country to a more or less extent, and the lands back on the benches and slopes required clearing generally in that country before they could be cultivated. But the creek and river bottoms were, to his knowledge, cleared. The area covered by the creek bottoms, as compared with the lands now in cultivation in that country, is small. The country was developed by the people going in and settling on these lands in that community, clearing them up, and following it with general farming and stock raising. The first settlers occupied the bottom lands, and that was the easiest to clear. That would naturally follow in any country. Settlement has not progressed very much as time has gone on. As he stated once before, the timber—pretty much of it—pretty much of the land was taken up by the timber speculator, and what little there was left was settled to some extent where it was accessible to roads and schools. But there being so much of this railroad land held up made it difficult for them to get schools—ordinary school, church, etc. Farming has extended up farther into the hills and valleys as time has progressed. He knows of lands occupied, adjacent to railroad lands, of the same general character, which have been used for farming purposes, from which farmers earn a support for themselves and families residing on the land.

Whereupon, upon cross examination, witness testified, that he is in the timber business to some extent, and has made timber locations for a few people in Douglas county. He located nearly all people that came in from Spokane, largely Spokane people—a few. These so-called locators were men who were seeking to buy timber quarters under the Timber and Stone Act. This was about six years ago. The first rush for timber was about twelve years ago. People took up timber lands largely through this particular section, a great many Eastern people. They did not take up homesteads so much at that time. they got it through the Timber and Stone Act, and he presumes they also began to buy railroad land about that time, twelve years ago, in the timbered area. Some of the timber people that bought some twelve years ago and since in Douglas County, to his knowledge, are the Myrtle Creek Lumber Company, which bought quite a large area of land up there, and W. P. Johnson. There are a large number of timber holdings in that county, large timber holdings.

Q. These timber lands that were taken under the Timber and Stone Act, and a few under the Homestead Act that you know about, were they good timber lands as a rule they got, about as good as they could get?

A. Yes, about as good, naturally.

Q. About how many million feet to a quarter section is considered a good timber quarter, good average timber quarter?

A. About 3,000,000, an average.

Q. Have you any judgment as to what these unsold railroad lands would average in the timber holdings, taking now the timber-lands, and excluding the bald hills and the foothills where there is no fir timber.

A. Excluding the bald hills?

Q. Excluding the bald hills, and excluding the bare hills and the hills covered with brush and with oak grubs—small brush as you have there in that country, and including the pine and fir and cedar and hemlock and spruce, and such timber as is commonly called saw timber, about what would be the average, in your judgment, of these timber-lands per quarter section?

A. About 3,000,000 feet.

Q. Now, what is the best stand of timber that you, as a cruiser and a real estate man, and as a citizen of Douglas County, familiar with these matters, know of in Douglas County? About the largest stand per quarter section.

A. In that area that I spoke of, about 6,000,000 feet would be considered the best—among the best.

Whereupon witness testified that the highest price of such a quarter section, within his knowledge and observation, would be about three thousand dollars. He would figure that the stumpage would be about fifty cents. Land has sold at a higher stumpage in some of the more favored quarters, and as high as a dollar in some parts, depending upon accessibility to logging streams or convenience to transportation of some kind. If a man could get a dollar, or if they sold it at the rate of a dollar a thousand, and it carried six million feet, that would be six thousand dollars for a quarter. Most of his locating people on these timber claims was done by other people, he merely got the cruise, looked over the land for them, and the timber for them, and they usually brought them in, and these other people would give him about half of what they would charge; that is, a timber locator would come to him and say, "I have a customer now, and I want you to cruise the land, and I will divide with you the charge, whatever we get." They did not get as high as two hundred and fifty dollars a quarter, about two hundred dollars was about as high as they got.

Q. Did you ever locate any of these so-called actual settlers that Leavengood and others found out there in Douglas county and brought some of them from the east?

A. No.

Whereupon witness testified that he located no one who used blank forms and made tenders to the Company for railroad land. He had nothing to do with and knows nothing about that. He heard that these people charged fifty dollars, but has no personal knowledge of that.

Q. Did you ever see any of these notices on these railroad quarters, where these actual settlers had posted notices that they claimed it under this Act?

A. I think I have noticed some of the notices, yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever see any cabins where they have built shake cabins, and put a little bedding in, and a stove?

A. No. No, not that I know of.

Whereupon witness testified that there were not very many in Douglas County, within his knowledge. That began about five years ago, after withdrawal of the lands in 1907, 1908, about the time that the Legislature adopted a memorial in 1907, asking Congress to forfeit this grant.

Q. Then the whole country began to look for these timber lands, didn't they?

A. Yes, there were quite a good many through there, to my knowledge, a good many people moved up on this railroad land.

Q. Yes, they all thought they were going to get the land right away.

A. Well, not so many. A good many wanted to get the more favorable places to make homes of it.

Q. Well, some times there were four or five tried to get the same quarter section?

A. Well, not to my knowledge.

Q. Well, those people that moved in have moved out again, haven't they?

A. Yes, they have moved out now. Well, not all of them. I know of some that are still there yet, cultivating the soil.

Q. Farming some of the railroad lands?

A. Yes.

Whereupon witness testified, that to his knowledge there are two men with families farming this railroad land. They are at Day's Creek, and have built houses there—improvements, house, barn, outbuildings. One of them is in section 35, township 29 south, range 3 west, and his name is C. N. Wood, and he has cleared about twenty-five acres and the balance is brush and timber, and has a little saw timber on it. The other man is Jesse Tiller, who has about thirty acres cleared, the balance of the land that he claims is oak timber, this oak timber is not very valuable down there. It is not saw timber, it is not just oak grubs, and has no commercial value excepting for wood. There is not much saw timber on this quarter. These men did not offer two dollars and a half an acre to the Company and then go and settle on the land. They wanted to buy it, to his knowledge—at least they told him so. They offered to buy it of Eberlein of San Francisco. One of them has been there for about six or seven years, has a pretty good house, barn, outbuildings, fences. Witness does not know whether the man is taking chances as to whether he can get title or not, and does not think the man has any contract with the railroad company—does not know whether he has or not. The nearest postoffice to them is Day's Creek, which is just a postoffice. A good deal of this land he is speaking of now that he has been over there, is on Day's Creek, which flows into the Umpqua river at a point eight miles east of Canyonville; the other lands that he was talking about. Cow Creek runs up through there, and the railroad runs along Cow Creek from Riddle to Glendale. The country is very rough right through where the railroad runs—very rough. The railroad lands there in sight of the track from the train have not been logged very much, it is not good timber, it is rather poor quality right along the track there. Those hills on either side, the land is not very good—not along the track, and this condition extends either way from the railroad a quarter of a mile, and when one gets away that distance there is pretty good land—plateaus and timber, land and timber—fir, pine and cedar. There is some little mining in that section, largely placer. Cow Creek Canyon is one of the worst and most rugged mountain canyons in western Oregon, to his knowledge. The land that his father is on is a Donation claim. It is the Donation claim, he thinks, of John Day, who settled along in the fifties, and was one of the oldest places in Douglas county. Of the six hundred acres of that land that they had when they went there, there was about five hundred acres clear, and that is pretty good farming land yet. They raised grain and stock—they hauled out a great deal of the grain to the railroad. They are not there now. He doesn't know in regard to shipping conditions of grain now, and does not know that they are shipping flour from the Willamette Valley and eastern Oregon into southern Oregon today to feed the people. They used to raise a good deal of grain in the Umpqua Valley, and those warehouses at Dillard and Riddles all carried considerable grain in the early eighties. They raise a good deal of grain yet in Cow Creek and Umpqua Valleys and ship out a good deal. Some of it is milled in the county, and some of it is shipped out yet, to his knowledge. He does not know whether it is shipped out of the County, but it is shipped to various parts of the County, it might be to some mill in the County. He does not think, generally, that there is as much grain raised in Douglas County as there was twenty years ago.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that they are devoting their lands that were formerly in grain a great deal of them, to diversified farming in Douglas county, and there has been a good deal of subdivision in that section. There is a tract at Sutherland that was quite a large farm at one time, north of Roseburg, that has been subdivided and sold. In making his estimates on the amount of this land that is agricultural land, that could be tilled and which is suitable for settlement, he has taken into consideration the rough lands mentioned in his cross examination. Six million feet of timber on a quarter section is a very large stand of timber for that area. It is the best through there. This timber is not one big dense forest.

Q. Please describe, in your own language, the way the timber lays there.

A. It is considered a timber country, because there is oak grubs and oak through there; but nearly all the southern slopes, or a great portion of the southern slopes are covered with this oak grub, and also open draws, especially in the draws a good deal of this land is open, and the northern slopes are more or less covered with heavy growth of timber, fairly heavy; and also some of the western slopes, a good many of the western slopes are burns—areas that have been burned over. The wind has some time or other come in there and blown down a great many of the trees, and then fire caught them.

Whereupon witness testified, that these burns and draws and other open places he has mentioned are lands that would be suitable for cultivation—farming and ranching there, they clear up the land largely by stock, and it does not take so much of that land there to support a family. Twenty acres of that land there would support a family, and they can devote the rest to grazing. These people who came in from Washington and filed on Timber and Stone claims were not people looking for agricultural lands to settle on. They were speculators purely and were looking solely for timber. In some instances, these people took up lands under the Timber and Stone Act that contained little or no timber. There was a wild rush about that time to obtain timber, people became over-excited over the subject of timber. There is a considerable area in these railroad lands of which he has testified that contains no merchantable timber, that would be suitable for agricultural purposes—that is, for actual tillage of the soil, and he would say that about 30 per cent of it which contains no merchantable timber could be rendered suitable for cultivation.

Q. Now, Mr. Neuner, if the Railroad Company were to open up these lands, and sell them to actual settlers, or if they should come into the hands of actual settlers, men engaged in farming, in your opinion, would that assist the people in Douglas County in raising a sufficient amount of grain to supply the demands of the community?

Do you understand the question, Mr. Neuner?

A. Yes, sir. I would say that it would. But Douglas County, if I may state that?

Q. Certainly.

A. Douglas County, especially southern Douglas, is given up to diversified farming. There is a great deal of dairying through there now, fruit raising, poultry raising, and that way it would materially develop the country.

Whereupon, upon recross examination, witness testified, that he had cruised one of these railroad sections at West Fork. He made an application for section 11, township 32 south, range 8 west, about five years ago to the Company, and applied to buy it. He cannot recall the cruise, but it was light, it was about eleven million as near as he could say. He wanted it for milling purposes. The Company told him it was not on the market then, but if they should sell it he would get the first chance at it, and the Company did not sell it to him. It was fir timber, about a quarter of a mile from the railroad near Glendale, West Fork.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that he never made an application to purchase as a settler, with the intention of settling on the land. The railroad company did not, to his knowledge, sell any of that land to those people that he has spoken of as having lived on railroad land, farming it. He applied for the entire section of railroad land mentioned. It was not farming land, some of it could have been agricultural land when the timber was removed, and he had land value in his mind when he applied to purchase it.

Whereupon, upon recross examination, witness testified, that he had both the timber value and the land value in mind when he applied to purchase. One of these men who went on to this railroad land, these two farmers that he said were cultivating it now, one went on about six or seven years ago, and the other went on about five years ago. He thinks they went on just before 1907. There was no agitation about it before they went on to his knowledge.

Q. Did you know about this $2.50 an acre clause in this Act of April 10, 1869, or did you hear about that before that?

A. I heard about it, yes. I knew that they were selling at that when the land was still on the market.

Q. Well, did you know that this clause in the Act of Congress of April 10, 1869, that they claimed that the company had to sell it to actual settlers at $2.50 an acre? Did you know about that?

A. Yes, I knew about that.

Q. Now, that is a matter that was known in Douglas County a good many years ago, wasn't it?

A. Well, I dont' know whether it was known generally or not. Those people that followed that line of work—they were acquainted with the conditions?

Q. People who handled real estate titles were pretty familiar with that claim that was made before this late agitation in 1907, weren't they?

A. Well, I was. I don't know in regards to the others.

Q. Don't you know that the question was a matter of common discussion among attorneys of southern Oregon for as far back as 1896?

A. I didn't know that.

Q. You didn't know that yourself?

A. No.

Q. Do you know that it was made a question in a Jackson County tax case in 1896, when Judge Watson was representing Jackson County in that litigation over the taxes in Jackson County?

A. I didn't know that.

Q. But you knew it before the Government commenced this agitation?

A. Oh, yes, this recent agitation.

Whereupon witness testified, that these two families living out there were not on quarters; one of them, Wood, has forty acres, and the other man has eighty acres. The forty acres would be worth perhaps about fifty dollars an acre, and the eighty would be worth about a thousand dollars. He does not know whether the railroad company is paying the taxes on it and these men are getting the benefit of it. The eighty acres lies on top of a mountain called the Bland Mountain, that is why the value would not be so great. On a straight line, these places are about two miles apart. That on the mountain is worth about twelve to fifteen dollars an acre. It is not worth as much as the other forty. The man is making a good living there. The forty acres is worth about twenty-five dollars an acre,—about $1000.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that if the railroad company would sell to these men at two dollars and a half an acre, or at such price as these men were willing to pay, the company could relieve itself from the payment of taxes on these lands.

Whereupon H. J. MILLER, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is twenty-nine years old, resides at Oakland, Douglas County, Oregon, and has lived in that county about seventeen years. At present he and his father are in the manufacture of black oak wagon material. Prior to his going into that business, he worked in the woods considerably; he also did some locating, and ran compass for several different cruisers—acted as compassman for timber cruisers. He is somewhat acquainted with the farming conditions in Douglas County. He worked on a ranch when he first came to southern Oregon for a couple of years, and has had actual experience in farming—has farmed some. He has located people, that is, he took them out and showed them the land, ran out the lines. These people were desiring to make entry of public lands, both homesteads and timber claims, timber and stone applications. He would think, from the appearance of these people who generally desired to file a timber and stone application, that they were people that were fairly well off, that were city people usually. He would think that the homesteaders were a poorer class of people, men looking for homes who desired to engage in the pursuit of farming or ranching. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259," he is familiar with townships 23 to 25, both inclusive, ranges 3 to 5 west, both inclusive, and has also been in township 23, 2 west. He has been over a great portion of these lands personally and knows the formation and the growth that are on them, and the character of the soil. He would think, as a whole, that 30 to 35 per cent of the land in this area could be rendered suitable for cultivation. The land in these townships is pretty generally the same, unless it is back in township 23 south, range 3 west. There it is more mountainous land, but he does not believe the percentage of that land there that could be tilled would be less. It might be a little less, perhaps, but taking it as a whole, he thinks 30 per cent of it would be about right. Generally speaking, if these lands were divided into a hundred and sixty acre tracts, this average would hold good as to each tract. There might be a hundred and sixty acres that did not have that much—that had practically no farming land at all, while other places might be almost all tillable land. There are lands in there similarly situated that are cultivated, that is, lands that have been timbered. There are settlers in that country that he has described with whom he is acquainted. They raise hay for their stock and garden stuff and some fruit. He thinks that one could raise hay on these lands, most any kind, fruit, garden truck of any kind. Speaking of hay, he means oats and vetch. Vetch is a pretty good crop. Wheat and oats are used as hay in that country. They raise potatoes, cabbage, corn; fruits grow on these lands—apples, prunes, plums, berries, grapes. The size of the tracts cultivated by the settlers in this area in the vicinity of the railroad lands, or on lands of a similar character, depends, of course, on how much of a place they have. Lots of those fellows in there have big ranches, but they farm from ten to thirty, forty or fifty acres, ten to fifty acres he would say. These farms were generally timbered in their natural state, but they have slashed the brush and burned it, and they have been pretty generally cleared.

Q. Mr. Miller, in your opinion, what has been the effect of the Railroad Company's failure to comply with the conditions of this grant, and in failing to sell the land at $2.50 an acre to actual settlers in tracts of 160 acres? What has been the effect of that failure to comply with these conditions upon the community there?

Q. Go ahead and answer.

A. I think it has kept back settlement and retarded the development of the country.

Q. Are there many demands in your community for homestead lands, people want them to settle on?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And actually engage in agriculture?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you able to find any open Government lands?

A. No.

Q. Have they been entered?

A. All the desirable ones.

Whereupon, upon cross examination, witness testified, that he lives at Oakland, Oregon, and is twenty-nine years old, and commenced to locate people on timber lands about ten years ago. To do that, they take them out and find the corners, and show them the land in general, and their fees were usually from one hundred to two hundred and fifty dollars. They never cruised a claim for the man to see how much timber he was going to get approximately. The man was his own judge, usually, whether the quarter was desirable or not. A man could tell pretty well, he thinks, when he looks over a quarter, about what it would run, just by looking at it in a general way. As a locator, he has had some experience in cruising parties, and when he was commissioned by a man to go out and get a timber quarter, he exercised his best judgment, but showed him the land and told him about how much he thought it would run. Having experience with cruising parties and having been in this timbered country for a number of years, he could tell pretty well, approximately, if it would run one million or three million feet to the quarter section; and acting upon his judgment—the party relying somewhat upon that—with his own eyes looking at the corners and running through the timber, the man decided whether he will locate and pay the price. If the man does not take the quarter, he doesn't get any fee for his work. He tried to get a quarter that would be acceptable. He does not know how many of these quarter sections he has located in the last ten years in Douglas County, in these timbered lands, but approximately he would expect that he has located twenty-five or thirty quarter sections, and of these twenty-five or thirty, he would guess that eight, ten or a dozen were homestead claims.

Q. Did these homestead claimants find satisfactory quarters that you showed, that had good timber on them —these eight or ten, did they take the claims?

A. They took them, yes.

Q. Did you find pretty good timber for them on their quarters?

A. Well, some had timber and some quarters did not have any to speak of.

Q. Some quarters did not have any timber on to speak of?

A. Not of any commercial value.

Whereupon witness testified, that there are not very many open quarter sections of Government land in that country worth taking that are left.

Q. That is what I mean. There are some open quarters on bald hills and rocky points that probably nobody would take except for pasturage? Isn't that true in some parts of Douglas County?

A. Yes, some parts of it, it is.

Some of the vacant land there, perhaps, is practically worthless for timber or for anything excepting it may be for pasture—summer pasture. The average stand of a quarter section in Douglas County would be six or seven million feet—that is not the average, the average, he would say, would be "three million—two and a half or three million feet." These timber claims that he located he thinks would average about three million feet. These railroad lands he says are about 30 per cent agricultural or tillable, or could be made agricultural or tillable, on an average, taking it all over, he means would become such after the timber and brush has been removed or cleared. These ranches that he said were big ranches are stock ranches. They are on the Calapooia, on the headwaters of the Calapooia. These big ranches were taken at a very early date, usually those large ranches were taken in early days, and they were donation claims. Some of them, he thinks, bought additional quarters, he presumes that they bought the land of the original purchaser. Some of these large holders, he thinks, were people who bought from the railroad company for pasturage, or something of that kind, adjacent to their regular holdings.

Q. Well, now, they then got the better part of the railroad land, so far as it being available for agriculture or for grazing was concerned, didn't they, those that bought first?

A. Yes, it was added to their holdings, I presume.

Q. Well, that was only in the last seven or eight years that these railroad lands that are unsold came to be sought after for timber? Isn't that a fact—the last eight or ten years?

A. Well, I don't know how long it has been.

Whereupon witness testified, that the timber demand became active about twelve years ago, he thinks, and the market was most active, timber was at its highest demand, about six years ago, he thinks, about 1906, and he believes it continued through 1907 and on down to date with more or less activity. He applied to purchase some of the railroad timber lands. He gave an attorney ten dollars, and he sent it in, put in an application for him. This was Mr. Dimick of Portland, who was then at Oakland. He does not remember whether he signed a printed blank application or not, but did whatever he was told to do. He does not remember if he offered to pay, in the application, two dollars and a half an acre, that is what they understood they were to pay—that it could be bought for that. He did not select the quarter section applied for and he never saw it and he has forgotten what section it was in—part of it was on Smith River. It was in that dairy country, on the headwaters of the Smith River. He thinks there was some saw timber on this land—there was good land on it, too. He had never been over it before he selected it, but talked with a cruiser that worked in that country who said he had been all over it and said it was good land, and told him it was good timber. He doesn't remember what the estimate was, he doesn't know positively whether it was very good or not because he did not see it. The cruiser told him that he had better take it. He has forgotten the name of the cruiser and does not know where he lives. He never went out on these lands and settled on them. He worked as a compassman for cruisers, with a cruising party—he thinks that Roach is the name and that is the company that is paying taxes on the lands. He thinks it is a large timber company, a Spokane company. He worked as a compassman for the cruisers of that company a couple of weeks. He also worked for a man by the name of Ghormley. He has not cruised any of these unsold railroad lands. He worked a couple of weeks for Ghormley, and he has forgotten who Ghormley was working for. They were individuals cruising timber lands.

Q. Now, you say there were some of these settlers in this general territory that you have described, or on some of these lands in the even sections, and they have small parcels cleared. I suppose you mean they have got all the way from an acre up to twenty-five acres, depending on the length of time they have been on their homesteads or their lands, whatever it is.

A I spoke of the ranchers, didn't I?

Q. Well, do you mean ranchers that have been there a good many years?

A. Yes.

Q. Oh, ranchers that made early settlements in there?

A. Yes, ranchmen and homesteaders.

Q. These ranchers some of them have been there 30 or 40 years, haven't they, up those streams?

A. Some of them, yes.

Q. Some of them have been there, took land under the donation law away back in the early days?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are the people that you referred to?

A. Oh, no; I referred to homesteaders.

Q. Well, some of those homesteaders have settled in there as far back as 1862.

A. I referred to homesteaders, if I remember right, as having approximately 10 to 50 acres.

Q. They have been there 10 to 40 years, some of them, haven't they?

A. A great many of them have. Some of them have not.

Q. They are mostly on streams or little valleys on the headwaters, and some of those streams, aren't they, those you speak of?

A. Some of them are, yes.

Q. Most of them are, are they not?

A. Yes.

Whereupon witness testified,

Q. Did you ever see any abandoned homestead cabins up in the woods where there were people who had apparently made final proof and left their shacks and gone away?

A. I have seen some, yes. I guess they were homestead cabins, they were cabins at least.

They were cabins on timber quarters and they were not occupied and had not been for years, according to the way they appeared, and might have been hunters' cabins, or trappers', so far as he knows. He does not know whether they were really hunters' cabins or not, and he doesn't know that all of them were old abandoned cabins that people had formerly built there on these lands to take them up, some of them were. They were not occupied at the time he saw them, and had not been for years, and were rotting down and abandoned.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that there are extensive clear bottoms along some of the streams where the settlements are on the streams in the vicinity of these railroad lands. These bottom lands are as good lands as they have anywhere. Usually it was heavy timber originally. There are some benches through these mountains that settlers are living on.

Q. Now, you spoke of the abandoned cabins that you knew were homestead cabins. How many of those cabins have you seen that you recall, that you actually know have been homesteads, and used merely for the purpose of obtaining title to land under the homestead law, with the purpose or intention of abandoning them?

A. They were deserted, you mean? They were put there and did not expect to prove up, do you mean?

Q. They were put on there merely as a make-shift to obtain title to the land from the Government?

A. Well, I don't know of any that were put on there with those intentions. I don't know what their intentions were, in fact.

Q. Well, how many abandoned cabins have you seen on claims that you knew were obtained from the Government by homestead entry, that you know had been homesteaded?

A. I don't know more than four or five.

Q. How many settlers who were actually living on their homestead, and making a living from the land, do you know in the vicinity of these railroad lands?

A. I know lots of them.

Mr. Fenton: Homesteads you are speaking of?

A. Homesteads, yes, sir.

Q. Were the lands that are farmed in this community generally timbered lands prior to being put under cultivation?

A. Well, part of them were. Part of them were not.

Q. What were not?

A. It was a prairie; always had been, I guess.

Q. Where is that prairie located, or are there different prairies?

A. Oh, yes, there are different prairies. There is prairies all over, quite often run into a prairie in the woods, you know—open land.

Q. What is their condition?

A. It might have been an old burn, you know.

Q. Is that a general condition throughout this section of the country?

A. Part of it, yes.

Q. Does it extend into these railroad lands? That is, do you find any of the prairies in these railroad lands that you are acquainted with?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon O. M. CARLSON, called as a witness on behalf of the complaintant, and being first duly sworn, testified, that he is thirty-five years old, resides at present in Brownsville for the last year, lived in Oregon since 1900, and has lived in Township 15 South, Range 3 East of the Willamette Meridian, in that neighborhood. Most of the experience in farming that he has had was that he took a homestead there and cultivated it, and part of the time he worked out in the timber and for farmers. His homestead is in Township 15 South, Range 3 East, in Sections 24 and 25. He had farmed prior to that time. He was born and raised on a farm in Sweden. He lived on his homestead until a year ago last fall. He was up in that neighborhood. He got married then, a year ago last fall, but he was single all the time while he had his homestead. He had about four acres under cultivation on his homestead, planted a garden and potatoes, and had the remainder of it seeded in grass. Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, from Brownsville up the river, he has been up clear to Crawfordsville, to the headwaters of the Calapooia, as shown on this map, extending up to Township 15 South, Range 4 East. He has been through from over on the Mohawk from Springfield, all through the Mohawk. From Springfield all through there, through the Mohawk country; he has been on that and through from Crawfordsville over to the Mohawk to Marcola. There is Marcola and Wendling also, and part of McKenzie, from Springfield up to Thurston, Walterville, Leeburg and Vida or Gate Creek, what they really call that, and as far up as Blue River, which is on the McKenzie. He has been up to Leeburg there, south of the river, where he has been working. A considerable portion of that land in there is owned by the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company, who purchased it from the railroad company, as shown by the blue markings. He has a general acquaintance with the lands in the vicinity of Mabel, and general knowledge of the lands in Township 15 South, Range 1 West, north of Mabel, and is acquainted with the lands in Township 17 South, Range 1 West, and that vicinity. He has also been over in there at Camp Creek. The lands up the McKenzie in Township 16 South, Range 2 East, are above Vida, above Gate Creek, some call it Vida. Gate Creek is not marked on the map, and is located in that township and he is acquainted with the southern part of Township 16 South, Range 1 East. He has been over that country, working on the Mohawk, and working on the McKenzie, and traveled through that timber on the trails. He went over there and has been hunting over in there a good deal, and the general character of that land in that country is pretty well timbered, and some openings, some burned off a good many years ago. He is acquainted with the farming conditions in this section of the country, and the lands that are farmed successfully. In his opinion eighty per cent of these lands could be rendered suitable for cultivation; that is, suitable to plowing and raising crops by cultivation, after the timber and brush have been removed. There are lands in that vicinity of the same character as these railroad lands which are farmed; and these farms are occupied by settlers living on them. He has been out over some of these railroad lands; he was out there one year with some timber cruisers of the railroad company and they told him they were railroad cruisers, but he never found out what company they were cruising for. In his opinion the unsold lands of the railroad company would be suitable for homestead purposes. Whereupon on cross examination, witness testified, that his homestead is on the West half of the northwest quarter of Section 25 and the west half of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 15 South, Range 8 East. His nearest post office is Blue River, in Lane County, on the McKenzie River. His homestead is closest to the railroad from Springfield and up on the McKenzie and then he goes from Vida on the wagon road that goes up to the mines. He passes through Vida, and his homestead is probably about 15 miles east of Vida, down on the Calapooia—the headwaters of the Calapooia, which runs into the Willamette at Albany. It must be about 30 or 40 miles from Albany, more than that to his homestead, about 50 miles from Albany; that is, it is about 20 miles up into the mountains from where he leaves the foothills and valley. He took his homestead in 1900. It is mostly saw timber on his homestead. He had never cruised it, or had it cruised. There may be a good 3,000,000 feet on it, for all he knows. It is principally fir, red and yellow, good standard saw timber and some hemlock. Hemlock is good saw timber where it is large enough and is used to make boxes and box shakes for fruit shipments, which is quite an industry in this country. He has about four acres of the 160 acres cleared, in one place. He did not find a clearing there when he started. It was not a burn, it was on the bottom, right on the Calapooia River bottom. It was covered with brush and timber, vine maple brush, the most of it. There was some saw timber on the four acres that he cleared, probably about six or seven big trees. He built a cabin on it and lived in the cabin, and when he went away to work he left his things in the cabin. He would go there and stay a few days and make a garden, and make a little clearing, and then he would go off to work and come back again, he lived there quite a little bit, but of course he had to work out for a living, he could not make a living on the homestead alone. He lived on it five years and kept up this method of working out and going back to his place. He left his bedding, stove and things of that kind in the house when he went away. He locked it up and did not leave anybody in charge. Some of the homesteaders did the same way and some of them were married and stayed on their land with their families, they would go out and work and leave their families at the place, they had to do that to get started. It would take them, he should judge, two or three years to get started. He did not have any money to buy stock with until he got started there, and that was the reason why he did not raise stock and let them roam over the mountains, and make his living that way. He owns this quarter section still. He does not know of any land being sold in there. He does not know whether he could get fifty cents a thousand for it or not, he never offered it for sale. He has heard that the best timber had been bought there from seventy-five cents to a dollar a thousand, but of course that is all he knows.

Q. Well, if it was sold at $1 a thousand, your quarter section having about 3,000,000 feet on it, would be worth about $3,000?

A. Yes, I think it would.

He got married a year ago. There is no wagon road in there, and it was inconvenient to bring a woman in there, so he could not get in there as handy and live there as he did before when he was single. When he was single he could go through the mountains and on trails. That is a timbered country principally. Eighty per cent of that land could be farmed after the timber is logged off, and the stumps are either burned around or blasted out, and the timber removed.

Q. Well, Mr. Booth says that would cost from $50 to $250 an acre to do that, you know Mr. Booth, don't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, is that about what it would cost in your judgment?

A. Well, I don't suppose it would cost quite as much as that.

Q. Well, if a man did his own work it would not cost that much?

A. No, it would not.

Q. But he would be 30 or 40 years in clearing 160 acres of timber land if he did it by himself, wouldn't he?

A. Oh, he might.

He only knows of two homestead cabins up in that timber land where the people who took homestead claims had made their final proof, or had commuted and paid the cash and got the title from the Government and had moved away, these were timber lands and the parties proved up and still held the lands. It is good timber lands like his. They were not friends of his. He knew them, and they are both dead now. When they were proving up and living there, they left and worked out just as he did. They moved away before they died. They had the same kind of improvements and occupied them the same way as he occupied his. One was a married man and one a single man. The widow of the married man is still living, but not on the place, she has moved away. Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified, that one of these homesteaders who died, lived on his homestead until about five months before he died. He was ill when he left, and had to be carried out of there, he left to get medical attendance. There are people still living there in that section of the country earning their support from their places or homes. He was a single man all the time that he had his homestead, and he did not consider his absence from home as being any inconvenience. If he had been a married man, he would have cleared more of his land and made it self supporting. He has noticed the difference between the single homesteader and the homesteader who is married as to the development of his homestead. The married man really makes that his home, and keeps it up in better condition to make a home out of it. A single man goes ahead and does as near as he can. He might not get quite as much improvements as a married man. He has noticed that a married man is more inclined to become a farmer than a single man who settles on a homestead, unless he marries and brings his wife on the homestead.

Q. Mr. Carlson, in your opinion, has the manner in which the railroad company has handled these lands, especially in selling to large purchasers, and in withholding from sale and refusing to sell, to comply with the conditions of the grant to sell to actual settlers in 160-acre tracts at $2.50 an acre, has that had any effect on the settlement of the community that you have been acquainted with?

A. It has been a drawback to the country, keeping settlers from coming in and settling up the country.

Q. This country is generally a timbered area, isn't it?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Well, the people who are farming there, engaged in farming now, what were their lands in their native or natural state, originally?

A. Well, at one time in the early days, they was all timber.

Q. They had to clear their land before they could cultivate it?

A. They had to clear it to put it in cultivation.

RECROSS EXAMINATION.

Q. They settled first on the streams, and got creek bottoms, river bottoms, and what little cleared land there was?

A. Yes.

Q. Some of them took donation land claims up on the Calapooia?

A. Yes.

Q. A great many years ago?

A. Yes.

Q. They started out with a few acres already cleared, and then as they wanted to extend their farming, why, they would clear the little brush that was there?

A. Yes.

Q. And in that way, in the course of 50 years, they got a few acres of plow land?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Now, these settlers that you say, these homesteaders that you say that you know are still living in there, have they all proven up?

A. Nearly all proved up.

Q. They don't move away as a rule until they prove up, do they?

A. No.

Q. After they prove up, why, then they can go wherever they please. If they want to sell the land to timber people, they can do it?

A. I suppose so.

Q. Well, they do that if they want to, that is, timbered land, isn't that right?

A. Yes.

Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified, that they can sell, after they get itle, and they can do whatever they please with the lands, sell it or keep it. These settlers that he speaks of are still living there, they went on this land about the same time as he did, and have obtained their title. Whereupon on recross examination witness testified, that he was a single man and did not have any home, and he wanted a home and a place to stay. The timber was there and he could not very well get around it without taking the timber and ground together. He took it in 1900 and he did not know of any timber that was being sold in Linn County very much. The Booth-Kelly people had bought a lot of timber around in all their section, he supposes about that time. He did not hear very much said about the fine timber up in that country at that time, and did not until later years. He did not go out anywhere else to try to find a quarter section that was all clear. At the time he took his homestead he did not know at all how much timber there was on it, but he thought it was pretty good timber. He went over it before he took it. He talked with timber people or his neighbors about how good the timber was before he filed on it, and they said there was timber on it, but they were there ahead of him. Any quarter section up there had timber on it.

Whereupon, on redirect examination, witness testified, that in 1900 timber had no value in that country, practically. When he took his homestead the fact that it had timber on it, did not enter into his mind, or influence him in taking it; the thought of it did not influence him in taking it. He would have preferred to have had land without the timber, that is, cleared land, with the timber off the land. If he had to do it over he surely would have the land and not the timber. There were no open lands open to homestead entry in 1900 below him. They were all taken up then. They went on the Government land and squatted there, and in 1901 the Government surveyed that township. He took the best land that he knew of for homestead purposes, and with the intention of making a home out of it. Whereupon on recross examination witness testified, that he had made a home of it, he has not left it yet. Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified, that he moved to Brownsvile only a year ago (1911) and he made his proof in 1907. He lived there four years after he made his final proof.

RECROSS EXAMINATION.

Q. How much time did you work out during the four or five years that you claim you were living on your place?

A. Well, maybe half of the time.

Q. And the rest of the time where did you live?

A. I lived on the homestead.

Whereupon JOHN THOMAS DEADMOND, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he was born in Lane County, Oregon, in 1854, and has lived in that county almost all of his life. He was born on a farm about three miles north of Eugene City. His father had several farms, and at that time he had three hundred and twenty acres in the valley—an old donation claim. He worked on his father's farm until he was about seventeen or eighteen years old, and he farmed near Harrisburg, Lane County, in the northern part, next to the line, for three years, besides the work he did on his father's farm. He is running a rooming house in Springfield at the present time, and after he quit farming he was a contracting logger, commencing about 1877. There are different ways of farming—some raise some kind of grain, small grain, vegetables, fruits, stock raising. In other ways than from his own actual experience, he has come in contact with the farmers and has become acquainted with quite a few methods of farming lands and the crops that they raise on them, and is acquainted with the productive soils of that country, that will produce crops, and with the character of the lands that can be cultivated and tilled. He had a farm—his wife owned it. He bought a piece of railroad land in section 1, township 17 south, range 1 east, of seventy some odd acres. He does not remember just exactly whether he paid three or three and a half an acre for that, it has been sometime since he bought that land, but it must have been about 1882 or somewhere along there. Of the crops produced in the farming industry in Lane County, there is wheat, potatoes, vegetables of all descriptions, grain, hops, garden products. The land cultivated there where these products are raised is of different character, there is a dark heavy loam that produces well, some grain and hay, and there is a sandy soil which produces vegetables of all descriptions—bottom lands, and there are hill lands which produce fruit and vegetables of all descriptions. The land that he bought from the railroad company was largely timbered, some brush in places—mostly timbered when he purchased it. He farmed it after he cleared up the land, and made a home there and lived on the place. That was in township 17 south, range 1 east, and he thinks the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company has land right adjoining that. They have timber—timber lands in there. He earned a support from this land which he purchased from the railroad company. He did not have very much when he went there. His family consisted of one boy, three girls, and his wife. He does not know the altitude of this land. The railroad land which he bought was in the northeast corner of section 1. After he cleared this land he raised most anything that he wanted to there—garden, oats, wheat, hay, or anything that he wanted to plant, including fruit. This particular place that he is speaking of now that he bought from the railroad company—Mr. Albert Ward has that place now and is farming it—is still used as a farm. Witness cut a good deal of timber off of this place, and cleaned it up. When he was on the place, he cleared about eight acres, put it in cultivation, and brushed off and seeded down about twelve acres more to grass and made a pasture out of it. Since then this has all been grubbed off, they have cut all the timber down and grubbed the stumps out, and made a farm of it, it is not all cleared, he does not know exactly how much of it is cleared. Part of this land in that territory is called hill land—bench land or bottom land, some of it is bottom land. There is a distinction between hill land and bench land. When one gets up on the bench land it is more heavy soil, of a different kind of clay a little, and it is flat, and then there are benches that go up, and so on back—terraced. There is a bench there that produces just as good grass as the bottom land, and there is some of it produces better fruit, while the bottom land is better for vegetables, for hop purposes, or such as that. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259," he has been down around Springfield, Thurston, Walterville, Leeburg, and there is Vida in there somewhere, which is at the mouth of Gate Creek. He does not know as he could tell exactly the township of these green lands, that is, of the territory with which he is acquainted. He was in section 1, township 17 south, range 1 east, right on the north side of the river, somewhere about three miles—probably three and a half miles by wagon road, to Leeburg. He does not know the distance straight through, and in fact he has been all over this territory, all over these tributaries, hunting and fishing—he has roamed all around.

Q. Sufficiently to acquaint yourself with the formations of the land and the soil, and its adaptability to cultivation?

A. Partly, yes. I have noticed quite a little bit of the timber and everything else.

Whereupon witness testified, that he had been in most all of township 16, has hunted in township 16, range 1 east, and 17-1 east, and also in 18-1 east, from the summit of the mountain, from Fall Creek on both sides of the McKenzie River. He has been in township 16 south, range 2 east, in the vicinity of Vida, and is acquainted with the lands in that township. He has been from Vida quite a little, that is quite a burn in through there. He has been through Vida and up Gate Creek. There is quite a big burn up through there until one gets back on the mountain between the Calapooia side and the headwaters of the Mohawk, and then there is green timber from that on back, and this is bench land—different land. There are settlers in these various townships he has mentioned, people living on farms there, farming the lands. In township 16 and on Gate Creek, there are quite a few setlements in there. There is quite a good settlement up in what they call the forks of Gate Creek, and in townships 16 and 17, range 1 east, also. There are quite a good many settlers in township 17. He is not acquainted much with township 16 south, range 2 east, about Wendling, but is acquainted in and about Camp Creek, township 17, range 1 west of the Willamette Meridian there, and is pretty well acquainted with the lands in township 17, range 1 west, in the Camp Creek district. That is mostly farming country down in there. There are some settlements up the McKenzie River and in east there within ten or fifteen miles of the summit of the Cascade Mountains. He does not know exactly where this railroad grant runs, but if it runs up there it runs a good long ways, but he does not know exactly how far it runs. Township 16, range 2 east, is twenty-five miles beyond Vida, and Vida is in section 34, township 16 south, range 2 east. Twenty-five miles beyond, going east, would carry one outside the limits of the grant—that must be outside the limits of the grant because it is within ten miles of the county line. The grant does not extend to the summit of the mountains that he knows of. One leaves here and goes to the headwaters of the McKenzie, gets to the summit of the mountain, and this place that he speaks of is on what is called Lost Creek, at a little place called White Branch, owned by Mr. Lewis. Also on the same creek just below him, there is what is called the Lost Creek station. They have been living on that for a good many years, and then just below, down at Foley Springs and Belknap Springs and McKenzie Bridge.

Q. Now, Mr. Deadmond, in your opinion, what percenetage of these railroad lands could be rendered suitable for cultivation in this area that you are acquainted with?

A. Well, now, there is different land. The percentage is owing to what a man would want them for, for agricultural purposes. He would have to dispose of the timber for to make any cultivation.

Whereupon, witness testified that the timber would have to be removed to make the land suitable for agricultural purposes. Part of this is a timbered country and part of it is burned. It was a timbered country, but it is a big burn. There is not much merchantable timber on that burn, that is in there by Vida. It is quite a big burn in through there which has no merchantable timber to speak of. West of the meridian line, there would be one-half of that, after the timber was removed, that would be good for agricultural purposes and grazing. East of the Meridian, it would not go quite as much—probably one-third. West of the meridian, he believes, there could be pretty nearly half of that which could be plowed after the land was cleared. These lands are a good deal the same in general formation and soil as the lands that he farmed up there, on which he lived in that locality. He knows from experience that these lands are productive and will produce good crops—he thinks they will, of course, there are exceptions. In some places he does not think one could raise anything on it, due to stony land. There would be breaks in the timber or forests, there would be small burns, and then a good big strip of timber. But in lots of cases the timber extends right along for several miles. Lands similar to this area have been successfully farmed and are being successfully farmed now—part of it—that is, lands that have been timbered and cleared.

Q. About what areas do these men cultivate over, those farmers that live in this area, about how many acres do they generally have under cultivation?

A. Well, there is some places that they run different amount of acres. Some small places that they are farming, and some that is larger. Some in that territory there is fifty or sixty or seventy acres.

Whereupon witness testified, that of the men that are actually farming there, engaged in that business, making a living, take it all around up there, it will run twenty to twenty-five acres that they are farming. This bench land produces first-rate, especially for fruit, it produces a little better fruit, to his notion, than the bottom lands—that is, what he has seen up on those benches, is better fruit. There is more or less of this bench land all the way through that country that he is acquainted with. It runs all over the mountains, climbs from one bench to another, and then on until one gets to the summit. There is what they call a divide on each side of the river, and then clear on through to the Cascades—natural terraces.

Whereupon, upon cross examination, witness testified, that he bought this railroad land somewhere about 1882. He was the first purchaser. He went onto this land, he thinks, about a month after he bought it, and lived on the land for some seven or eight years. In addition to living on the land, he ran a logging business. The logs were rafted from there to Corvallis, some of them. He logged for Max Friendly of Corvallis, the Corvallis Lumber Company. During the time he lived on this piece of land, he was in the logging business most of the time.

Q. And that is why you wanted to get up there in that vicinity, so as to be handy to your logging?

A. Well, that was my business at that time, I went there on the river to log in the first place.

Q. That was the reason why you wanted to get up in that neighborhood so as to be handy to your logging business?

A. Well, it would be naturally the case, that I wanted to get handy.

Q. I just want to ask you if that was the reason?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon witness testified, that Foley Springs and Belknap Springs are summer resorts, pretty well up the McKenzie in the mountains. They are mineral springs, and places where people go in the summer and spend a few weeks, do fishing and some hunting, going back into the mountains. During the winter they are not open except to the care-takers—that is about the way. They have located those springs, he supposed, for that purpose—for summer resorts. They are about fifty-six miles east of Eugene by wagon road, and there is a good stage road up there. The McKenzie Bridge is six miles below Foley Springs. There has been some farming there. Itis a great place there for fishing etc.—summer resorts. Of the people that have settled in there, some have settled recently and some of them have been in there for a good many years.

Q. Those that were in there a good many years ago, they catered to the summer trade, sold them vegetables, eggs, chickens and things of that kind, didn't they?

A. Yes, sir. Mr. Powers was there for a good many years.

Witness got some of the logs off of this piece of land that he bought. He thinks he cut off of this seventy acres, about as near as he can remember now, somewhere near two million feet of fir timber, and it had just a tolerably good stand. He does not think it was an average—not quite as good as the average. He thinks that he cut about two million feet off of this seventy acres, as near as he remembers now. This he cut off was sold along in the eighties sometime, for a sawmill at Corvallis. He did not raft the logs—they did the rafting. He delivered them to his people and they took them in the water on his place, and they rafted them down to Corvallis. They did not go to Eugene. They went down the McKenzie River, which empties into the Willamette below Eugene, and from there they went to Corvallis. That was the customary way they had of getting logs down out of the mountains. When he farmed near Harrisburg, he was on a place that belonged to Mr. Kennerly, about five or six miles up the river from Harrisburg. It was on the prairie, south of Muddy. He was never on the Henry Schooling place out on Muddy, but knows pretty near where it is. This place is south of there eight or ten miles. That is all old settled country, it was taken up under the donation law. This was a donation claim that he was on there farming. It was valley land, practically always clear. In some locations in the early days when they settled in the Willamette Valley, the amount of oak timber, oak grubs and small fir was very much less than it is at the present time. He guesses that it is accounted for by the fact that the Indians in the early days used to burn the grass in this young timber and keep it from growing, and that since that has been discontinued the oak timber has grown up. The burns used to keep down the brush, and so on.

Q. And since the white men have come in and gone to enclosing the premises, and stopped this grass that used to be six or eight feet tall here in the Willamette Valley on the prairies, why, the oak grubs have grown up in a good many places that didn't have them before.

A. Not down on this level ground, not on the prairie, I don't think.

Q. Some fir groves have grown up, haven't they, around about Salem and out beyond?

A. Up in there, but in the valley, in this farming at the time when those farms were taken up.

Q. It was always clear?

A. Yes, sir. On the hills this oak grub possibly has grown.

Whereupon witness testified, that there were some old donation land claims on the Mohawk River, about seventeen miles east of Eugene, and there were donation claims up the Mohawk quite a ways, settled in the fifties when he was a small boy. The foothills, some of them, were parts of these donation claims—they run up on these benches, and as one got further back into the mountains the saw timber began. About 1892 there was the biggest demand for timber lands, as he recollects it, outside of this local demand for sawmills such as he supplied. The general demand for timber, he thinks, was the biggest about 1892, when there was quite a little rush—1892 and 1896 they were after the timber, he thinks, that is as far back as 1896. He does not remember exactly what year it was that the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company began to operate around Wendling and Saginaw and up in that country. The timber demand became pretty active after they began to buy in there, and just shortly before they went in, and since that time there has been pretty good demand for timber lands. Some of these lands he has cruised over himself.

He would go on some of those timber lands that they have had, and was logging it off by forty acres, etc. He would go and cruise that before he went to work on it, to see how many million feet he was going to get off. He logged the timber on contract with the owner of the land, the owner would sell some of the stumpage for seventy-five cents, and some for one dollar, he thinks, that is, the time he was speaking of when the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company went in there. He logged for those farmers, that is for people that had small pieces of land there, and they got different prices for their timber. Some of them would get as high as a dollar, from that down to fifty cents, depending on the distance from water, and what they wanted to get it off this land. These settlers that he speaks of up there up where this timber was, aside from those who have settled on donations and along the little streams, have gone in there in the last few years, since he had been in the logging business. He was in the logging business in 1877, and there has been quite a little bunch of settlers in there since. He has been around over that timbered country and noticed a good many people had purchased timber quarters under the Timber and Stone Act. The class of people generally who bought under that act had the money to pay for it. He thinks they paid two dollars and a half an acre for it. He noticed whether any of these homesteads were up there on the timber lands.

Q. Has your experience informed you as to whether or not a good many of these, or some of these homestead claims, located on these timber quarters of good value, the improvements were abandoned after they had got their title or made their final proof?

A. Well, there is a question there that is a little different to me. There is homesteaders that went in there in this here timber belt that never complied—he was not a homesteader, he was a speculator.

Q. But he used the homestead law for the purpose of getting title?

A. Yes, he must have done it, because he never done anything on it.

Q. And he would simply build a little shack and go out and stay.

A. That is some.

Q. I understand. Go out and stay two or three nights in the six months, and clear up a quarter acre for a garden, and sleep there two or three nights? He would do that until the 14 months expired, and if he had $2.50 an acre, he would commute and get his patent?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or he would stay the five years in this way, and work out, and finally get his patent?

A. Yes.

Q. Then he would vacate his premises and sell it for timber?

A. Well, no; not all those that lived the five years.

Q. But, generally speaking, they commuted, those fellows that wanted to sell?

A. Yes, those that commuted generally come there 14 months, as you say, and get the title, and probably you wouldn't see them any more in there. I call them speculators.

Q. Some of these people would be men who were working for the timber companies and sawmills, and would go out as hired men?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Wasn't it a common thing for them to say: "Now, gentlemen, you can get $300 or $400 by using your homestead right for me, and I will put up the money when the time comes, and you will convey it to me." Wasn't that a common practice?

A. Well, I heard that talked, yes.

Q. And that was done quite generally in this timbered section. Isn't that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that he had mentioned as resorts Foley Springs and those soda springs up in the mountains. Those springs are beyond the limit of this grant quite a distance, as shown by the distance from Vida, quite a distance east of that as shown on the map there. He could not tell how far they are from this town of Vida. It must be twenty miles up there, by wagon road, and they are fifty-six miles from Eugene by wagon road. These resorts are in the Forest Reserve.

Q. Now, if this land was divided into 160-acre tracts, Mr. Deadmond, about what would be the average amount of land that could be cultivated in each 160-acre tract?

A. You mean the entire tract clear east?

Q. I mean the lands, the railroad lands, that you are acquainted with there in the area that you have testified to.

A. I think it would go forty per cent, something like that. That is, after the timber was removed.

Q. Yes, after that is what I meant. What is your opinion as to whether these tracts would be suitable for settlement for farming purposes, as a homesteader, bona fide homesteader?

A. A good many of them would make homesteads, if they was cleared up, and timber cleared. A good many of them would make nice little homes.

Q. Now, you spoke of hometsead claims in that vicinity there, some speculative homestead claims and other homestead claims. Now, please explain what you mean by that, Mr. Deadmond?

A. What I mean by that, there was some of those settlers went in there and improved the land when they bought them, and cleared it up, and made nice little places, while others did not do anything, only just simply built a little shack and go off.

Q. Do you mean the homesteaders who went in and improved? Did they continue to live on their lands?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And are living there on it?

A. They proved up, and some of them is still living on it.

Q. They took them up for homes?

A. Yes.

PAGES 3789-4282

Whereupon J. E. KENNERLY, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is fifty-nine years old, lives in Lane County, Oregon, and has lived in Oregon since 1876, in Lane County most altogether, in the vicinity of Eugene, Springfield and Leaburg. He has been ranching, farming quite a bit, in the stock business a good deal, raised stock, and bought and sold stock, also logged some. He has been engaged in farming about twenty-three miles east of Eugene in section 10, township 17 south, range 1 east, and owned a hundred and sixty acres there—not all in farm. It was not a homestead; he bought it. There was about seventy acres of it on the McKenzie River bottom, and the balance was on the hillside, bench land, part of it. He had that all in grass and the bottom land he farmed, consisting of about thirty-five or forty acres. The balance he had seeded down, it had been timber land, but was logged off, cleared and seeded to grass, timothy and clover hay. He raised on his farming land almost anything he wanted to, wheat and oats, vegetables of all kinds, berries and fruit. He is acquainted with the farming conditions and the crops raised in that vicinity generally throughout that part of Lane County. They can successfully raise there almost anything they want to, in the way of grain, vegetables, wheat, oats, rye, barley, vegetables of most any kind, fruit and berries. He lives at Leaburg now, which is shown on "Defendants' Exhibit 259," and is acquainted with that area from the mouth of the McKenzie to the head of it. The McKenzie River empties into the Willamette near the corners of townships 16 and 17 south, ranges 3 and 4 west, according to this map, and meanders through township 17 south, ranges 1, 2 and 3 west, and township 17 south, range 1 east, and flows into the southern part of township 16 south, range 2 east, and into the northeast corner of township 17 south, range 3 east. Those are the menderings of the river as shown on "Defendants' Exhibit 259." He is acquainted on each side of the river from four to six miles out, and has been in that country a long while and has traveled all over this country, rode all over it, hunted all through it, and is pretty well acquainted with it and with the conditions of the soil, the lay of the land, and the formations there. There is about one-third of these railroad lands that are good farming lands, tillable lands, and he believes that average would hold good if the lands were divided into one hundred and sixty acre tracts. There are settlers living on similar lands, engaged in and earning their living from, farming, in that community. There is about one-third of it that is good pasture land, for instance, the hillside is a little too steep to plow. It is good soil, and they burn it off and seed it to grass for pasture land. He lives now in section 10, and the railroad lands are near his land—section 9 joins him and a part of that is railroad land, section 3 joins his place and that is railroad land. The Booth-Kelly Lumber Company owns a part of section 3 which they bought from the railroad company. Other parties there own a part of section 9, part of it is in litigation between a settler and the railroad company. That lays right along the river, right west of his place, joins him on the west. Part of section 9 lays right on the river and is sandy soil. The bench land, hill land, is a dark red clay soil. These lands mentioned are about the same as that he has farmed there. He is engaged in farming there now, but not very extensively.

Q. In your opinion, Mr. Kennerly, what has been the effect of the Railroad Company's failure to comply with the conditions of this grant to sell to actual settlers in tracts of 160 acres, at $2.50 an acre, and in selling to big companies in large tracts, and withdrawing the land from sale in this community that you reside in, or are acquainted with?

A. Well, it has been quite a drawback to our country there, shutting out settlers, and they have got some good land there in that section of the country.

Q. You mean land that would be good for farming purposes?

A. Yes, good for farming purposes, yes.

Whereupon, upon cross examination, witness testified, that, take it as a whole, he could hardly say what this railroad land is worth in his judgment, on an average, taking into account the timber that is on it and all its possibilities. There is a difference in the land itself, and then there is a difference in the timber, but take it as a whole, he supposes it ought to be worth right in his section there, twenty dollars an acre—the best of it. The best of it in hundred and sixty acre tracts, would probably be worth twenty-five dollars an acre. There are some bad tracts or parcels in there that are of no particular value for any purpose, in certain localities there, on the high mountains, high peaks, that it is nothing but rock. Take it all over, about one-third or one-fourth of that railroad land in there would be practically of no value, that is, what he refers to as on high peaks and rocky. He doesn't see what those little points could be worth. Take the whole of the land that he knows, within five to six miles either side of the McKenzie River from where the railroad lands begin up to where they end, one-third of it would be agricultural land. He believes that he did not say that 25 per cent of the whole thing would be rocky and of no particular value, but then it is something near that. This piece of land that he owns there was a homestead and was entered about forty years ago. He logged off some of it—about sixty acres—and got something near 1,700,000 feet of average fir timber. He sold part of it to Max Friendly at Corvallis, and also to the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company. The man from whom he bought had logged off a little of it, a small amount, right on the bottom along the river. This land of his, that had been cleared was right along the river, in the bottom mostly, that was covered with heavy timber and brush until this man logged some of it off. They usually slashed the brush there in the spring, and then in the summer when it gets dry they run fire through it, burn the brush all out, and then take powder, after it is logged off, and blow the stumps out, haul them off, and cultivate it. In that way he cleared about thirty-five acres, entirely clear, one might say, and then he is cultivating some that the stumps are not taken out yet.

That on the hillside is in the stumps, the logged off part, he uses that for pasture land, and sowed that to grass after he had slashed it and burned it. He feeds all that he raises there on his place, practically, to his stock, excepting what he sells to the travel. He is keeping a stand on the road, hotel and feed barn, and consumes it all right there. There is a good deal of travel passing his place, going across the mountains to eastern Oregon and to Foley and Belknap Springs. He sells them hay, vegetables, fruit. He is about forty miles from Belknap Springs and thirty-two miles from McKenzie Bridge. He is twenty-three miles from Eugene. There is a post-office right at his place, within thirty steps of his house. He does not keep the postoffice, but it is on his place. There is no Donation Land claim taken right around him there on the McKenzie, the nearest donation claim that he knows of, is seven miles down to Walterville, and was the donation claim of a man by the name of Starman, he believes. He supposes it was settled in the fifties. When he says that about one-third of this land is agricultural, he means after the timber is removed and it is cleared. It is all timbered land right in their section. He thinks the character of the timber there on these railroad lands that he knows is about the average of Lane county. About four million, three and a half to four million feet would be a good average timber claim per quarter section. He does not believe that these railroad quarters there would run on an average of four million feet because the best of it has been bought up by the timber people; but he thinks the unsold railroad lands would average about three million feet per quarter section. He does not know that they were taking the land for the timber exactly, but the biggest rush that they had there for timber claims was about 1894 to 1896. The homesteaders would come in there and take up the land, and the companies began to buy. Before the homesteaders would go in, they had no market for their timber, to speak of, before that the timber was not sought after at all. The homesteaders were just burning it up and destroying it to get rid of it, but after that time the homesteaders began to rush in and the timber people began to buy. Most all of the government land that is worth anything in that section of the country has been taken in one way and another, either under the Timber and Stone Act, Homestead Act, or some kind of scrip. There are parts of the government land worth something, but not a great deal, the best of it is all taken, of course. There are probably some pieces that would pay to enter. They are small and scattering. He logged off of several sections there. He bought a part of a section of school land in section 16, logged that off—one hundred and twenty acres, he thinks. Then he bought a hundred and forty acres of railroad land in section 11, township 17, range 1 east, logged off one hundred acres of that, and then he sold the one hundred and forty acres. He logged off this railroad land about 1890, he thinks it was, and sold the logs to the Harrisburg Lumber Company for local consumption by the mills in the valley. That was before they began to ship lumber by the railroad east and to California. That was before the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company came in and developed the industry. In their part of the country, the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company is the largest timber company, lumber concern, that is manufacturing. Some of these yellow streaks up the McKenzie and the Mohawk are practically level land along the streams, and that seems to be land that was taken under the Donation law, or under some previous settlement law, prior to the time the railroad grant took effect, and it seems to follow the streams, that is about the way they did in those early days. He is now living right at Leaburg, in section 10, which is next to section 9, which is railroad land. He thinks that along the McKenzie river there where Leaburg is, which is shown in yellow, about half of that section, whatever its number is, was taken under some settlement law, either homestead or pre-emption, before the railroad grant took effect. The McKenzie river is a good fair sized stream, about a hundred miles from its source to the mouth, and is a logging stream for about forty miles. Vida is thirty miles from Eugene. It is not in the timbered country, that is in a big burn which was burned fifty years ago. There is a big burn there, about fourteen miles long and twelve miles wide, and Vida is in this old, big burn. It was formerly timber and then burned over. Vida has a post-office and a little store there, and there are a few families —three or four—at Vida. On this burned-off land, and then back on the hills, on the benches, it is pretty much all taken up, all the level land is taken up by homesteaders. When one gets up the hillsides, there would be little benches of level land—that is what he means by benches; and these benches are from fifty yards to three hundred or four hundred yards wide generally. They are almost level—level enough so they farm them. Some of these benches are two hundred or three hundred yards long, some of them a quarter to a half mile or a mile long, and these benches are frequent as one climbs the mountain. That is what he means by benches, and that is what they mean about benches. These benches are usually covered with timber, excepting where there has been a burn, only in this deadening there, there is nothing but brush, there is no timber left. The timber is all killed and burned off. At the present time, there is nothing on this burn but brush of different kinds—vine maple, dogwood, greasewood, in their native state. There are a few old stubs still standing, very few, though, they are all gone pretty nearly. There are a few logs on the ground, and there is a little small young fir coming up. He had had a little experience or knowledge of second growth fir and of the time it takes down along the McKenzie river there, for these young firs to get to be saw timber, and it takes quite a while. In fifty years, from his observation, the tree would be about twenty inches in diameter, if the soil was good, and its height would depend a good deal on the locality and soil in which it grows. From his experience, if it happened to grow in the right locality, a tree twenty inches in diameter would probably be two hundred feet high. The thickness of this second growth depends on the locality, too. If it is in the right locality, they grow pretty thick, probably every ten feet. Trees that are twenty inches at the butt and two hundred feet high, can be used for saw logs—the little mills use them, and they are used for piling timber, a good deal of it, and for telephone poles and telegraph poles, piling generally. If a man calculated to live a hundred years or so, he supposes that if he had a forty of that kind of growth, it would be more profitable to keep it rather than to cut it up at that age, but he would think if he wanted to get the use out of it in his lifetime he would have to cut it. Measured by generations of men, these forests would certainly reproduce themselves in time, if they were given time enough and not burned up or cut down.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that this logged-off land that he had cleared, he sold the timber and retained the title to that land where he is living. That burn is right there at Vida that he spoke of, that big burn around Vida. He couldn't tell exactly, but it crosses about two miles below Vida crosses the river, lays on each side of the river, the river runs up about through the center of the burn and lays on each side of the river, six miles on each side of the river, and it is about fourteen miles long where there is no green timber at all left standing except the young growth, the brush that has come up.

Whereupon, upon recross examination, witness testified, that he was born in Arkansas.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that he was twenty-one years old and past when he came to Oregon.

Whereupon, witness was recalled, and upon direct examination, testified, that he applied to purchase some of this railroad land from the Company in 1905 or 1906, which land was located in section 3, township 17, range 3 east, on the McKenzie river, right at the edge of the grant in section 3, township 17, range 3 east, the extreme eastern limit of the grant. He wanted that for a stock ranch, farming and stock raising. There is a fine range all around there in this big burn about which he spoke, and it is level. There is a little timber on it, but very little, probably 400,000 or 500,000 feet on the quarter section. He does not know what the railroad company did with his application. He wrote to the company, made application for it, and wanted to buy some of it, he wanted that quarter section, and the company wrote back that it was taken off of the market so he did not pay any attention to it. He has not the dates exactly. Almost every bit of that quarter section was agricultural land, that is, could be farmed. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 295" which shows the lands indicated on this map as owned by C. H. Chick and W. H. Richardson in different colors, he does not know whether this land that he applied to purchase, was north of the Chick tract and northeast of the Richardson tract. He does not know to whom this land belongs but this is now west here (referring to the Chick tract). The land lying south of it, right across the river, he does not know who owns that. Mr. Mason owns the adjoining land to it, laying south, a small tract. He has been all over the Chick tract and Richardson tract. The land is rough, very rough land, compared with the land that he has, so far as farming is concerned (pointing to the Richardson and Chick land). It is on the south side of the river. Now, this is on the north side, and is a different country altogether, so far as the land is concerned, and is a different formation.

Whereupon, upon cross examination, witness testified, that he wanted this railroad quarter to make a stock ranch of, and then he would have the out-range there for several miles, and probably could get the use of some of that country. East of this, the land is taken by homesteads and fenced. North of it is a homestead, and northeast is a homestead, and people are living there, that is in that burn. After one gets outside of that burn, it is all good timber land. That land was not fenced, but the chances are he would get the use of that for a few years for range. He expected to raise hay and feed his stock there. He would use the range whenever he could get it honestly. He calculated to buy an acre adjoining that he could plow. He expected to fence this quarter section as quickly as he could, and he expected to turn his stock out and they would certainly go onto the adjoining range. He expected to deal in cattle. He has been in the cattle business and thought it would be a success. There was no other quarter section up there that suited him as well as that location, and he was kind of stuck on that quarter section. That quarter section is worth about twenty dollars an acre. At that time, it was not worth so much. At the time he applied to purchase it, it was probably worth seven or eight dollars.

Whereupon J. M. WITHROW, a witness called on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is sixty years old, lives at Springfield, Lane County, Oregon, and has lived in that county twenty-one years. He has had quite a little experience in farming in Lane county. He farmed about five years in that county and farmed different tracts. The first farming he did, he was logging, and he farmed just in hay, a twenty-acre piece for eight years, the same piece he lived on there, and he made his hay to log with. That land was situated on the McKenzie river, right below Walterville. Walterville is in section 28, township 17 south, range 1 west. The land that he farmed was bottom land, right near the river. It had been in timber years ago, that piece, but he logged off the land that adjoined it, all around it, after he moved there, heavy timber. He did not cultivate any of the logged-off lands, but the man that owned it, logged it by contract, seeded it and raised grass on it. But the same land since is in cultivation, but it was not, at that time. It has been placed in cultivation since he logged it off. He has also farmed down below Coburg, between Coburg and Harrisburg, two years. There was a part of that ranch that was bottom land, and part of it what they call prairie land, out in the prairie, level, valley land. He farmed two hundred and forty acres there. He thinks that was taken up under the old Donation law and belonged to some heirs by the name of Barger. He leased the place. He does not know and couldn't tell where that was located in regard to section. The products raised in this country generally, up out of the valley, are hay, oats, barley and wheat. Of late years, they have raised lots of fruit, but at the time he farmed there, there was not so much fruit. The fruit industry has been largely developed in recent years. There is a big orchard on the place he had. It had lots of fruit, but the neighbors didn't have. There weren't many orchards there that were bearing. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259," and locating Walterville thereon, he has been all over that whole township 17 south, range 1 west. He has lived there a long time, and hunted a good deal when he was not logging, and went all over it. He is not acquainted about Wendling, not quite so far up as Wendling, in township 16 south, range 1 west. He is well acquainted with it up as far as Marcola, which is about a mile south of Wendling on the range line. He has been about six miles from Wendling, pretty near anyway. He is not more acquainted with the railroad lands in that township 16, range 1 west, south of Wendling, than he is with the Government land, the settlers' land. He is acquainted with it all, has been all over it, and is generally acquainted with the lands there, and with the lands in township 16, range 2 west, that is, west of Marcola, and in the vicinity of Donna, right on their road going up through that country. He is not acquainted with any of the lands in township 18 south, but has been in the Fall Creek country, all along, but then he did not know the ranges, or numbers, or any thing, just went through there. He has been north of Fall Creek in this territory with the green markings and the white markings, in township 18 south, range 1 west, he has been all through there, and is well acquainted with it. His work runs right up the river, up the McKenzie river, right on up in township 17-4, 3 and 2 east, and township 16-4, 3 and 2 east, all of that. He had a piece of land in township 16-2, his homestead was in that township. The grant does not extend beyond range 3 east in this locality. The railroad lands do not extend beyond that. He knows about where they are. They run into township 17-3 east, about two miles into township 17-3 east, as a general thing. That has been his beat for seven years, he comes pretty near knowing where they are exactly. He was Fire Warden four months in the year for seven years in there, in that McKenzie river territory, in those numbers he gave there. He was Fire Warden for the McKenzie Timber & Lumber Company—Michigan people, and it would take him out over the territory—he would say, sometimes. The percentage of lands in this area covered by the green markings, that he would consider suitable for cultivation would be owing to how far one would come down the river. One comes down as far as Walterville, and from that east of his beat there, he would say that the land there would go about 50 per cent that would be suitable for cultivation, that is, could be rendered suitable by removing timber and brush, or anything of that kind that should be on it. On the south side of the McKenzie river, in township 17, range 3 east, the country is broken, very broken and mountainous. There are lots of good little places in there, but of course that would be hard to get to. It is broken country, while on the north side, it is good—practically good. There is a distinction between the north and the south side of the McKenzie river in the lands. In range 2, township 16, the land runs good and it runs good in township 17-1, and through there on the south side, but in township 17 south, ranges 2 and 3 east, there is a rough spot right in there that would not run so good. There are farmers and settlers engaged in farming all over, with the exception of township 17 south, range 3 east, there are but three or four in that township, there is more than that, too. Township 17 south, range 3 east, is not owned nearly solid by the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company, they own some in there, but this company he worked for owns a good deal, or most of the land. That township is practically owned altogether by some of these companies. He owns some land in there, his daughter owns some land in there, and there are a few odd pieces scattered around in there, but, generally speaking, it is owned by big companies. They obtained a great deal of that land, the even sections, by scrip, he thinks. These settlers in there raise a little stock, and hay, and garden, and some fruit, commencing to raise fruit, it is a good fruit country, they expect it to be good for fruit in there. In his opinion, if this land was divided into one hundred and sixty acre tracts, it would, on the north side, average about what he has stated the general average of plow land is in that area. It would not, however, in this one township, that would be spotted, that township would not go more than one-four, if it would go that, but the other townships, the one above it, that is past the railroad limits, but one would make a hard climb to get up over the river on top, and after one would be on top, if the road was cut out there, for three miles at a stretch, one could run an automobile through the country, it is practically level after one gets through there. That is good country when it is logged off. That is the best belt of timber there is on the McKenzie river, and is claimed to be the best belt, and is where one could run the automobile. If the trees and logs were cut out, an automobile could be run in that country through three miles of his trail. The way he puts it, it is not steep enough to stop them. But that is back away out of the railroad limits, and is very heavy timbered, and is east of the grant, extends beyond the limits of this grant. The railroad grant only runs to the center, or hardly to the center, of township 17, range 3 east. There is a railroad section which joins a piece of his land there on the west. It was a timbered piece he got. His homestead was in 16-2, and this piece was in 17-3. He had his homestead seven years before he got title to it, and sold it to lady whose name he cannot recall. There was a lady who came here to Portland, and sent some man out to get big pieces of timber in there, and she got it, but he could not call her name at the present. She was from the East somewhere, he thinks from Michigan. He believes it was Mrs. Potter Palmer of Chicago, Illinois —he would not be positive, but he thinks that is the name. She bought lots of timber there.

Whereupon, upon cross examination, witness testified, that he was paid as Fire Warden for the McKenzie Timber & Lumber Company, as they called themselves. They were Chick, Morton and Lewis, three or four of them, he cannot remember them, but they belong in Michigan, and part of them in Portland. They have, in township 17 south, range 4 east, 16,000 acres of these timber lands up in that country. They bought homesteads, they bought them and people deeded them to them and moved away. They sold them out to them. He presumes they were buying them for the timber. There were a good many of them, these homesteaders, who were young men, and quite a number of them were not. But those who had families were the same as he was when he held his down, he supposes. He had a family. He sold his land to this lady he was speaking about, to Mrs. Potter Palmer, and got two thousand dollars. He sold his land twelve years ago, but has forgotten the date. His homestead was in section 10, township 16 south, range 2 east, and was the northeast quarter of section 10. His nearest postoffice was Vida, about five and a half miles away. Vida is a stage station. There is a stage which runs up the McKenzie to Blue River, and also from there to the springs. This was a stopping place for them to take dinner, change horses, and so on, referring to Foley Springs. Blue River is the point that they all call it, Blue River stage, and when they get to Blue River, there is another stage which runs from that to the springs. They cannot make it in a day, so they change there and come out after night with the last drive. That is all timbered country up through there, except in township 16 south, range 2 east, and was all heavy timbered country until this fire ran through it. That timber was burned when he came to this country and they claim it was burned about fifty years ago. There are young firs just in spots, in little creek canyons, there are streaks of fir growing up, and around the edge of the heavy timber there is fir growing up, but there is not all over. He does not know the reason why it does not seed with fir all over again. They do have fires in this burn occasionally, different parts of it. It was one of the great dangers that as a Fire Warden he had to guard against, that of fires being set in this dry burn, and then he had to stop them before they got to the main timber or they would cause them lots of trouble. Young fir timber grew there once, and it certainly would again if they would let it alone, if the fires were not set out, he thinks. These fires are from hunters and from travelers and from campers mainly, and fishermen up that river. He entered a timber claim there in township 17 south, range 3 east, and paid the Government so much an acre for it, under the Timber and Stone Act, six years ago. He thinks he got title to it under the Timber and Stone Act, in about a year and a half. He did not live on it at all, he had to go and look at it. He went all over it, took two men as witnesses, found the corners, had it cruised or estimated, and it has been cruised now by other parties twice since that. He owns it yet. It cruised about four million feet fir timber, good saw timber, and he supposes it is worth four thousand dollars. His daughter bought some timber, and her husband had several pieces of timber, he got killed, and that left it to her. Her husband was a timberman, worked in timber, always had ever since he was a boy, and he had a pre-emption piece, and a homestead and timber claim piece, all timber. He does not know what they would run, those three quarters. One of them, he believes, was cruised last week and they cruised it at eight million feet. That was a good fair piece of timber. That was a piece he took under the Timber and Stone Act. He took that, he thinks, seven years ago. He does not know when he took his homestead, but he took it before that, a good while before that. It was not adjoining that, but was over in another township entirely, in a timbered belt. It is all timber up there, they have to take it in the timber if they take it. The rush for timber, to get timber land, occurred about 1894 and 1895, and it continued and has been pretty active until the last two years when it has been rather quiet. It was pretty active about 1906 and 1907. He could not state the year when the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company went into that country and started their sawmills. He was right there, but he does not know exactly, but it was about twelve or thirteen years ago. He does not know that after they bought up extensively and began to manufacture lumber and ship it out to California and east, timber had a better demand. He doesn't know that that cut any figure with it, because what little they cut didn't cut much figure with the price of timber. These companies that came in is what raised the price of timber and made it active. He thinks Mrs. Potter Palmer, who bought his timber, had a considerable number of acres up there. He thinks right there in that locality she bought about two thousand acres. There are no government quarter sections there until one gets into the reserve. The timber and everything is taken that is worth taking, practically all but the railroad land, it lays there. In his judgment, the best quarter sections of this railroad land up there today, counting the timber and everything else that goes to make up a valuable quarter section, the best ones are worth anyway five thousand dollars, if one would go to pick any of them out, to the quarter. These railroad quarter sections, take it over those townships that he beat through there, that he went through so much, they would average three million feet anyway. He has not done a good deal of logging, not very extensively, he logged for seven years. He logged by contract. He had a team and put in logs for so much a thousand. He raised his hay to feed his horses when he was logging. He raised his hay on a piece of land right there where he lived, near Walterville. Walterville is quite a little village, has a store, blacksmith shop, postoffice, drug store, two hotels, two big barns that keep travel, and there is quite a lot of people live there in the town, and is sixteen miles from Eugene, on the stage road to Soda Springs and Foley Springs, and there is lots of travel there in the summer time. Those places are mountain resorts where a great many people go constantly. People come in there from Kansas City and spend the month of August, from San Francisco, and come from everywhere, all over. It is a wooded country where they hunt, fish, and have a rest. It is good fishing and there is good water. He lived down near Coburg when he farmed, in a part of the valley which has been settled a long time. He came from California to Oregon, but was born and raised in Iowa, came to California, and from there to Oregon, and is now living in Springfield. He is Fire Warden, and then goes through the woods, hunts and traps, and so on, through the winter season, and he might be said to be a woodsman and timberman. He has been in the woods the biggest part of his time for twenty years, all over those townships that he showed, and has been all through them in all directions.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that his homestead was in section 10, the northeast quarter of section 10, township 16, range 2 east, right north of Vida, on the headwaters of Gate Creek. His daughter's timber was located in sections 10 and 24, township 17 south, range 3 east. She had two pieces. It was within the limits of the railroad grant—both pieces. These settlers, some of them farm extensively —big farms—and others again are what they would call new comers, and haven't very much grubbed out yet, but they are at work on it right along. He couldn't state what they would average, he means back on the foothills. They have settled in township 16 south, range 2 east, since this grant was made. The government land in this burn is practically all taken, there is probably a piece or fraction occasionally that is not. They have built houses on them, have cleared out patches, some of them not more than one acre, and some of them ten or fifteen acres, back for three miles from the river. They are comparatively recent settlers in this burn. They have been there—some of them have been there ten years, and some of them haven't been there only the last three years—it has been settled up, more extensive settlements have gone in.

Whereupon, upon recross examination, witness testified, that he had cleared about three acres on this homestead, and he cleared that three acres the first two years he had it, and then that was all the clearing he did. He did not reside on the homestead all the time. He had a family, and in school months he would have to come out of there. There was no school. He would come down to Walterville where there was a good school, fifteen miles from his homestead and would go up in the summer time and take his wife and children and spend the summer up there, and raise a garden, and when fall came on they would move back to Walterville. He did this every year, but he always got a permit. He did not get this permit as much to enable him to make a living elsewhere, but it was to get out to the school. He got the permit from the officials of the government, the local land office. They would give him permission to be absent from his quarter section. He could be away six months at one time, if he wished. He kept that up for seven years. He kept that up for five years. He was in there on the place, back and forward still, on still afterwards, after he did prove up. He had no trouble in proving up, he had no contest. The other homestead entrymen up in that country, some of them had families and did about the same way he did, some of them would have to come out of there, there were not enough of them to get a school in there and they would have to come out.

Q. These single men that went up in there, and took homesteads and then the lands afterwards turned up, on commuting or on final proof, sold to these timber companies, how did they manage their settlements—these single fellows, how did they do?

A. Well, they would just go in and out now and then, do a little work and come out, and be gone and go back.

Q. I have understood that a good many of those young fellows were sawmill hands, and young fellows from the towns, that they would go and file on a good piece of timber-land, and put up a little shack of shakes, and put a bunk in there, and take a few canned goods out, and a little bacon, and stay a night or two, and then in the spring put in a little garden, sow a little stuff, and then go away, go back home. Is that the way that was done by a lot of those single fellows?

A. Well, no, not at the time I was holding mine, there was none of those sawmill boys or anything of that kind in there. There were settlers, and men that came in there off of ranches in the valley, and one place and another, and take them up as a place, young fellows.

Q. And then would go back to the valley?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, as a matter of fact, don't you know, Mr. Withrow, that people, after this timber rush as we call it, went from Salem and Albany and Eugene and all around?

A. Oh, yes, I think they did.

Q. And undertook to enter these lands in the best way they could, some of them under the Homestead Act and some of them under the Timber and Stone Act, so they could get a quarter section?

A. Yes, I guess they thought they was entitled to it.

Q. And they made a form of complying with the Homestead law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where they didn't take it under the other law?

A. Yes.

Q. And they kept up their business at home in the towns, until they finally commutted?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Isn't that the fact?

A. Well, there wasn't very many of them commutted.

Q. They generally saved their $2.50 an acre?

A. In Cleveland's administration, you know, there wasn't enough money for a young man to get hold of to commute.

Q. I understand times were pretty hard during that time.

A. I think so. I found it out so.

Q. So they had to stay their five years?

A. Yes, they had to stay it out.

Q. Well, they stayed it out by going up there every six months, and then getting money working out, and finally got their patents?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you cannot do that now? You have got to comply with the law?

A. Well, one reason you cannot is there ain't any timber to take in that country.

Q. If there was plenty of timber, they would do the same thing?

A. They would be foolish if they didn't, if they could get it that way.

Q. They have got it that way, a good deal of it?

A. Well, that is the way you have it figured out.

Q. Is that right, Mr. Withrow?

A. It is with some of them, but I don't know as the majority would go that way, but there was now and then in that timber entering business we had a fraud occasionally, as well we do in everything else.

Q. I know, but they didn't think that was a fraud?

Wasn't that the custom of the country?

A. Well, not entirely, no. They didn't want to beat anybody, only some of them—

Q. That was the custom of the country at that time?

A. It seemed to be. It was a rush for the timber anyway.

Q. That is right?

A. Yes.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that these people who were living in there who made their homes there for from ten to twenty years, acquired title to the land and those that have been there that long have not only homes they have made a living on, but they made a little money. They acquired their lands by homestead, lived up to the requirements of the Government laws. These men, who made a pretense of residence on the homesteads and then selling to timber companies, not living on them as he did, after they got the title, there was nothing in there for them, and they stayed out where they could get work. Now in that country, there is not a road in it back in there, only trails, pack trails, and so on, it is not fit for a fellow, really, to live, without enough of them would go so as to make a road out, to do something. Several years ago the railroad company sold some few pieces in that locality to settlers, in the vicinity of these lands that he is speaking of. It must have been ten or twelve years ago that they sold it. These people who bought from the railroad company used the land according to the location of the land; some of them would buy it for the timber that was on it, he supposes, and others bought it for homes. There are a good many of them who bought forty or eighty acres from the railroad, that was in those burns, and even where it had quite a little timber on it, and slashed it off, and made them good homes, and lived right there. That is what one at present might term a remote region. The nearest railroad is at Springfield, down in there it is all the way from twelve to twenty miles to a railroad.

Whereupon JAMES W. KINMAN, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is forty years old and lives two miles from Mabel postoffice, Lane county, Oregon, and has lived in that county ten years. He has a ranch, is a farmer, and has been engaged in farming on the same place in section 28, township 15 south, range 1 west, ever since he has been in Lane county. He has eighty acres of good land which, in its native state, was timbered land. Part of it was logged off after he got it, and part of it was logged off before. It had been slashed and the timber burned and cleared out. He does not know how long the man had lived on the place before he got it. It was patented land. The man that he bought of took it as a homestead. Witness sold the timber that he took off of the place to the Hyland Lumber Company. He applied in 1905 to the railroad company to purchase one hundred and sixty acres of land in section 21, which joined his land and he wanted to make a ranch out of it. He does not know what was done with his application, he never got an answer. He wrote to the Southern Pacific Land Office at San Francisco, California. He is familiar with the business of farming in the vicinity of his land, and in that part of Lane county in which he lives. They raise grain for hay, oats, vetch, cheat hay, clover, fruit, all kinds of vegetables, garden truck, and the soil is productive. Mabel is shown on "Defendants' Exhibit 259," and is right where he lives now. That is where he bought there near the postoffice as it was there at that time, but they have changed it down to the mill now. The green markings on this map, he understands, represent the unsold lands of the Company, and the blue represents lands that have been deeded. He is acquainted with these lands from Shotgun Creek, shown on this map, and he has been all over that township to the fork of the creek, what they call the forks of the Mohawk, from the summit down, both on this side, from what they call Mt. Bunker south of Mabel. He has been over that area, about four miles up to the summit, what they call the summit, between the Calapooia and the Mohawk, and is acquainted with the lands there, that is on the north side of the Mohawk, and on Shotgun Creek, which runs through township 15 south, range 1 west, and he has been pretty well over this country, pointing to the northwest portion of township 15 south, range 1 west, on the north side of the Mohawk. He is acquainted with that territory west of Shotgun Creek, but was never back in that country but once, north from Mabel, east from Shotgun Creek, that would be the northwestern portion of township 15 south, range 1 west, as shown on this map. He is acquainted in township 14 south, range 1 west, down to the summit. There is a very small portion of railroad lands in that township. Township 14 south, range 1 west, is beyond the summit and he hasn't been there. He has been up what they call the east forks of the Mohawk, perhaps ten miles from Mabel. Section 29, township 15 south, range 1 west, half of that or more, in his opinion, could be rendered suitable for cultivation; section 19 is rather rough and broken after one gets back away from the creek in section 29, half of that or a little more, and in 19 there would be perhaps about one-fourth, that could be rendered suitable for cultivation. All this land with which he is acquainted, from the Shotgun east to what they call the summit, between the Mohawk and the Calapooia, what he has been over and noticed, if it were cleared off would be half so that could be farmed. There are settlers, people engaged in farming, in section 21, but back of that there are none. Similar lands are farmed in that general community, and the same averages would hold good if the lands were divided into one hundred and sixty acre tracts.

Q. In your opinion, Mr. Kinman, what has been the effect of the railroad's policy in handling this grant, failing to fulfill the conditions by selling the land to actual settlers in 160 acre tracts at $2.50 an acre—what has been the effect, if any, upon the development of this community?

A. It has kept settlers out.

Q. By settlers, what do you mean?

A. Why, people would have made homes out of it, if they could have gotten it.

Q. Do you mean engaged in farming there?

A. Yes, sir—orcharding.

Q. Now, the settlers that are over there in that country, Mr. Kinman, how have they developed their land? Just describe it.

A. Well, there is two families living on 21, been making good livings, and there are six families of us living in 28, and that is south of 21, and east of 29.

Q. Have they been earning their support from the lands that they had in these sections?

Whereupon witness testified that these settlers had lived there ever since he had been there. There is some pretty good timber on section 21, and there are open, fairly open ridges, and some swamp, land covered with hazel brush and small stuff in these lands in sections 21 and 28 that he has mentioned. This area he has described is, part of it, heavy timber, and then there are open countries in there. He does not know what it would run. He never cruised them and does not know as to that. He came from Iowa.

Whereupon, upon cross examination, witness testified that section 21 is a railroad section, and there are two families living on that section. He thinks they bought the title from the railroad company. They were living there when he came there, he thinks one of these, Van Meter has eighty acres, and Smith has one hundred and sixty acres, but he does not know what they paid for their land. It was before he came there. He understood Mr. Smith to say that he had about forty acres of his hundred and sixty acres cleared, and the other man has twenty or more acres cleared, by cleared he means ready for the plow. These people had four or five head of cattle. At present, he has only one pony on his place. He has been in the cattle business some up there, he has been keeping them on his place—had fodder. His place is all fenced, and he does not avail himself of the outside range, but some of his neighbors use the outside range. They raise up there to sell, potatoes, garden truck and apples, they have a market for this at the sawmill, it is the Coast Range Lumber Company now, it used to belong to Hyland Brothers, but it has changed hands, also a mill at Wendling. It is not a great ways to Wendling. The place there at Hyland is now called Mabel—there are thirty or forty houses at Mabel, and working in the sawmill when the mill is operating, there are at the present time about a hundred and fifty men. They are rebuilding a big mill at present. They have not been running steady for the last two years. They ship their lumber out by railroad, the Southern Pacific Company Railroad comes up what they call Hyland siding, and the Coast Range Lumber Company has its spur road up to the mill and its woods. That is not the railroad that is building over from Natron to Klamath Falls, but is a branch. That whole country there is pretty much a timbered country. Going to his place, he does not go to Wendling. He first reaches the valley land, about a mile below him, on the Mohawk. He does not know how long the Mohawk has been settled with Donations and early settlers. The settlers were there when he came, long before he came. He never took a homestead in this country and never entered any land under the Timber and Stone act. He bought his eighty acres from a man who had a patent from the United States, and paid nine hundred dollars for the eighty acres and, in his judgment, it is now worth thirty-five hundred dollars. This unsold railroad land that adjoins his, taking it as a whole, by quarter sections, timber and all just as it stands, he does not know what it is worth, he is not a timber cruiser, there is timber on this in places, and part of it is saw timber. He does not know about how much those timber lands run in timber, per quarter section, on an average, he never cruised any. Not having any experience in cruising, he would not know how much timber was on a quarter section of this railroad land, but there are patches of heavy timber, and then there are open places, and the land in section 21 would be worth more if the timber was off than the timber would be worth. The timber and brush keep grass from growing. He means that if a man owned the land, it would be better for him if there was no timber on it, if it was cleared land. If the timber was off, it would be worth more for everything than it is with the timber on it—the land would be worth more.

He could probably sell the land today more for the timber than for the land, perhaps, as there is timber on it. There is a demand for timber. Principally on the south part of it, this timber is second growth, on the northwest part of section 21, it is bigger timber. By second growth he means limbs, small timber, timber that has not reached its full age. Second growth is not old growth timber. There is smaller timber, from little stuff up to two or three feet in diameter. He does not remember the largest fir tree in diameter in that country of which he knows, but he expects that some of those fir trees are six to eight feet in diameter, and there are several that would be as much as six feet where they would be cut off at the ground. When they are cutting this timber for logging purposes, they do not cut them right down at the bottom, sometimes they cut them as high as one's head, six or eight feet high, and use a spring board to stand on to saw, and they learn how to saw so that the man on the spring board can protect himself when the trees fall. That is the way these timber men manage to cut these trees down for logging purposes, and that is called "standing the spring board." They know by the shape of the cut what slope to give it to make the tree fall in a certain direction. He had done that kind of work, but most all of the farmer boys in this country have not done that kind of work. There are lots of them that live in that timbered country who do not work at it, lots of them do not work much at anything. He applied for one hundred and sixty acres of this land in section 21 about 1905, wrote to the company to know what it wanted for it, and if it would sell it, and he addressed his letter to the Land Department of the Southern Pacific Company in San Francisco, California, and got no reply. "Q. You never applied to purchase any of this railroad land under this Act of April 10, 1869, where this $2.50 an acre business is being used by people who apply for lands. A. No, I just wrote to them to see if they could sell, or what I could get it at." As a farmer, he wanted to buy it and wanted to pay and would have paid a reasonable price, what he thought was right.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified that the land, this piece of land that he was speaking about, would be more valuable than the timber and would be better with the timber off, and if a man should purchase that land, the best proposition, the best way to handle it, would be to sell the stumpage and keep the land. That was the land he applied to purchase and that he wanted for farming, and he intended to clear it up and make a ranch out of it.

Whereupon, upon recross examination, witness testified that he intended to sell the stumpage or get the timber off and sell the timber for whatever he thought was right, and then burn it over and seed it to grass the first year or two, and work it up that way. At that time he could have gotten for timber stumpage, per thousand feet, about fifty cents, and he estimated that the timber stumpage would bring forty to fifty dollars an acre, perhaps, taking it on the whole hundred and sixty acres.

Q. Well, if you could have got that at $2.50 an acre and then sold the timber for $40 or $50 an acre, you would have made a pretty good thing, wouldn't you, and had the land left?

A. Well, I would rather have had it with the timber off; if it had been cleared, it is worth more.

Q. You would have made a pretty good thing, though, wouldn't you?

A. I wouldn't have made such a great thing after paying the price to get the stumps out and the logs all off.

Q. No, but if you had just stopped, and hadn't put the money back into the ground, you would have made the difference between $50 an acre and $2.50 an acre, wouldn't you?

A. Well, there would have been some difference, yes.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified that he had lived in that community ten years, and during that time the railroad company had sold lands up in that section. Louis Van Meter bought a forty in section 21 since then, that is all he knows of in there. He does not know of the company selling to any other people who desired lands for farming purposes. Booth-Kelly Lumber Company owns a good deal of land in there, but he does not know whether they bought it since then or before.

Whereupon, upon recross examination, witness tesfied that Louis Van Meter sold his forty that he bought from the railroad company sometime ago to a man for orchard purposes for eight hundred dollars. There was not very much timber on it. Van Meter paid something near four hundred dollars, he thinks, but he does not know.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified:

Q. Mr. Kinman, if the Railroad Company have only a $2.50 interest in this land, and are permitted to keep it and sell it at the increased price, they would make the profit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Off the land just the same as the individual would make the profit?

A. If I had bought it and I had sold the timber, yes.

Whereupon F. M. WILKES, a witness called on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is thirty years old and has resided in Corvallis, Oregon, since 1907. He is county engineer of Benton county, and incidentally surveyor in the employ of the Government during the field season. He is acquainted with the farming business in Benton county to a limited extent. He has never farmed in that county, but was raised on a farm in Washington county. Exactly the same conditions do not exist in the two counties so far as farming is concerned. Washington county is a rich county and has a different soil entirely. Benton county is very spotted, has more of a spotted soil, and he would say is not so productive. However, Benton county seems to carry off the blue ribbon in the state exhibits. His business as surveyor and engineer carries him to the homes of farmers and he has had an opportunity to observe them largely, that has been his business since 1908. He was elected to the office in 1908 and has occupied it continuously ever since. He notices that Corvallis is marked on "Defendants' Exhibit 259," and that the green markings on that map indicate the unsold lands of the Oregon and California railroad land grant. He is intimately acquainted with more or less of these unsold railroad lands. Once in a while, there is a small river lot in through there (pointing to map) and he is more intimately acquainted with that than he is with the lands farther out. Most of this land in here (pointing to map), he has been in contact with, one time or another, surveying lands around near it. In township 14 south, ranges 5 and 6 west, he thinks there is a small amount of land, that is in here, Bellefontaine, Glenbrook, Monroe, country in through there—there are small amounts of lands that are within that area, those townships, 13 south, ranges 5 and 6 west, that he is fairly well acquainted with. Township 12 south, range 6 west, he believes the biggest part of that is in the Wagon Road grant. He notices the yellow markings which represent lands that were lost to the grant by reason of prior grants and entries. In townships 10 and 11 south, ranges 5 and 6 west, he is pretty fairly well acquainted. He never had any occasion to work in range 7, the west half of 6 and 7, through township 10. Benton county begins in township 10, near the north line of 10, and continues to the north line of 15, below the south line of 14. He is not very well acquainted with the west parts of those particular sections, or particular townships, from township 10 to township 14, ranges 6 and 7 west. From 10 to 14, townships south to range 5 west, there are a few isolated tracts in there, all those are desirable farm lands, at the present time these lands are covered with more or less of river bottom growth, fir, white fir and ash, maple and kindred river bottom, typical river bottom growth, and that would be very desirable for farming lands if opened to entry, he would think. Similar lands to those are farmed in that district all around. They are fractions which have been left, legal subdivisons which are left, after the donation land claims were taken up, and are small, usually very small fractions that lay contiguous to the donation land claims, and in no instance that he knows of in those particular townships stated are they more than small fractions of fifteen or twenty acres, along there—very small—but when one gets over in from townships 10 to 14 in range 5, which is all within the grant, there are very few only isolated tracts in those townships. They would be all suitable for agricultural purposes, and they lay within the bottom and on the lower foothills. From township 10 to township 14 south, in range 6 west, one is beginning to get out in the end of the foothills, or into the more mountainous country, and the agricultural lands in that range of townships embraced within the boundaries of the county would probably average 50 to 60 per cent that could be cultivated to advantage. In range 7, from township 10 to township 14, he has not as accurate knowledge of that, as he has of the other, for the reason that it is mostly timbered and a great deal of it unimproved lands, and he has not had occasion to be in it a great deal. But from the observations that he has made in through there, a lower percentage would be available for cultivation, not over one-third. He has not the acquaintance with that land that he has with the land further in the valley, for the reason that there is not nearly as much surveying within that particular part of the country as there is out in the valley. That covers the lands with which he is acquainted in Benton county. If divided into one hundred and sixty acre tracts, this average would generally prevail, with the exception of probably a few isolated cases that it would not, perhaps, due to the locality of the country, steep hillsides, or something like that—more or less. He believes that it would, though, throughout. Lands similarly located and situated, with similar soils, are used for farming purposes successfully in that locality. There are farms more or less all through them. He knows the general character of the country there, as one sees it from Corvallis, looking west both in a northerly and southerly direction, and can see well up on to the summit of the Coast Range there. One can see the lower foothills, the outer foothills ranging back four or five miles from the main part of town there, and beyond that one cannot see but very little of the Coast Range, in fact, one cannot see any of the summit of the Coast Range along there at all, only in special cases like Mary's Peak, or some of those high range peaks, some of those high points. A person standing in Corvallis can see, in that timbered country there, on the east slope of the Coast Range, here and there patches of cultivated land, with grain growing, that is true to the northwest. The land to the west is up Mary's River, and that is within the boundaries of this Wagon Road grant, and outside of the O. and C. grant, but that is mostly donation land claims. They were taken up there in the early fifties, donation land claims were, and, of course, they are more or less cultivated all through. That land on either side of the railroad, as one goes to Yaquina Bay, a large part of it has been burned over. After one gets out beyond Harris, the little station of Harris on the Corvallis & Eastern, beyond there it is more or less burned over, it has been burned over for a number of years. That land is of the same general character as the land north and south of it, excepting for the fact that the timber has been burned off. They are now selling that burned over country, and people are going in there and making use of it to quite an extent. Those farm lands are pretty extensively taken up.

Q. Don't you remember that somebody bought that wagon road grant and has been distributing it in small tracts to settlers?

A. Yes, they have been selling it out of late years, to settlers all through there, and there is a good many settlers in there.

Whereupon, upon cross examination, witness testified, that he was born at Hillsboro. These foothills west of Corvallis four or five miles were pretty well taken up into the hills under the Donation law, and then there was a fringe of fractional railroad forties, twenties and eighties in the foothills just back of that adjoining these donations. Within the valley the donation land claimants were allowed to take up their donation land claims in any shape, and the result was there were a number of fractions, and some of them were not appropriated, he supposes, at the time this grant was made. Most of the lands in the foothills, inuring to the company under this grant, within a range of four, or five or six miles from Corvallis, have been sold a good many years ago to these farmers. There are only a few isolated tracts in there, just small tracts. When one gets further, back seven or eight miles from Corvallis, then one begins to get into the railroad lands, and some that have timber on. One begins to get into the heavier timbered country, with the exception of this burned area, which he believes is principally covered by this Wagon Road grant, and that was at one time timber land. He believes that Mary's Peak is four thousand feet, something like that, in elevation. Corvallis is a town with a population of nearly five thousand, and is the seat of the Oregon Agricultural College, formerly a college maintained by the South Methodist Church. It is only within comparatively recent years that it has become a state institution. Corvallis has been a town, and is an old settled community from as early as the fifties, and he thinks that it was a little earlier than that. It is at the mouth of Mary's River, at the junction of Mary's River and the Willamette, and he thinks the railroad was built to Corvallis about 1879, that is further back than his time, but it is a long time anyway. The road known as the Corvallis and Eastern has been in existence from Yaquina Bay and through Corvallis on east beyond Albany for more than twenty-five years, it was probably that long anyway. It was first started as the Oregon Pacific, or its predecessor, by Colonel Hogg. The road went into the hands of a receiver at one time and was sold for about $100,000, he knows that is its history, it hardly paid its receiver's certificates, it did not pay anything. As far as he knows, these railroad lands, up to 1905, were being sold to whoever wanted to buy them. He had never had any occasion, had never heard anything along that line, never had any interest in railroad lands, for the reason that at that time he was going to school. There is a large body of railroad land belonging to this company which remains unsold in Benton county. He has never read any statistics of the amount of land that there is in there. He has never cruised any of these lands, not any of this land grant. He has cruised considerable lands in the county, has done cruising at one time and another for the county for assessment purposes, but never cruised any of these railroad lands for assessment purposes. They were already cruised for assessment purposes, the timber lands, before he went into office, practically, so that he would not make an estimate on the time that it was cruised. When the timber became an object of merchantable transaction, the county began to consider about getting it cruised so as to tell how to assess it. He thinks that a dollar a thousand is probably the stumpage value of these timber lands at the present time. He has not heard of any timber being sold in Benton county for quite a long while, but that was the prevailing price at the time that he knew anything of it. A good timber quarter in Benton county will run from two to eight or ten millions to the quarter, there is very little that goes ten million. He would say probably the average of timber lands in Benton county would not be over three or four million a quarter section. He has never applied to purchase any of these railroad lands and he has never taken a homestead. He has never used any of his rights whatever.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that this railroad that was constructed from Yaquina Bay easterly through Corvallis and Albany on to Detroit, in the Cascade mountains, was purchased by A. B. Hammond, he believes, and he understood that one of the conditions of the sale was that he was required to reconstruct the roadbed and the bridges and ties, and put it into shape for operation. He does not remember who bought it from Mr. Hammond, after getting it into operation. The Southern Pacific is the supposed operator of the road, but the Corvallis & Eastern Railroad Company, he thinks, has the control, that is, that is the corporate name of the company, he thinks. He thinks that it is a subsidiary company, but the name and corporation of the Corvallis & Eastern, he believes, is preserved. It is operated as part of the Southern Pacific system of railroads, that seems to be the general opinion. He does not know what they paid Mr. Hammond. When he says that Mr. Hammond bought this railroad, he means Hammond and some of his associates, Hammond was probably the main man in the deal.

Whereupon, upon recross examination, witness testified, that he believes, if he is not mistaken, that Hammond operated the road as the Coast and Willamette Valley railroad first. He thinks that when Hammond sold it, it was then organized under the name of the Corvallis and Eastern, which now operates it, sells tickets and handles it. He understands that it is a subsidiary company, and a part of the Southern Pacific system. The summer business is pretty good to Yaquina Bay, there is fair travel over the road all the time, fair passenger business, there is not a great deal of freight business, and never has been, so the old timers tell him, any freight business over that road since the time that Hammond bought it up. Hogg tried to make a port at Yaquina Bay, had a line of steamships in there at one time, but he does not know that the expense of operating the steamships broke the road.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that he had been out east from Albany up to Detroit, a few times, but he would not say as to the business of the Corvallis & Eastern there. He does not believe they do more business there than they do on the west end of the road. They do more freight business, possibly, but he would not say that the passenger business was as much, he does not think it is, a good deal smaller trains run anyway. That road is the connecting link between Corvallis and Albany, and is practically the only railroad connection in there at the present time. The Oregon Electric is coming in now, but the rails are not laid that far west yet. It crosses the Willamette River at Albany.

STIPULATION.

Mr. Townsend: It is hereby stipulated that R. G. Balderee, if called as a witness, would testify that he has been a resident of Oregon for more than twenty years, living most of the time in Lane County; that he is familiar with the lands in Townships 16 South, 1 and 2 West; 17 South, 1 East and 1 West; 20 South, 1 West, and 21 South, 1 West, in Lane County; also Township 14 South, 7 West, in Benton County, and Township 8 South, 7 West, in Polk County; that he has done considerable cruising in those districts. He will further testify that, of the lands in 8 South, 7 West, 50 per cent could be subjected to cultivation after being cleared of timber and the stumps removed; that of the lands in Township 14 South, 7 West, 65 per cent could be cultivated after the land is cleared by the removal of the timber and stumps; that of the lands in Townships 16 South, 1 West and 2 West, 80 per cent can be cultivated after the timber is removed and the stumps taken out; that of the lands in Townships 17 South, 1 West and 1 East, approximately 50 per cent can be cultivated after the land is cleared of its timber and the stumps removed; that of the lands in Township 20 South, 1 West, approximately 70 per cent can be cultivated after the timber is removed and the stumps taken out; that of the lands in Township 21 South, 1 West, approximately fifty per cent can be cultivated after the timber is out and the stumps removed.

His general testimony as to the character of the land and the stand of timber, and other facts and circumstances upon this general subject, would be substantially the same as the testimony of O. J. Lawrence as to Lane County; and the same general testimony would apply to his judgment as to the lands in 8 South, 7 West, and 14 South, 7 West, except as to the quantity that could be cultivated.

He would further testify that he is the R. G. Balderee mentioned in the bill of complaint who made application to purchase a quarter section of land in Township 20 South, 1 West, along with O. J. Lawrence, and that the general circumstances under which his application was made, settlement was made and maintained, and other circumstances relating thereto, are substantially the same as in the case of O. J. Lawrence.

Mr. Fenton: Counsel for defendants consent to this subject to the objection that the testimony, or part thereof, is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and other objections made to the testimony of O. J. Lawrence; it not being intended to admit, of course, that the testimony is true.

Mr. Townsend: And it is stipulated that the present offer shall have the same force and effect as if he had been called, sworn, and testified, and objections had been interposed as stated by counsel.

Mr. Fenton: It may be so understood.

STIPULATION.

Mr. Townsend: It is further stipulated that E. C. LAKE, if called and sworn as a witness in this case, would testify that he is one of the parties who made application to purchase land in Township 20 South, 1 West, and was made a cross-complainant in this present suit; that the testimony of Mr. Lake as to the character of the land in that township, and its susceptibility to cultivation and settlement, would be substantially the same as the testimony of O. J. Lawrence, excepting that the knowledge of Mr. Lake extends only to that one township, and not to the other lands referred to in the testimony of Mr. Lawrence; and Mr. Lake would further testify concerning his application to purchase, settlement, residence, improvements, and other details connected therewith, substantially the same as the witness O. J. Lawrence.

Mr. Fenton: And his cross-examination would develop substantially the same state of facts.

Mr. Townsend: Yes.

Mr. Fenton: It may be so stipulated, subject to the objections made to the previous testimony.

Mr. Townsend: Subject to the objections made as to the offer of the testimony of R. G. Balderee.

Whereupon C. W. MARIELS, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is forty-one years old, and lives in the town of Gooch, a sawmill town in Linn county, Oregon. There is a sawmill and shacks there, and a postoffice, that is all. His father moved into Linn county in November, 1884 or 1885, he is not sure which, and his father lived on section 26, township 9 south, range 2 east. The house stands in the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 26. His father took up a homestead there of practically one hundred and seventy-six acres. It was a fractional quarter section that ran more than one hundred and sixty acres, laid down on account of the donation land claim up against it. His father was the original entryman on this homestead. It was heavy timber land, brush and timber. His father has been dead since 1888, and the land belongs to his brother and himself. His father was a carpenter, he had been a farmer all of his life until he came to this country, that is, he had farmed, but when he came here in his early days he had learned the carpentry trade and went to carpentering, and took that land as a homestead, went on to that land there after he had been there something like three years. His father farmed that homestead, and when he died had about six acres under cultivation, and took his family there, about ninety days after he filed on it, died on the place. Witness lived in Salem part of the time while his father lived on the homestead. He had business there, had cattle on the place all the time, and was backwards and forwards, and has lived there, he might say that had been his home all the time since then, right in there. His father raised hay, vegetables, fruit, and had stock there and made his living right on the place. His father had less than fifty dollars when he came here with his family, and had to go in debt the first winter for his living, after that he worked out in the neighborhood, and the like, and at the time he died was out of debt, and had made his living on the place. He is and ought to be acquainted with the farming and products of the soil in this general vicinity of Linn County, as he has lived there the greater portion of his life in that community. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259," he is in what would be called Fox Valley, which is the postoffice there, and is about six miles east of Mehama. Mill City is marked in there but he is on the Linn County side, he is six miles east of Lyons, and is acquainted with all this country in there, and has been all through all of that country there, clear east to the summit. He has not been north any further than the divide between the Little North Fork of the Santiam that runs through Elkhorn and the Molalla, on the extreme eastern limits of the grant. He has been up in here quite a distance, probably six to ten miles from the Little North Fork, from Elkhorn, from here on up, in township 8 south, range 2 east. He has been east clear over the mountains, clear into the Three Sisters into Eastern Oregon. He is not acquainted with the lands in township 8 south, range 1 east, but has been in township 8 south, range 2 east, has been through that district, and in township 9 south, ranges 1 and 3 east. He has been through township 8 south, range 3 east, but is not much acquainted through there. He is acquainted with township 10 south, ranges 1, 2 and 3 east, and has done some locating in and is acquainted with the lands in township 11 south, range 4 east. None of the lands in township 11 south, range 4 east, are included in the grant. He has been through that country all south of that, but as far as being acquainted is concerned, he is not. He has been pretty well through the mountains. The lands in township 8 south, range 2 east, would not run over 25 per cent that could be cultivated, that is in the mountains, and it is rocky country in there. The lands in township 9 south, ranges 1 and 2 east, will run 75 per cent, and township 9 south, range 3 east, will run from 40 to 60 per cent, along there, and township 10 south, ranges 1 and 2 east, will go probably 50 per cent, a little the rise of that, and township 10 south, range 3 east, will be up in the mountains again where it will probably go 40 to 50 per cent. He has done lots of hunting through that country, some locating and acting as guide, and has done some cruising. He hunted through that country and has been pretty thoroughly over it, has been all through it and has been from where he lives south pretty well all through the mountains, went through with pack horses and teams, through to California. If this land were divided into one hundred and sixty-acre tracts, these percentages stated would hold good as to each one hundred and sixty acres. He does not know of but one or two one hundred and sixty acres in there but what a family could go on and make a living, meaning township 9 south, range 2 east, township 10 south, range 2 east, township 9 south, range 3 east, and so on. In township 8 south, range 2 east, there is some of that in Stack Creek and Horn Creek that they could not do it, it is very steep and rocky. The lands that could not be cultivated could be used for pasture land, they could run cattle, sheep, goats—very little sheep in their country there—cattle and goats, on this pasture land. They raise wheat and oats and hay of all kinds—clover and some timothy—and are introducing alfalfa, in the vicinity of these lands, but they have not made a success of that yet, there are one or two good patches, outside of that there is not. They raise all kinds of vegetables, and all kinds of fruit, outside of peaches. Lands similar to the railroad lands are settled. By settled, he means people have taken up homesteads and live on them, make a living on the land in following agricultural pursuits, farming. His father's place is now logged off, the timber was sold and the title to the land retained. They got $2750 for eighty acres of timber, the other timber is not sold. He applied to purchase lands from the railroad company in section 35, township 9 south, range 2 east, near his father's homestead, it joined his place. He desired that land to make a home and it is good land, part of it has timber on, heavy timber, but there is a part of it that is swamp, and a kind of meadow on it, a vine maple swamp. He and his three brothers tried to buy all the section that was left there, that is four hundred and eighty acres off the section, and there was probably in the whole thing about sixty acres of this swamp, but in reality the meadow and the swamp on the part that he wanted was something like eighteen to twenty acres. The swamp referred to in the low ground would have to be drained. That is what they call a Nine Bark swamp, or a beaverdam, and it is covered with brush, and water stands on it in the winter time, and till late in the summer, and then around the edges there is a kind of fern glade, and this swamp is lower ground—and the higher up it gets, probably this glade is ten or twelve feet above the swamp, and it runs out into vine maple swamp then, with very little timber on it. There is probably twenty acres which has vine maple, and the rest has heavy timber. The whole thing could be rendered suitable for cultivation if the timber was off. There would be on that one hundred and sixty acres probably not more than twelve to fifteen acres on the hillside that one could not plow and the rest of it could all be plowed. He made his application to purchase this land the first time along about 1896, but he is not sure about the time. The company replied that they asked something like fifteen dollars an acre for it. The last time he applied, was in 1908, and the company answered that it was not for sale at all.

Q. Mr. Mariels, what has been the effect, in your opinion, of the Railroad Company's failure to fulfill the conditions of this grant to sell the land to actual settlers in tracts of 160 acres, at $2.50 an acre? What is its effect in that community that you lived in there?

A. It has kept settlers out of there, kept people out of the country. You take it there now, Mr. Henry Bodiker, he had a homestead on top of the mountain there, and just the way the country laid, there was a railroad section on each side of it, that was good land, and he couldn't, nobody could get in there next to him. He had no school, he had to send his children, well, between 3½ and 4 miles to school.

Whereupon, upon cross examination, witness testified, that his father took this homestead in 1884 or 1885, in section 26, township 9 south, range 2 east, on the Santiam river. The Potter donation land claim joined it. He does not remember whether that donation claim was a half section or a section. There were four hundred and eighty acres in the Potter place originally, but there was part of it Mrs. Potter's donation claim, and he does not know whether it was three hundred and twenty acres or four hundred and eighty. That donation was settled a great many years ago, in the fifties. His father's homestead was all timber land, he had cleared before his death five or six acres right around the house. It was not right on the Santiam, but up on the first bench from the Santiam, a little over a quarter of a mile from the river. The Santiam River bottom overflows at high water. It is not covered with cottonwood and stuff like that, but is all gravel and rock, and is all river bar there, that North Santiam on up. There is no open land on the river above his father's place, nor this side of it that is any good. It is the first bench above the river that has any farming land at all to speak of. On this Potter donation land claim, he thinks there is something like two hundred acres of cultivated land now, that is, of the old place. He could not tell how much of that was prairie in the beginning. He knows that they have cleared up—he would think there have been about sixty acres of it, seventy acres, cleared since he went there. They slashed and cut the logs, girdled the trees and killed them, and then felled them after a few years, and logged it up and burned it. They have taken the stumps all out now, they burned the stumps out. He did not say that his father had his place logged. His father never did have his place logged. The boys sold the timber off the place in the last four years to Fred Gooch and it was sawed in a sawmill there. The sawmill is right on their place and has been there four years last March. They sold in the first sale, eighty acres of timber to Gooch. He couldn't tell how many million feet it amounted to, he did not scale it, they sold it, for a lump sum of twenty-seven hundred and fifty dollars. They estimated the timber at about 75 cents a thousand, which was about the market price at that time. It is now worth a dollar to a dollar and a quarter to a dollar and a half. This clearing that he had done on his father's homestead, all together, on both places, was probably something like twenty acres, that is, there is some of it that has not been plowed yet, that he will plow up this winter, about twenty acres. It is not all on his father's homestead, he bought a place there, a part of this old Potter donation land claim, two years ago at $25 per acre, the east part of it, the timber part of it, ninety-seven acres of it, and probably eight or ten acres of this cleared land that he speaks of is on the Potter donation land claim and the balance of the twenty acres is on the homestead. The two boys now own the homestead and, in addition to that, he has a part of the Potter place, and one of his brothers bought part of the Harm place which is east of that. His father's homestead, owned by him and his brother, is not for sale, and he could not say what would be its fair market value if it was for sale, he could place a value on this piece of land of his which lays right on the west side of this, referring to the Potter land, he is holding that ninety-seven acres at $5000.00, and he thinks that is plenty high enough, it is probably worth forty or forty-five dollars an acre. There was four hundred and eighty acres of this railroad land that he and his brothers, the three of them applied to purchase, each a quarter section, it was timber and brush. It had some good saw timber on it, it had something like three million feet to each quarter section. It was a mile and a quarter to two miles from the Santiam River, and could be logged. They log within two or three miles of the Santiam River, using cables and a donkey engine. The stumpage would be worth a dollar probably. The company asked fifteen dollars an acre for that land in 1896, and he applied for it last in 1908.

Q. Did you make an application under this $2.50 an acre statute?

A. No, sir. Yes, I made application there, and they answered me back that it was absolutely not for sale.

Q. Did you sign one of these written blanks that these timber locators and brokers had been circulating around?

A. No, sir.

Q. You just wrote a letter?

A. I wrote a letter, and made out a blank, had a blank made out by a Notary Public.

Q. But did you offer the $2.50 an acre?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you claimed to be an actual settler, did you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you never went on the land to settle on it?

A. How is that?

Q. You never went on the railroad land, though, to settle on it, did you?

A. Well, never built no house. I went up there and made some improvements.

Q. What did you do?

A. Done some slashing, and put some fence onto it, and used it for pasture until later on, until I got my notice that it absolutely was not for sale, and so I went and tore the fence down.

Q. Well, your intention was to make actual settlement in that way?

My intention was to put up a house and move my family onto it. His application was made some time in 1908, and he went to work and fenced part of it, and did a little slashing, and where he started in to slash there, he aimed to put up a house. He did not do much slashing, probably something like a half acre. It was not in the big timber. That was in near this fern glade, this swamp, probably three-quarters of a mile, on an air line, from the house on his homestead, but by wagon road it was two and a half miles. At that time his family consisted of his wife and three children. He was living in Salem at that time, and in business at Salem, and he made this application out at Salem. R. R. Ryan was the notary public. He does not think Ryan was in the business of taking these applications. He does not know of any applications that Ryan made out. He does not know where his two brothers made their applications, but they applied for the other two quarters. All three of these timbered quarters would carry, in his judgment, about three million feet to a quarter. He does not know that his brothers made their applications in 1908. They made it from 1906 to 1908, along there somewhere, in the same way, at two dollars and fifty cents an acre. They were living at Fox Valley, what is Gooch now, and about a half a mile from these places, from a half to a mile of these places. There was some Government land away back in there that was not taken. They did not take that Government land because this railroad land was better land and closer up to settlements. This Government land had good timber on it, it had three million feet on it and a whole lot more. It is not still Government land—he could not tell who had taken it. There has been some homestead land taken there, a whole lot under the Timber and Stone Act. While he was living in Salem, his business was handling horses. He was there about six years, off and on. While his father lived on this homestead, he followed his trade and worked out when he could, at carpentry work. He was fourteen or fifteen years old when his father went on the homestead in 1884. Witness worked out away from home, worked down on the Albany prairie, on a ranch down there. The rest of the children are younger than he, he is the oldest one of the family. His father did not get ahead by his help, he was not enabled to support himself and his family in that way. He is sorry to say that he didn't help his father much before his death, he didn't help the family enough. His father worked out when he could, he was a carpenter, but at that time there was no carpenter work to be done up in that part of the country at all, he did work out a good deal of the time, and only cleared about six acres, but that was heavy timber that he cleared. His father kept some stock, which ranged all over the country there, south. He does not know how many cattle his father kept, probably he had twenty or thirty head, somewhere along there, he would sell a few cattle every year; he did not sell any vegetables or anything of that kind, until the railroad went in there in 1887, when he sold what vegetables and potatoes and the like he had then. It operates three trains a day from Mill City up, and runs a logging train from Mill City up, and freight, besides passengers, regularly. Gooch is a little sawmill town, but he does not know how many men work at this sawmill, but would judge something like thirty or thirty-five, that is in the sawmill and in the woods. They get their logs from the mountains around there. He has cruised some of this railroad land, he never cruised any of the railroad land excepting for himself. He cruised in section 25, township 9-2, and section 3, township 10, range 2, and he cruised that for himself because it was a good piece of land and his idea was to try to buy it, and he afterwards did try to buy it. This is not the land that he has referred to. He tried to buy three different pieces. As fast as they would answer him back on one, he would write again. In section 3, township 10 south, range 2 east, that will go something like 4,000,000 to 4,500,000 feet to a quarter section. He cruised that in the winter of 1908 or 1909. He did not apply to buy a quarter section of that under this Act. He wrote to the Company for prices on it, and told them he wanted to make application to buy this quarter in section 3, but did not state what price he wanted to buy it at. He got a reply that it was not for sale. He wanted to go out there and settle on this piece of timber land. At that time he hadn't bought this Potter place and he was looking for a location, and wanted to take his family out to that. If a man would be right careful, he would get big timber enough on this quarter in section 25 to fence it, that would be all. There was some of that quarter that was good farming land. The reason that he did not take that quarter that had no timber on it for a home was they refused his application. He has applied to buy three different quarter sections of this railroad land, they wrote to buy and the Company informed them that there wasn't any of it for sale, and they would write for another piece.

Q. You wanted to make a home, and be an actual settler on each one of these three?

A. Well, I suppose when they turned me down on where this timber was that I could buy this where there was no timber, so I wrote to them.

Q. Now, you intended, though, to settle, if they would let you, on each of the three?

A. Yes, sir. No, either piece that I bought I aimed to settle, yes.

Q. Well, but you first applied for two timber quarters, didn't you.

A. How is that?

Q. You first applied for two timber quarters?

A. I first applied for a piece in 35. They turned me down on that, and then I applied for a piece in 3, and they turned me down on that, and then I wrote in reference to 25.

Q. And they turned you down on that?

A. Yes, sir. They said they had no land in that district for sale at all.

Q. Yes, I understand that. You have stated that two or three times.

A. Yes.

Q. But each of the first two quarters was good for timber, one had about 3,000,000 feet on it, and the other had about 4,000,000 feet?

A. Yes.

Q. That is right, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you couldn't get the timber quarters, then you tried them on a quarter that didn't have any timber on?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You intended to move onto the first one they sold you?

A. Yes.

Q. And make an actual home and a settlement?

A. Trying to buy a piece of land, yes.

Q. Now, why didn't you take a homestead? You had a homestead right, hadn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, weren't you, after the time you became 21, weren't there a lot of good homesteads up in that country?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why didn't you take a homestead, and get some of this good timber?

A. I have got a homestead.

Q. Where is your homestead?

A. It is in—that is I haven't got a homestead. I took one in 11-4.

Q. What section, part of section?

A. Well, now, I couldn't tell you just exactly what section it is in.

Q. When did you file on that?

A. Never filed.

Q. You selected it?

A. I went in there before it was surveyed, and just took a squatter's claim on it.

Q. Have you ever applied? It has been surveyed since?

A. It has been surveyed, yes, sir.

Q. How long ago?

A. Why, I don't remember just when that survey was accepted.

Q. Is your time up in which to apply?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You haven't applied, though?

A. Yes, I applied.

Q. Where did you apply? At the local Land Office?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At Portland?

A. Here at Portland.

Q. When did you make the application?

A. Either four or five years ago.

Q. And have you made improvements on it?

A. How is that?

Q. Have you made any improvements on it?

A. Built a house onto it, yes, sir.

Q. Have you lived on it?

A. Well, no, I didn't live on it.

Q. You just did about what others do when they take a homestead?

A. No, sir. They notified me that it was not open for settlement, that the Railroad Company had placed scrip onto it, and unfortunately I had a family, and my wife was in no shape to stay there that winter, and I had to move out, go back.

Q. You did live on the land?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you actually live on the land?

A. I was not on the land—I didn't have my family on the land very long. I was on the land very near all summer.

Q. Just tell us how long you had your family on the land?

A. Well, I don't know as I could.

Q. Was it one night or two nights?

A. Oh, yes, they was out longer than that. There was one child that I never took in, because he was a baby, and my wife she was in there with the other children, and she was in there I don't know how long.

Q. A week?

A. She was in there twice.

Q. A week or ten days?

A. There was one time, yes.

Q. And did you have a house to live in, or did you live in a tent?

A. I had a house to live in.

Q. You built just a little shack?

A. I built a cedar house—14x16.

Q. And you took a few things in to cook with, and a few little bedding?

A. I took some bedding in, yes, sir.

Q. And then your wife was there about a week, and some of the children, and then after that she came back again for a little while? Is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you finally gave it up?

A. No, sir.

Q. You still claim it?

A. I gave it up because I had to that winter, and moved out.

Q. What winter was this?

A. It was 1907, I think it was.

Q. Was your wife up there in the winter or in the summer?

A. She was there in the fall.

Q. What month?

A. She was there both in July and August.

Q. Well, that is practically summer in this country, isn't it, July and August?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, that is about the time when we have our vacations in the mountains?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Sort of recreation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do any fishing out there—hunting?

A. How is that?

Q. Did you do any fishing or hunting out there during that time?

A. I hardly ever fished any at all.

Q. I know, you hardly ever, but did you that time?

A. I don't think—I don't think I had a fish pole in my hand for ten or twelve years to fish, until this summer, sir.

Q. You didn't fish any out there that time?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hunt any?

A. I don't remember whether I did or not. I generally do, though, when I am around the woods.

Q. Did you see my brother H. L. Fenton out there hunting elk and deer in that country?

A. No, sir.

Q. You know him, don't you—lives at Dallas?

A. I have heard of him.

Q. Well, you have heard of him, he is a hunter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Goes into that country and spends his summer hunting sometimes?

A. Sometimes, yes, sir.

Q. Now, then, you get elk out there sometimes, don't you?

A. No, sir.

Q. They are all gone?

A. No, there is elk in there.

Q. Well, that is what I thought, there is elk.

A. That is, not in that part of the country. There is elk in the country out there in the Cascade Mountains, yes, sir.

Q. Now, this homestead, that was scripped by the Northern Pacific, I suppose?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did it have any timber on it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much did it have on it, in your judgment?

A. Probably seven million and a half, or eight million.

Q. Seven or eight million would be a good claim, wouldn't it?

A. Pretty fair claim, yes, sir. There is some claims, though, that has got more timber than that on.

Q. Did your brothers take homesteads out there, too?

A. Well, I don't think they did, no. They might have, but I don't think that they did.

Q. Why didn't you take it under the Timber and Stone Act?

A. How is that?

Q. Why didn't you take some of this timber under the Timber and Stone Act, and get a good quarter section of timber?

A. Unfortunately you cannot do that on unsurveyed land.

Q. Wasn't there some surveyed land out there you could take under the Timber and Stone Act, that would have had good timber on it?

A. Yes, sir. Not in that township, no, sir, not in that township.

Q. Well, I mean in the same township that you are farming.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. A good deal of that land was taken that way, wasn't there?

A. There was some land taken that way, yes, sir.

Q. And some of it taken by homesteads?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Taken a good deal like you tried to take this quarter section homestead—the same way?

A. No, sir. The homesteads that have been proved up in there, that is, outside of some three or four, has all moved their families onto them, and proved up onto them proper.

Q. But when they proved up on one of those finest timber quarters, they sold out to timber people, didn't they?

A. Why, they was forced to, yes, sir.

Q. You mean forced to, because they could get a good price for the timber and do better by selling it?

A. No, sir. No. They were pretty near forced to on account of the railroad Company owned the odd sections around them, and they couldn't get settlers in there to help them develop the country, and have schools for the children, and the like of that.

Q. They usually sold out about as soon as they proved up, didn't they?

A. No, I know several homesteads that is still owned by the parties that homesteaded.

Q. Yes, I know there are a few?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But those that got good timber, as soon as they got their title, why, they got a good offer and they sold out a couple of years ago, didn't they, most of them?

A. Well, there is part of them sold out, yes. There is part of them sold out.

Q. What did they get for those timber quarters, generally, that they sold?

A. Well, I couldn't tell you. The price has varied a good deal.

Whereupon witness testified, that he could not tell that he knew of very many homesteads outside of this Bodiker place which was sold, who got something like ten thousand dollars for his place. He had two hundred and eighty odd acres in there. Bodiker bought some railroad land in there, and sold to Robert Shaw for the Curtis Lumber Company. Shaw was manager of the Curtis Lumber Company and has put forty acres of orchard on the land now. He could not tell whether they bought that land for the timber, but Shaw was superintendent or manager of the Curtis Lumber Company, and he thinks lives at Albany, but he don't know. The Curtis Lumber Company does business up there along at Detroit and along the river, and owns thousands of acres of timber lands in that country.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that this homestead or settlement that he had on the unsurveyed land was beyond the eastern limits of the grant in range 4, twenty-five miles from the railroad. The railroad runs through sections 25 and 35, and is about three miles from section 3, township 10 south, range 2 east. In township 9 south, range 2 east, the railroad runs through the corner of section 35, and also the corner of section 25, and this settlement that he had in 4 east was about twenty or twenty-five miles from a school house. This railroad land that he tried to buy in sections 25 and 35, in township 9 south, range 2 east, is about a half a mile from a school. The applications that he made to purchase land from the railroad company were in 1896, along there, and it was quoted to him at something like fifteen dollars an acre—the exact price he does not remember. He made three applications for railroad land. He did not apply for the second one before he had received an answer to the first. After he got his answer, he would write about another piece. The company never said in the letters that there was none of the land for sale when it answered his letters, they said that the piece of land was not for sale, and so he would write about another piece, and in this way he happened to write about the three pieces. One of these tracts contained no merchantable timber, in section 25, on the Linn county side. On the Marion county side, there is a little scrub timber on it. but on the Linn county side there is comparatively no timber at all. There is some small fir, that is, brush four or five inches through, and very thick hazel brush and dogwood, such as that. Probably sixty or seventy acres of that quarter could be put under cultivation. Bodiker owned some railroad land, bought some railroad land there, he could not say how long he lived up there. Bodiker was in there when they went to the country and he could not state how long he lived there. Bodiker has sold and moved out a couple of years ago, and bought a place down in the valley, on the railroad. The Bodiker place was an old settled homestead, homesteaded years ago, somewhere along in 1882 or 1883, he is not positive about that, and it was sold about two years ago. Shaw is putting out a forty acre orchard there, with apples, and he understands that he is putting—he hasn't it set out yet, but witness understands he is going to put out some pears, and he was talking with the man on the place a month or six weeks ago and the man said they hadn't set out anything only apples. Witness doesn't know about their pears, they have some fruit on it. Bodiker had quite an orchard there when he sold the place. That homestead was timber land. It was right up on the mountain, the highest point there is around there within quite a little ways of him, and right in the heavy timber. Bodiker went in in the heavy timber and took that up, and burned up the timber that he cut from his place in clearing.

Whereupon, upon recross examination, witness testified, that Bodiker got about ten thousand dollars for his land. He could not tell how many million feet of timber was left on it. Part of it was heavy timber, though. Bodiker burned the timber off of the land he cleared up and cleared something like sixty acres, he does not know just how much, that was from 1882, down to the time he sold a couple of years ago.

Whereupon ANDREW ANDERSON, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is sixty-one years old and resides at Scappoose, Columbia County, Oregon, and has lived in that county twenty-eight years. Prior to the time he went to Columbia county, he was in Baker county about two months. He was born in Sweden, but is a naturalized citizen of this country. The first year after moving into Columbia county, he worked around farms and one thing and another, but he was not there two months before he started to get a homestead. He made his filings in February, 1885. His homestead is located about six miles from Scappoose by the road. It was timber land when he took it up. He has cut the timber down, burned it up and cleared the land, and has now about ten acres under plow, about forty or fifty acres burned over and seeded down for pasture. He lives on his homestead and has made it his home since he first took it up. He is a bachelor. He raises most anything on his homestead there that can be raised around the country, grain, wheat, rye, oats, barley, peas, vegetables, some apples, some pears, some plums and prunes. He has done nothing else besides farming since he took up that land. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259," there is some railroad land in sections 9 and 5, township 3 north, range 2 west, and some in section 19, township 3 north, range 2 west, and there is section 1 in township 3 north, range

3 west, with which he is acquainted. He is somewhat acquainted with those townships, but not so that he could describe them all. In township 3 north, range 3 west, he is acquainted with nothing but sections 1, 2 and 12. After the timber is taken off and the land is cleared, in his opinion 50 per cent of that land could be put under the plow, take the whole country,—some sections more and some few less. He is acquainted with lands of the railroad company generally in township 3 north, range 2 west. In section 5, for instance, there was a man who bought some land there, and he helped him to do some work on it, so he knows the land, and in section 5 he has been all over that several times, in section 5, township 3 north, range 2 west. In section 9, he knows there is one hundred and sixty acres that was taken before the railroad company got the land, which he is acquainted with and also the land down in there. He does not include in his estimate the land that the railroad company did not get, but take it all over in township 3 north, range 2 west, he would think there would be 50 per cent of the unsold lands of the railroad company, in his opinion, that could be rendered suitable for cultivation. He is not acquainted with any of the other lands in this railroad area in Columbia county. There are similar lands under cultivation in the community of these railroad lands. The lands of the railroad company with which he is acquainted in township 3 north, range 3 west, have no timber, neither section 9 nor section 5 in that township has any timber to amount to anything, they have only brush. In township 3 north, range 2 west, that is section

1, the north half of that is heavily timbered, and the south half there has very little timber. There is no timber on the railroad land in the other townships that he has mentioned. He is acquainted in township 3 north, range 3 west, sections 1, 2 and 12. Section 1 ought to be about six miles from Scappoose, he thinks. He applied to purchase some land of the railroad company—he applied, but gave it up. It was in December of 1907. The land that he applied for was in section 1, township 3 north, range 3 west, the southeast quarter. Prior to filing his application, he had never done a thing to the land, only went there once and put up a notice, and was over the country. The company replied to his application to purchase land that it was not for sale.

Whereupon, upon cross examination, witness testified, that E. E. Quick of St. Helens prepared the papers for him when he applied for the land, using a printed form. He applied for it under the two and a half an acre clause as an actual settler. He put a notice on the property before he had Quick do the business for him, that is, he posted a notice on the quarter section. He was not advised to do that by Quick. He had done that before he took any advice from Quick. This two dollars and a half an acre business was spoken of all over the country, that one could apply for a quarter section and the company would be forced to sell to the person, providing the land went back to the Government. That became generally known all over the country about the summer of 1907, he thinks, and there was quite a rush to get these timber claims under that. Two men got a section, one came after him and took it, one got his and put a notice on top of his. On this quarter section that he took, there was about a million and a half feet of timber. He had a homestead of one hundred and sitxy acres and wanted another homestead, and if it was going at two dollars and a half an acre he wanted to get another place to settle on. He never did a thing on this hundred and sixty acres out there. While he was proving up and living on his homestead down near Scappoose, about six miles west of Scappoose on the Scappoose creek, he worked out around the first three years and did that to get something to live on, and after that he had a cow or two and a little garden and made his living on the place. He sold some timber off of the place in 1905 to W. O. Jeff, since incorporated in the name of the North Coast Lumber Company, in Boston. It was fir and cedar, he sold a little over two million feet. There was about 150,000 feet of cedar. He sold his cedar too quick, he got only fifty cents for the fir, and seventy-five cents for the cedar, and if he had held it a year he could have just doubled that amount, he could have got a dollar for the fir if he had held it a year, and a dollar and a half for the cedar. They logged it off. He run a fire over that and seeded it down to grass, and now keeps stock there. He has only three cows on there. This homestead is not all fenced, it doesn't need to be fenced. He has fenced what he needs for plowing purposes, about ten acres, and makes his living by stock and by farming. He sells some forty, fifty or sixty sacks of potatoes a year raised on this ten acres, and then he runs his cream down to the creamery and gets about twenty dollars a month for cream from his cows. His stock pastures right on his ranch. His stock has not left the ranch for the last two years. They cannot get up into the deep woods, and below he has a fence. It is heavily timbered, and the cattle do not know that he has no fence. He is acquainted with only one section, with section 1, in township 3 north, range 3 west. The south half, in his estimation, has about 300,000 feet of saw timber on it, and the north half ten or twelve million feet on it, that is a pretty thick heavy set of timber. Take the whole country through there, he thinks it will average about four million feet to the quarter section, that is in township 3 north, range 3 west. He knows sections 1 and 7, he had forgotten 7, in township 3 north, range 3 west, which is all of the railroad land that he knows in that township. Section 7 will run about fourteen or fifteen million feet to the whole section, about three and a half million to the quarter section, in his estimation. He does not know any other section in township 3 north, range 3 west. He knows sections 5, 7 and 9 in township 3 north, range 2 west. On sections 5 and 9 there is no timber at all, and section 7 is as he has already stated. Sections 5 and 9 have not been logged off, but have been burned off, kept burning off until everything was gone, only some brush remains. It was a clean country twenty-five years ago, and now it is all overgrown with young fir. It is a second growth fir, on this old burn, and runs from six inches, he would think, and there is some that would be a foot and larger, and one hundred feet high or more, and they have grown up in twenty-five years. He thinks that this second growth fir in that country there would reach one hundred and fifty feet high, and some of it eighteen to twenty inches at the butt, in fifty years, judging from the way it has grown. Sections 5, 9 and 7 in township 3 north, range 2 west, are all that he can describe. Section 9 is of the same kind as in section 5—burned off. There is second growth fir growing on that, thick enough so one can hardly get through where it is left alone. As they grow larger, they grow slower. In twenty-five years more, it would not have three million feet on it, but ultimately it might have three or four million feet on it. Take the whole country through after the timber is removed and the stumps taken out, about 50 per cent of it could be farmed. Very little of it is rough or rocky. Some of the land would run less than 50 per cent, and some would run more. He thinks it would average about 50 per cent that could be farmed after the timber is removed and stumps taken out, that could be plowed. He is five miles from the railroad in a straight line. That railroad was there when he came in 1884, but no train was running on it. That was the Northern Pacific at that time, running between Puget Sound and Portland, when they used to cross down at Goble, across the Columbia River, and now it is the Astoria and Columbia River Railroad Company, or the Spokane, Portland & Seattle, and he thinks there are about three trains each way, passenger trains, and he does not know how many freights. He thinks that country around Scappoose has been settled for fifty years.

These railroad lands are mostly back in the foothills and in the mountains. That part down next to St. Helens and Scappoose and through there has been taken up under the donation law, excepting here and there a homestead. There is a road from Hillsboro through the mountains over into Columbia county, by way of Scappoose, out to Washington county. That road goes from Scappoose and over the mountains, but that was vacated years ago. There are two roads in there now. One goes to South Scappoose Creek, and crosses over the mountains to Washington county, and the other starts from Rock Point and goes over to Washington county, but all get finally over to Hillsboro.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that these roads he referred to are county roads, wagon roads, not logging roads.

Whereupon T. W. GRANT, a witness called on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is fifty-seven years old, and resides in section 17, township 3 north, range 2 west, in Columbia County, Oregon, and has resided in that county about thirty-seven years. A good portion of the time while he has been a resident of that county, the first part of the time he was a day laborer, hauling cordwood. He has followed farming and timber, farming and dairying at the present time, in a small way. His land which he is now farming is near the Washington county line, in section 17, township 3 north, range 2 west, and he has eighty acres of railroad land. In 1880, he purchased one hundred and twenty acres from the railroad company in section 17, on contract, and his mother purchased one hundred and twenty acres adjoining him in the same way, at his suggestion. In 1885 he sold his contract and went to southern Oregon. Returning in the Fall, he purchased from his mother eighty acres, under arrangements made with her, and was to pay her what she had paid on this land, return the money she had already paid out, and he was to continue the annual payments, which he did, but there were no papers made out, no legal transfer made until after she obtained her deed from the company. As soon as she obtained her deed from the company, she deeded eighty acres to him that he had paid for. He grows on that place principally, hay, because he is keeping cows, but he grows almost all kinds of vegetables for family use, and corn and kale. He is a married man, has a wife and four children. He owns only this eighty acres, and he is making his living there now from that land and his cows. He keeps five and six cows, and is adding to them each year, and expects to enlarge it as he enlarges his dairying. He has a separator, and his cream is delivered to the skimming station there and shipped to Portland. The dairying business is carried on quite extensively in that community in which he lives, and that community is considered a dairy country. They have been engaged in the dairying business in that country a few years. Four or five years ago he had about four cows. He followed that about two or three years and did not have cows enough, he thought, to make it pay, and sold them out, and then started in again about a year ago, purchased five head, kept five and six head of cows. This eighty acres he obtained from the railroad company, or which his mother contracted for, was brush and timber. There was some timber on it, but they called it brush land. He is really not much acquainted with any of the railroad lands excepting in section 17. He is pretty well acquainted with that, all over south of there. He has been over the land in a general way, but he knows nothing about the lines, just the country in general, in a general way, used to hunt up there considerable. That is in township 3 north, range 2 west. He has a general knowledge of the country around his home place, and has been over, in a general way, perhaps three or four miles south of him. He was only over that occasionally, perhaps once or twice a year, carrying his gun and hunting deer. He noticed the lay of the land and the character of the soil and the growths that were on the land on these trips, and he would judge that there is about 50 per cent of that land with which he is acquainted that would do for what they call tillable land, would be level enough to be tillable land, and then there is probably 45 per cent of it that would do for pasture if the brush were slashed off and burned, which is in addition to the 50 per cent that could be tilled. He would think there was at least five per cent that would be no good for anything. There are similar lands which are cultivated and there are farms in his vicinity, and there are some farms there within that radius, of the same general character of lands. The lands vary somewhat, some of them, perhaps, might be poorer, but some just as good or perhaps a little better than his land. He would think that his would be about the average. Some lands would perhaps be a little more level than what he has, and then, perhaps, there are others again that would be a little rougher than his. These lands have timber in spots, streaks, and there are places that have nothing but brush, and there are other places again that are mostly burns—with very little brush on them. He is referring to the lands about him there in this area.

Whereupon, upon cross examination, witness testified, that his mother and he bought this railroad land about 1880 or 1881, he is not positive which. He had one hundred and twenty acres and she had one hundred and twenty acres, and they paid two dollars and a half an acre for the land, in ten installments. At the time they bought this land, none of it was cleared. He would judge that he had cleared about fourteen or fifteen acres of this eighty acres, and the balance he uses for stock to range over mostly, some of it, three or four acres is slashed and seeded to grass. There was some saw timber on his eighty, which he sold a few days ago for a lump sum. He believes he got two hundred dollars for his saw timber. It was sold about 1896. His mother kept forty acres of this railroad land until a few years ago, when she gave it to his sister and brother. There was timber on the north part of it, some of it was good saw timber. He could not say how much saw timber they had, he is not used to estimating the timber. This eighty which he owns is in section 17, township 3 north, range 2 west. He could not say only in a general way what railroad land he is acquainted with besides this section 17.

He does not know anything about the lines or the township lines, and could not say anything about the numbers. That which he has been over is in Washington county, three or four miles from his place. Some of that country that he has been over there has no timber at all. Some of it, after one gets pretty well south, has some timber on it. He is about four and a half miles from the railroad. His station is Scappoose. He is west of Scappoose, and lives about a half a mile from Mr. Anderson. "Q. Then all the railroad land that you really know anything about then is in this section 17? A. Yes, sir, that is all that I could speak anything about there." He would judge that 50 per cent of his land would be tillable, and of the balance 45 per cent would be pasturage if it was cleared off, and 5 per cent of no value, that would be a fair estimate and that would apply to the whole section 17. He couldn't hardly say positively if there is any railroad land in section 17 that is unsold. There is a great deal of that land in that vicinity which is owned by non-residents. These non-residents are not all timber people. A great deal of their land is unoccupied. Of course, there is some of this section settled up besides what he has—settlers living there. He never took a homestead. He knows the east half of the southwest quarter of section 17, township 3 north, range 2 west, and a part of that would make good pasturage; it is somewhat rough, no timber on it, it is second growth and it is not large enough for anything, it is sort of a scrubby growth. The northeast quarter of the southeast quarter, containing forty acres, is very good land, there is no timber on it, except second growth—most all second growth. It was burned over several years ago and a new growth has come up again. He would think this second growth would average about eight or ten inches. He delivers his cream to Scappoose, to the skimming station there, this creamery they ship to has an agent, receiving agent there at the old creamery plant, they take the milk there and the agent does the shipping, they have nothing to do with the shipping. That is what he means by that being a dairy country. They used to have a creamery located there, they sell now to the Oregon Cream Company in Portland. He could not say how much cream is shipped from Scappoose Station. There is a good deal shipped, and then there is a good deal shipped from Scappoose itself, where they are shipping is called Johnson's Crossing, and is perhaps a mile and a half or two miles south of Scappoose on this North Bank railroad, now the Spokane, Portland & Seattle. That railroad has been there ever since 1883. The country around Scappoose is comparatively level, and in five or six miles one starts in to get to the hill land, bench land they call it, and then a little further back into the mountains. The Columbia River is eight or ten miles east of Scappoose. They have the Willamette Slough there where they are—they live on the Willamette Slough. There is a good deal of stock on the Willamette Slough. Between the railroad and the Columbia River, there is a great deal of cattle, and a good deal of cream comes from that section.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that he does not mean exactly that he is not acquainted with railroad land other than in this section 17, but he does not know exactly what the other is. He is acquainted with other sections. He is well acquainted with land for about three or four miles around where he lives, and he has testified concerning his opinion as to that territory, as to the percentage that could be cultivated. Some of the other may be railroad land, but he does not know anything about the number, or the lines.

Whereupon, D. McLAFFERTY, called as a witness on behalf of complainant being duly sworn, testified as follows:

DIRECT EXAMINATION.

Questions by Mr. Townsend:

Q. Mr. McLafferty, you are one of the cross complainants in this case, are you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are one of the persons who instituted suit against the Oregon and California Railroad Company and others, for the purpose of compelling them to sell you 160 acres of land which you had applied to purchase?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Lafferty was your attorney?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is your attorney?

A. Yes.

Q. How long have you lived in Oregon, Mr. McLafferty?

A. Four years and a half.

Q. And where did you live prior to that?

A. Aberdeen, Washington.

Q. How long did you live there?

A. Nearly 20 years.

Q. What business have you been engaged in, Mr. McLafferty?

A. Wall paper hanging business; wall paper hanger and painter.

Q. When you moved over into Oregon, to what point did you first come?

A. I went out on this Section 25, 4 North, 3 West.

Q. What part of the section?

A. Northeast quarter.

Q. And when was it that you went there?

A. In the spring of 1908.

Q. The spring of 1908?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since that time have you been over that township to any extent?

A. Somewhat.

Q. How about any of the adjoining townships?

A. Only to a slight extent in the township south.

Q. That would be 3 North, 3 West?

A. 3 North, 3 West.

Q. Now do you know where the railroad lands are situated in a general way in this township 4 North 3 West, and which are involved in this case?

A. I only know, not definitely, I only know of some few sections where other settlers have gone.

Q. You know of the tract which you yourself have settled upon, of course?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And some other similarly situated, I understand?

A. Yes.

Q. Speaking in a general way, now, Mr. McLafferty, what is the character of the soil in that township?

A. The soil is what is known as a shot soil, deep, rich, mellow soil.

Q. Have you seen any demonstration as to what the soil will produce?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In that same township?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the railroad lands or lands adjoining, or both?

A. Both.

Q. To what extent are the even numbered sections settled in that township?

A. They are all settled, as far as I know.

Q. How about the even numbered sections, adjoining this Section 25 that you settled upon?

A. All settled.

Q. To what extent have they made clearings of the even numbered sections, and removed the stumps and reduced the lands to cultivation?

A. So far as I have been over these even numbered sections, the settlers have made their homes and cleared, oh, from five to twenty acres, perhaps.

Q. What kind of crops are they growing on the cleared land?

A. They are not living there now. They have sold to the Chapman Timber Company, but there were orchards, apples, pears, plums on two of them that I know of.

Q. Now, there is pretty heavy timber in that township, isn't there?

A. Somewhat, yes, sir.

Q. That can be said generally of the entire township?

A. Yes.

Q. The Chapman Lumber Company, is that the same concern that Mr. Quick referred to in his testimony the other day?

A. I don't know that I heard Mr. Quick.

Q. Oh, you were not in the courtroom when Mr. Quick gave his testimony.

3875

A. I think not. When was that?

Q. Well, it was about ten days ago.

A. No, I didn't hear it.

Q. Now, have the even numbered sections been logged off to any extent in that township?

A. They have been, part of them being logged now.

Q. How about the township south of you—I mean the section south of you; south of 25.

A. South of 25 is 36, a school section, owned by the Chapman Timber Company, not logged.

Q. Is any of the land adjoining yours logged?

A. Yes.

Q. Which way?

A. North half of 30 on the east of me is logged. All of Section 24 on the north is logged. They are operating now on 26, on the west of me, on the west of 25.

Q. Do you know what the Chapman Lumber Company are doing with this land after it is logged off?

A. They are selling it.

Q. Do you know what they are getting for it?

A. I understand they are selling at prices all the way from $20 to $60 an acre.

Mr. Fenton: I move to strike out the answer as hearsay.

Q. Is that with the stumps in or with the stumps cleared?

A. That is with the stumps in, just after logging.

Q. Do you know who is the manager of that company?

A. The manager of the camp?

Q. Of the Chapman Lumber Company?

A. Yes, sir, Mr. James McNaughton is the superintendent of the logging camp.

Q. Is there a man by the name of Chapman who is connected with it?

A. I understand there was until perhaps a couple of years ago and he sold his interest to other parties.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. McNaughton has taken any of these logged off lands?

A. Mr. McNaughton told me a few days ago he had bought a quarter section of this logged off land.

Mr. Fenton: I move to strike out the answer as hearsay.

Q. Have you seen very much of the logged off land, enough of it so as to acquaint yourself with the character of the land?

A. Oh, yes, yes, sir.

Q. How is it there as to being rough or level?

A. It is somewhat rough, part of it, other portions are comparatively level.

Q. In your judgment, what percentage of that township could be cultivated after the timber is removed, and the stumps taken out?

A. You mean brought under the plow?

Mr. Fenton: The entire township you mean?

Mr. Townsend : Yes, so far as you are acquainted with it.

A. Well, so far as I am acquainted with it.

Q. Brought under the plow or otherwise cultivated.

A. So far as I am acquainted with it, possibly 75 per cent—60 or 65 or 70 per cent could be plowed. The whole of it—I call the whole of it agricultural land, because it would make the finest of pasture.

Q. Is there any waste land there in that township that you know of, to any considerable extent?

A. No, no. Do you mean rocky land by waste land?

Q. Yes.

A. No, not that I know of.

Q. Any land which, by reason of the character of the soil, is waste land?

A. No, sir. The soil is all of the same general character, shot soil.

Q. Are you still maintaining your home there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any home elsewhere?

A. I have not.

Q. Have you made any experiments yourself as to the use of that land for agricultural purposes or horticultural purposes?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. What have you done in that respect?

A. I have about an acre under cultivation and in garden, vegetables, potatoes, corn, tomatoes, beans, squash, turnips, carrots, parsnips, onions, strawberries, raspberries—fruit trees.

Q. Have you fruit trees set out?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How are they doing?

A. Fine.

Q. How old are they?

A. They have been set three years.

Q. Strawberries producing?

A. Strawberries produce finely. I had a patch of strawberries last year, 40x50 feet. The rows are 40 feet long and the patch was 50 feet wide. I picked 20 crates of strawberries from that patch, nice berries as you ever saw—nice as I ever saw. I sold about $22 worth to parties who came right to my door and took them away. This year I had just as many berries, but the market was down. I didn't sell berries this year. I bought some fruit jars and some sugar and canned the berries and sent them out, shipped them out to my boys in Aberdeen. I shipped two barrels of canned strawberries, packed in moss.

Q. Packed the cans?

A. Yes, the cans packed in moss. Strawberries were only worth a dollar a crate up there this year.

Q. Now, when did you apply to purchase this land from the Railroad Company?

A. In April, 1908.

Q. To whom did you apply?

A. Well, now, that I couldn't say. I went to what is known as the railroad offices in the Wells Fargo Building.

Q. Yourself?

A. Yes, sir, the land office.

Q. Do you know the name of the officer?

A. I do not.

Q. Your application was rejected?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you whether you applied to buy that land with the intention of making a home of it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you whether that is still your intention, if you can secure the land?

A. It is.

Q. Is there considerable timber on the quarter section that you applied to purchase?

A. Well timbered, with the exception of about two acres in this little burn, where I built my house—abou two acres where the fire had burned the timber off.

Q. Have you cut down any of the timber yourself?

A. Very little; a few trees—two or three trees that threatened to fall on my cabin. I cut those, and then other dry trees, stubs.

Q. What did you build your cabin of?

A. Cedar logs, split logs standing on end. First a sill and then split the logs eight feet long, split them in half and stood the logs on end with flat siding, and then plate on the top.

Q. Where did you get the logs?

A. Got them right there on this burn.

CROSS EXAMINATION.

Questions by Mr. Fenton.

Q. Mr. McLafferty, what is your first name?

A. David.

Q. What is the description of the tract you applied to the company to purchase under this Act of May 4, 1870?

A. The northeast quarter of Section 25, 4 North, 3 West.

Q. How did you happen to select that particular quarter section? Who selected it for you?

A. Mr. Snyder, John L. Snyder.

Q. Who was John L. Snyder, a timber cruiser?

A. I don't know whether he was a timber cruiser or not. I could not say.

Q. When did you say you went onto this land?

A. In April, 1908.

Q. Were you there on October 4, 1908?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you a family?

A. I have a wife.

Q. Was your wife with you there at that time?

A. My wife was there with me.

Q. I show you a couple of photographs of "Defendants' Exhibit 270," Nos. 91 and 92, purporting to be taken by Fred H. McClure on October 4, 1908, and first look at No. 91, and say whether that is a fairly good view of your cabin as it was on that date.

A. Yes, I recognize that.

Q. Does that show the extent of the improvements that you had at that time, your clearing, etc.?

A. No, sir, it doesn't show the clearing. It shows the cabin.

Q. Where is the clearing where you had your garden?

A. Farther here to the right.

Q. How far away from the cabin?

A. Well, it is 100 feet, perhaps.

Q. Now, look at 92, and I will ask you if that is a good picture of your cabin, the other side of it, showing the notice posted on the side there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you put up that notice?

A. Taken the same date. I did.

Q. Were you there when these pictures were taken?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Was your wife there?

A. She was. The photographers refused to allow us to be in the picture.

Q. You do not appear in the picture?

A. No, sir, they wouldn't let us to be in the picture.

Q. Did you want to be in the picture?

A. I did, most certainly. And I wouldn't do that again. If a man comes to take a picture of my home, I shall certainly be in it.

Q. Well, now, then, what did you offer to pay the company for this land?

A. $2.50 an acre.

Q. How many million feet of timber is there estimated on there?

A. I don't know. I have been told the cruise was 10,000,000.

Q. Well, 10,000,000 of good merchantable saw timber?

A. I suppose so, yes, sir.

Q. Who told you there was 10,000,000 on there?

A. The man who is located on the southwest quarter told me.

Q. Who is that?

A. Mr. Witte—Fred Witte.

Q. When did he locate?

A. I think he located the year before I did.

Q. But under the same offer of $2.50 an acre?

A. I think so.

Q. And the same statute. And it was a timbered claim that he got, was it?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, where were you living before you went out and attempted to settle on this quarter?

A. I was living—I had been living in Port Townsend the year before, Washington.

Q. How did you happen to come over here and go out on this timber quarter?

A. Well, I heard of other settlers who were going.

Q. You heard of other people who were serving these notices?

A. Yes, sir, settling on railroad lands.

Q. Yes. And it was following the agitation in 1907, and you were one of a great many that went out there on these railroad lands?

A. I don't know of a great many.

Q. Well, how many went out there in your neighborhood?

A. About 30 in our township.

Q. In this township?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did you all go out there about the same time?

A. I could not say.

Q. Well, didn't you all go out there in the spring of 1908?

A. I don't know.

Q. How many went out about the time you did?

A. Oh, I don't know of more than half a dozen, five or six who went out there that spring. I think the most of these settlers in the township had settled the year before.

Q. Do you know Edgar McLafferty?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is he?

A. My brother.

Q. Well, did he settle, or attempt to settle under the same way that you did, on the southeast quarter of Section 25, Township 4 North, Range 3 West?

A. Yes, sir, and at the same time.

Q. And he built a cabin, too, didn't he?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is he still living there?

A. Not there permanently, no.

Q. How long in the year does he stay there?

A. How?

Q. How much of the year does he spend there?

A. I couldn't say.

Q. Don't you know he hasn't been there in the last two years?

A. I think he was in there a year ago this summer.

Q. Stayed just a little while?

A. I don't remember.

Q. Now, don't you know he didn't stay there over ten days?

A. He might not.

Q. And he hasn't been there since, has he?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. Where is he now?

A. He is in Aberdeen.

Q. Gone back to work over at the Aberdeen mills?

A. No, he don't work in the mills.

Q. Well, he has gone back home then, to work?

A. Yes.

Q. Is he a man of family?

A. He is.

Q. Did he take his wife in there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did she stay?

A. I couldn't say as to that.

Q. She stayed there about a week when they built the cabin?

A. No, she wasn't there when they built the cabin.

Q. She wasn't there over a week all together, was she?

A. I couldn't say as to that. She was there somewhere from one to two weeks.

Q. And she has not been there since?

A. No, sir, she is a cripple.

Q. I know, but she has not been there since?

A. She is not able to go.

Q. I show you Nos. 89 and 90, purporting to be photographs of the cabin of Edgar McLafferty, on the southeast quarter of Section 25, taken by Fred H. McClure October 4, 1908, and ask if you recognize those as his cabin, pictures of his cabin and the surrounding country?

A. Yes, those are pictures of his cabin.

Q. They are fairly good pictures, are they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of the cabin and of the surrounding country?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see them taken?

A. I did not.

Q. Who is B. N. McLafferty?

A. He is my son.

Q. Well, did he go out there about the same time you did?

A. A little later.

Q. Well, he apparently has a cabin on the southeast quarter of Section 1, Township 3 North, Range 3 West.

A. I believe so.

Q. Well, is he a single man?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is he a married man?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he take his family out there?

A. He did.

Q. When did he take his family out there?

A. Soon after he made settlement, he built his home, built his cabin.

Q. When did he make the settlement?

A. I am not sure whether it was—it was a few weeks after I went down—perhaps in the latter part of May or in June.

Q. Did he get a good timber quarter?

A. Why, said to be about 3,000,000 feet on that quarter, I think.

Q. Has he been there the last year or two?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is he there now?

A. No.

Q. When did he leave. When was he last there?

A. He was there in September.

Q. How long did he stay when he was there?

A. A couple of weeks.

Q. And was he there the year before?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long was he there?

A. I could not say.

Q. A couple of weeks?

A. Perhaps a couple of weeks.

Q. And was he there the year before?

A. Yes, sir, every year.

Q. He was there a couple of weeks?

A. Every summer.

Q. Well, now, how much has he cleared?

A. He has not cleared, to cut down timber, cut down heavy timber, he has not cleared but very little.

Q. Did he have a garden there?

A. Yes, he had.

Q. When did he put the garden in?

A. He planted potatoes that fall.

Q. In September?

A. The first fall, yes, I think so.

Q. And those potatoes ripened next year?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Winter potatoes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Plant potatoes in the fall out there?

A. Plant potatoes in the fall—hoe potatoes in the fall.

Q. How many potatoes did he plant?

A. Oh, not very many.

Q. About five or six?

A. Oh, no, he planted a patch nearly as large as this room.

Q. What did he do with them?

A. Used part of them there.

Q. When he was there during the two weeks the next year?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he batched there, did he?

A. He had his wife there.

Q. They were having a little summer vacation of about two weeks in September?

A. You might call it so.

Q. Where did they go to? Where did they live when they were at home?

A. Aberdeen.

Q. I show you numbers 85 and 86, purporting to be pictures of the cabin of B. N. McLafferty, taken on October 3, 1908, and ask if you recognize those as good photographs of his cabin, two different views, and of the location around them?

A. Yes, sir, somewhat.

Q. Now, how much timber was there on the claim of Edgar McLafferty, Southeast quarter of Section 25?

A. Well, I don't think it is as good as mine.

Q. How much is yours? Yours is about 10,000,000?

A. They say about 10,000,000.

Q. His has about 8,000,000?

A. I presume so.

Q. About 8,000,000. Well, now, who is George E. McLafferty?

A. George E. is a nephew of mine. He is a son of Edgar.

Q. Where did he come from, Aberdeen?

A. He is living in Aberdeen. He is working there in Aberdeen now, yes.

Q. Well, now, he took the northeast quarter of Section 1, Township 3 North, Range 3 West. How much timber did he get on his place?

A. I don't know.

Q. About 3,000,000 or 4,000,000?

A. There is as much as that, I presume.

Q. It is a good timber claim, is it?

A. Yes, sir, fairly.

Q. I show you pictures, Numbers 82 and 83, purporting to be taken October 3, 1908, of his cabin there in the woods, with a notice on the front door.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you if that is a good picture of two different views of his cabin?

A. Yes, that is his cabin. It does not show his clearing.

Q. How much did he clear?

A. He has cleared in front of his cabin there, which would be back of the position from which the picture is taken, oh, a quarter of an acre, perhaps.

Q. What did he raise?

A. Potatoes, vegetables.

Q. When did he plant his potatoes, in the fall?

A. I couldn't say. I don't know.

Q. How long has he been there—two weeks?

A. No, sir. He was there all the first summer and all that winter, and part of the second summer continuously.

Q. Is he a man of family?

A. He was not then. He was a single man then.

Q. Where did he go and marry?

A. He married here in Portland.

Q. And then took his wife where?

A. He took his wife there on the claim and lived the next summer.

Q. And then he went away?

A. Now they are in Aberdeen.

Q. And they have not been back since?

A. No, they have not been there this summer.

Q. How?

A. They have not been there this past summer.

Q. Who is E. L. McLafferty?

A. He is my son.

Q. He appears to have applied for the northeast quarter of Section 1, Township 3 North, Range 3 West.

A. Yes.

Q. Did he get a first-class timber claim?

A. About the same as George E. They joined.

Q. About how many million feet on that?

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, estimate it.

A. The timber is about the same as the northeast quarter.

Q. About 8,000,000?

A. Oh, no.

Q. 4,000,000?

A. Possibly.

Q. I show you what purports to be photographs Numbers 80 and 81, taken by Fred H. McClure, October 3, 1908, showing the cabin of E. L. McLafferty, and the timber with two different views, and ask you if you recognize those as fairly good pictures of the two views of his cabin and the surrounding country?

A. Yes, sir. That is a picture of his cabin.

Q. Now, is he living on that at the present time?

A. During the summers, yes, sir.

Q. They come there in the summer time and then they go away?

A. During the vacation, and then they go out to get their children in school.

Q. How many weeks in the summer do they stay?

A. Oh, they have been there from four to six weeks.

Q. And where do they go then?

A. Aberdeen.

Q. How far is Aberdeen from this land?

A. About 100—oh, 120 miles, I should say.

Q. How far is this land from the railroad?

A. Why, by the way of the camp, by the way of the Chapman Timber Company's road and camp it is about 13 miles. You are speaking of this particularly?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, that is, oh, let's see—I think it would be about 12 miles by the road and trail.

Q. Any wagon road to these claims?

A. No, sir, not to his claim.

Q. Any wagon road to your claim?

A. After I built it. I built a road for myself.

Q. What do you get into then?

A. How?

Q. What road do you get into?

A. Why, there was an old county road up to, as far as where the Chapman Timber Company's old camp is now. Then there was a road from there to one of these old homesteads.

Q. You mean one of these old homesteads that the Chapman Timber Company bought?

A. Yes, sir, on an even section. Then I built the road from there to my cabin.

Q. What is good timber a quarter in there worth?

A. I couldn't say.

Q. What was it worth about the time you went out there?

A. I don't know.

Q. What is the stumpage worth? What does the Chapman Timber Company pay?

A. They talk about a dollar a thousand.

Q. What do the Chapman Timber Company pay for these homesteads, after they make final proof?

A. I couldn't tell you. I never heard.

Q. Most of these homestead people out there have sold out to the Chapman Timber Company, haven't they?

A. Yes, before I went there.

Q. Now, who is George McLafferty?

A. He is my son also.

Q. He appears to have applied to purchase the northwest quarter of Section 25, Township 4 North, Range 3 West?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I show you two photographs, Numbers 93 and 94, taken by Fred H. McClure, October 3 and 31, 1908, of what purports to be his cabin, and ask you if you recognize that as two views of his cabin?

A. Yes, sir, that is a picture of his cabin, that is, with the exception that the picture of his improvements was taken before the logs were cleared up, rolled up and burned.

Q. Has he got any garden there?

A. Yes.

Q. Where is his garden?

A. Down this way, in front.

Q. How far away from his cabin?

A. Oh, it is 100 feet, perhaps.

Q. Where is he now?

A. He is in Aberdeen.

Q. Was he there this summer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did he stay there this summer?

A. His wife was there about six weeks, I think. He was there—he has been there twice, at two different times this summer.

Q. This summer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he there last summer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They come every summer, do they?

A. Yes, sir, every summer.

Q. During August and September?

A. July.

Q. July or August and September?

A. July and August, yes, sir.

Q. That is when there is a vacation on?

A. Yes. They have children to go to school, they have to get back.

Q. When the children have vacation, they come over here in the summer, and spend a few weeks on the place?

A. Yes.

Q. Then they go back to Aberdeen where they live?

A. Yes, they go back there to educate their children.

Q. Do they keep house? Do all these people keep house over at Aberdeen?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you keep house over at Aberdeen?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, now, how many of these McLaffertys are there, all of them, out there, that have taken these timber claims, as you claim?

A. There were six, I believe, you enumerated there.

Q. Did you all get together before you went out, and agree that you would go out there and take these timber claims?

A. No, sir.

Q. Who advised you to take them, all of you?

A. I don't know as any one.

Q. You are represented in this suit by Mr. A. W. Lafferty, are you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Congressman from this district?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you make these filings, applications to file or applications to purchase, under the advice or by the direction of Mr. A. W. Lafferty?

A. No, sir.

Q. What lawyer advised you to, if any?

A. No lawyer.

Q. Did you have these printed forms?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you get them?

A. From Mr. Snyder.

Q. And did Mr. John L. Snyder employ Mr. Lafferty, too?

A. I believe he did.

Q. And do you know who prepared these printed forms, upon which you made your application?

A. I do not, no, sir.

Q. Don't you know they were prepared by Mr. A. W. Lafferty after he had been back at Washington?

A. I did not know it.

Q. Well, Mr. Lafferty is still representing you in this litigation?

A. Trying to.

Q. Well, he is, isn't he?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you been in attendance on this hearing, Mr. McLafferty, for some days?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been here?

A. I have been here since a week ago Thursday.

Q. Well, then, you are interested in the result of this suit, are you?

A. I have been waiting here to give my evidence in the suit.

Q. I know, but you are interested in the result of this litigation?

A. Yes, sir, I am.

Q. Now, will you swear, under oath, that if there had not been any timber on this land at all, you would have gone out there and settled?

A. Had been no timber on this land?

Q. Yes, if there had been no timber at all?

A. And I could have located?

Q. On this quarter section?

A. Yes, sir, I would.

Q. The timber was not any inducement to you?

A. I didn't say that.

Q. What is the fact? Was it somewhat of an inducement?

A. Why, certainly.

Q. That timber claim that you got, 10,000,000 foot claim, is worth about $10,000, isn't it?

A. I presume it is.

Q. Isn't your judgment that you have got the best timber claim in that whole country?

A. I don't know that I have.

Q. Well, you think you have, don't you?

A. It suits me pretty well.

Q. Now, isn't it a good timber claim that cruises 10,000,000 feet of saw timber?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is worth $10,000, isn't it?

A. I presume it is.

Q. And you want to get it for $2.50 an acre from the Railroad Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. After it has kept it for 30 or 40 years?

A. I want the Railroad Company to sell it to me according to the terms specified in the grant.

Q. You want it as Shylock wanted his bond?

A. I don't know as to that.

Q. The letter?

A. I didn't want the whole of it. I would be perfectly satisfied with a quarter section.

A. I ought to say that that picture of my place does not represent my improvements.

Mr. Fenton: I suppose it may be considered that these have been sufficiently identified with the testimony of the witness that these photographs are all part of Defendant's Exhibit 270?

Mr. Townsend: Yes, they have all been offered.

Mr. Fenton: Yes, I say it will not be necessary to re-offer them.

Mr. Townsend: Oh, no.

Whereupon, on re-direct examination, witness testified:

Q. Well, now, Mr. McLafferty, do you want this land if you are not entitled to buy it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether the Railroad Company wants it whether they are entitled to it or not?

A. I think they do.

Q. Now, would you be willing to take that place—if, under the law you are not entitled to the timber, would you be willing to take that place and let somebody else remove the timber, and still have a home of it?

A. If I am not entitled to the timber?

Q. Yes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you are entitled to the timber, you don't want anybody else to have it? That is your position today?

A. No, sir. If I am entitled to the timber, I want my share of it.

Q. Well, now, as a matter of fact, while the timber does add greatly to the value of it, would that make a good home even after the timber was cut off, Mr. McLafferty?

A. It certainly would make a beautiful home.

Q. Suppose it had been logged off when you went there, I will ask you whether, in your judgment, you would have been willing to have applied to purchase it in the same manner with the intention to make a home?

A. I would. Of course, it would have been more of a hardship to make a home of it without the timber, but I would have been glad to have gotten it without the timber.

Q. Now, why haven't you cut down more timber and improved more of the land, cleared more of the land?

A. Because of the uncertainty of the case.

Q. Have you understood that you had a right, pending this litigation, to clear the land of its timber?

A. I have understood so.

Q. Who advised you to that effect?

A. Mr. Lafferty.

Q. But how have you felt about taking chances on removing the timber until your rights were decided by the court?

A. Well, I have not felt willing to cut the timber to any extent until the case was decided.

Q. Well, then, to be honest with yourself, Mr. McLafferty, you are not trying to get that timber pending this litigation?

A. No.

Q. You are not going to take any of it unless the courts declare you are entitled to it?

A. If I did, I could have taken it and sold it to the Chapman Timber Company people, having a spur running across this section that I am on.

Q. Do you know why the photographer would not let you and your wife be in the picture?

A. He said that was the instructions of the people for whom he was working.

Q. What was?

A. Not to allow the settlers to be in the picture.

Q. Did you ask permission to be in the picture?

A. I did.

Q. And when he refused, where did you go?

A. In the house.

Q. Now, do you know why the photographer in each instance took these photographs so that they showed no clearings?

A. I don't know why. They probably had an object.

Q. Could they have taken the picture so as to have shown the clearings?

A. Yes.

Q. At the same time as the cabin?

A. Yes, they could.

Q. As far as you are concerned, was the camera set at a point where it would show the clearing or where it would not?

A. Where it would not. They went up and down by my cabin several times before selecting the location for their camera.

Q. I will ask you if the location that they selected was not the one which would show the least clearing and the most timber?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, how about these photographs here of E. L. McLafferty? There seems to be a clearing outside. Is that correct?

A. That is a burn.

Q. But there is no timber there?

A. No timber.

Q. And how with reference to this photograph of George E. McLafferty's cabin? Is that true there? Is that why that appears bare beyond there? Is there a burn, or has the timber been removed?

A. Allow me to look at that. No, that is looking over the brow of a hill. That is looking east over the brow of a hill toward the Columbia River.

Q. So that there is timber beyond there, but it is on a lower plane?

A. Well, I think there is more or less of a burn down in there, too.

Q. Do these photographs fairly represent the roughness of the country in there?

A. Yes, sir, especially that one of mine, I was building a porch there at that time, at the time that picture was taken. I was building a porch, and it shows the stuff scattered about there.

Q. Now, has this debris that appears in the photograph there been cleared up?

A. No, this wood I had cut from a log. These blocks there of wood, and this shows the starting of a porch that I built. The eaves of my house were too low to start a porch roof there, and swing it out, so I set my posts in front, and then ran my porch roof from the post away back to the ridge of my cabin. So it makes a double roof on the south side, and makes a porch there in front about ten feet high in the front. Then since that I have built on another portion here, which makes a nice little bedroom about 10 feet square, and a woodshed.

Q. Then does this photograph represent your present improvements, or simply the improvements as they were on October 4, 1908?

A. Simply as they were the first fall after I went there.

Q. How about this debris here, is that still there?

A. No, that has all been cleared up, and I have raised corn and tomatoes there. I have strawberries on the other side, to the right.

Q. When you say to the right, you mean south of the cabin?

A. Well, I speak now of the tract that runs right down here where you go down here from the cabin, from the porch. On the right of that I have strawberries. On the left, well, I have strawberries too on the left here, but in the foreground I had corn and tomatoes and beans last year, and potatoes.

RE-CROSS EXAMINATION.

Q. How much did I understand you, Mr. McLafferty, to say you had cleared on the land you claim?

A. How?

Q. How much do you have cleared on the land you claim?

A. I have about an acre under cultivation.

Q. So that your corn, your beans and your potatoes, and your strawberries, and all that stuff is all on this one acre?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is under fence, I suppose?

A. No, not under fence.

Q. Oh, it is outside?

A. Fencing is not necessary.

REDIRECT EXAMINATION.

Q. You mean there are no cattle roaming in there?

A. No.

Whereupon F. G. McWILLIAMS, a witness called on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is fifty-nine years old, resides at Ashland, Jackson County, Oregon, and has lived in that county and in Oregon fifteen years. Before coming to this state, he lived at Houston, Texas. His business in Jackson county is real estate and loans, and some mining—interested in some mines. He was raised on a farm until he was twenty-one years old and farmed, he was on his father's farm in southern Wisconsin until he was twenty-one years old. He has not farmed any since himself, but has dealt in farm lands in Jackson county. He knows the farms all over the Rogue River valley and Sam's valley, orchards and farms both, and ranches up in the hills, and is pretty well acquainted all over southern Jackson county, and part of Josephine county in a general way. They produce in Jackson county pretty nearly everything but oranges and lemons. They produce potatoes, wheat, corn, oats, rye, fruit of all kinds; they produce corn, and hay of all kinds, timothy, clover and alfalfa. He is interested with a company in Jackson county that is called the Ashland Commercial Orchard Company, which owns four hundred and sixty acres on Emigrant Creek, about six miles east of Ashland, in township 39 south, range 2 east,—it is an old donation land claim. He does not know that he can give the sections. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259," he is acquainted with the territory in township 39, ranges 2 and 3 east, township 38, ranges 2 and 3 east, and is better acquainted with township 38, range 2 east. He has sold lands there and has shown lands all through it, has gone through it with a team and has shown different tracts of land there. One will notice the Willamette Meridian running through there. He is acquainted in township 39 south, also 38-2 east, quite well acquainted, because they have this body of land right in there. He owns eighty acres in section 16, township 38, range 2 east, he owns half of the southeast quarter, and then their Company owns four hundred and sixty acres in 38 south, range 2 east. Emigrant Creek runs along there. A mile south of section 16 is where they own this big tract of land, the four hundred and sixty acres that is in cultivation, that is in township 38 south, range 2 east. He is acquainted with those townships in a general way, referring to townships 38 and 39 south, range 2 east. He is acquainted with township 38-3 east, in the Dead Indian country, and has driven through there. He is only acquainted in a general way, by driving through the country there, noticing the lands. He is acquainted right around Lilyglen, which is a postoffice. This is a level country over in township 38 south, range 3 east, no mountains there, regular plateau for miles. He notices these green markings, which indicate the unsold lands of the railroad company. He is acquainted with the area in township 38 south, range 3 east—only knows in a general way by driving through there. He would not know which was railroad land from the other lands. But in township 38 south, range 2 east, he knows of several sections of land there but does not know the numbers. In township 38 south, range 2 east, there is a lot of railroad land and a lot of homesteads. He knows that better because he has driven up there and sold lands in there and showed lands, sold ranches in there, and he has driven there several times. He would go up there to show lands for sale. He never went up there for any other purpose. He went up to show the Cove ranch a couple of times. Another time he went up to sell a piece of land—show the land. It was originally a homestead. When he went through township 38 south, range 3 east, he was driving to Crater Lake, and camped over there on Little Butte Creek, and noticed the land. He does not know that he is acquainted with any definite section of railroad land, only that it was pointed out to him that it was adjoining several of those homesteads in township 38 south, range 3 east, that was railroad land. He would not know the numbers of them. This land was adjoining different homesteads, and they were pointed out to him as being railroad lands. In township 38 south, range 3 east, he knows that the land is generally a nice level country. He was surprised after he got over that range the first time he went over there that it was such level land over along there. The road was quite level and the country was level for a good many miles. He would say that in his opinion 50 or 60 per cent of that land in township 38 south, range 3 east, could be rendered suitable for cultivation. He would think that the land in township 38, range 2 east, would run 50 per cent that could be rendered suitable for cultivation. That is a nice township of land after one gets up over the steep mountain. In getting out, it is a pretty steep hill until one gets up over the steep mountain, and after one gets up to it, it is a kind of plateau, level land up there, just gently sloping, it is not rough and rugged. There are people living all over that community, all over township 38 south, range 2 east, there are homesteaders, making their homes and living right there, opening up farms. The only right good timber lands that he noticed there would be on the Cove Range. They acquired that a good many years ago. They claim nine million feet on that and they own eighteen hundred acres, but that is one end of the ranch, of course. The rest is open land, three hundred acres open land, seeded to timothy and clover, fine ranch. He would not say where that is located, only it is on the east side of township 38 south, range 2 east, he could not give the sections. Some parties from Washington were talking about buying it. He did not pay any attention to the legal subdivisions. He thought that it was purchased from the railroad company, about twenty-five years ago, and it is on Cove Creek, that is one of the best ranches there is and contains eighteen hundred acres. He does not know whether there are any railroad lands that have been deeded or under contract in that amount in this township, that is what they claim to own there. The yellow field there shows the lands that have been lost to the grant by prior settlement, either under the donation law or homestead law. Mr. Silsby of Ashland owns the ranch and claims eighteen hundred acres. He has a very fine house on it, and barns and blacksmith shops. He is well acquainted in township 39 south, range 1 west. That is a good deal more rolling and rough than the land he has been speaking about. He does not think there would be over 25 per cent of that land in that township that could be rendered suitable to cultivation. It is not timbered, it has no good timber on it at all, it is just brush and scattering large trees. And there are mines up in there, a lot of the timber that was fit for mining purposes has been cut out. The Ashland mine cut a whole lot of the timber. There is no big timber there that he remembers. The only other township he is acquainted with is township 37 south, range 3 west, that is on Jackson Creek, up from Jacksonville. There is quite a lot of railroad land in township 37 south, range 3 west. That country is pretty rolling, although there is some land that would lay pretty good there. It is a mining country in there, several mines in there. He would think that it would average about one-third that could be cultivated. There was some timber over in the north part of the township that was sold to Council Bluffs people for a logging company, and that is the only good timber that was on it. This would be south of Gold Hill, on Jackson Creek. He is not acquainted with any of the other lands in there. That is about all that he is acquainted with. The eighty acres of which he spoke is located in Sam's Valley, and was originally a homestead, and he has owned that about three years. That land in its native state lays pretty good. There is a lot of timber on it. It would not be good logging timber, but there is a lot of laurel and oak, mostly laurel and oak, some pine. No part of it is under cultivation. It could be nearly all cultivated, it could all be cultivated, he thinks. That was part of a homestead, he cannot remember, but he thinks it was about eleven years ago, as near as he can remember, that was taken up, entered from the Government. They can produce anything on these lands with which he is acquainted, that could be produced in that country, grains and grass, timothy and clover. He does not think any of the lands with which he is acquainted are too high to produce fruits. Fruits are raised in that general community. Fruit has been raised up on the Cove ranch—they raise fruit there. That is in township 38 south, range 2 east, and he thinks they call the altitude about 3800 feet. There are settlers all through that territory. All the homestead land is taken, and lands adjacent, adjoining the railroad lands, are farmed and used for farming purposes.

Q. Now, what is your opinion, Mr. McWilliams, as to whether these railroad lands, if divided in 160 acre tracts, would be suitable for settlement purposes; that is, similar to a homestead, a man to go on there for the purpose of establishing a home and making a living there in the farming industry?

A. You mean the percentage?

Q. Yes, I mean the percentage of the 160 acre tracts that would be suitable for that.

A. Of all the lands we have been speaking about?

Q. Yes.

A. On an average of all of it, well, taking the land that I know west of Ashland and west of Jacksonville, and that east of Ashland, I suppose they would average about 33 1/3 per cent.

Q. Well, now, do you mean 33 1/3 per cent of the land could be cultivated?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, I mean what number of the quarter sections in 160 acre tracts would be suitable for settlement purposes? Not how much of it could be cultivated.

A. Oh, I see. Well, I think three-fourths of them would make homes.

Q. Now, in your opinion, Mr. McWilliams, what has been the effect of the Railroad Company's withdrawal of these lands from the market, their failure to comply with the conditions of the grant and sell the lands to actual settlers in tracts of 160 acres, the effect upon the community there, that you are acquainted with?

A. Well, I think it is very detrimental to the growth of the country. We would have many more people there if they had sold the land in 160 acres—I think easy twice as many in the towns and in the country.

Whereupon, upon cross examination, witness testified, that he had only been there about fifteen years. He knows that that land was on the market from about 1880 up to about 1905, about twenty-five years in Jackson county, and that only a small part of it has been bought, excepting that he thinks they took the land off the market around Ashland in 1901—at least he was told they did. He got that from the railroad agent or local agent at Ashland, P. B. Whitney, who was agent at that time in 1901. The reason for that was they were boring for oil, and he said the company had taken its land all off, it would not sell any of it after they got down about 1500 feet. There was a little oil excitement east of Ashland and the people thought they were going to get oil, and the railroad he thought, according to what Whitney said, withdrew a certain territory there from sale. He does not mean that they withdrew all the lands around Ashland. It was on the east side of Ashland where they were boring for oil. There was a coal find out there somewhere, and they thought they had struck coal. The railroad went in there and with its expert, Professor Dumble, tried to find coal, and found it. The people ran out of funds at Ashland, he was interested in that himself, but they never developed a coal mine there. There are coal croppings in several places throughout the country, from the Rogue River Valley to the California line. They never have found any coal that he knows of, in quantities sufficient to mine. They struck a little gas one time in western Oregon. The country around Ashland, as he understands, has been settled for fifty years, and he heard that a good deal of that cleared land was taken under the Donation Land Law of September 27, 1850, and he knows in a general way that was how it was taken. The Orchard Company in which he is interested, east of Ashland five or six miles, is called the Ashland Commercial Orchard Company, and it has four hundred and thirty-six acres, and is on the donation land claim of Henry Chapman, taken in 1853. It was clear land, they have only a hundred and fifty acres in cultivation, it was never timbered land, but always kind of a prairie. He understands that the Rogue River Valley, the land that is now in cultivation in the Valley, was clear, all clear land in the beginning. But that was nearly all taken up under the Donation Land Law. This little piece of land that he speaks of in Sam's Valley, this eighty acres he bought, he bought it the year of the Seattle Fair, three years ago, and paid five dollars an acre for it. Sam's Valley is north of Gold Hill. This eighty acres of his, is about two miles right west of Sam's Valley. The first section in which Sam's Valley is situated is white, as shown on this map, and the second section west of that in Sam's Valley is yellow, and that shows that that was taken under some law prior to the time the company's grant attached, and that it was lost to the company, if it was in a railroad section. He thinks that his place is two miles west of Sam's Valley, but he may be mistaken. The present ownership map of Jackson county shows the name of Charles Coppock on this land that he bought, but he cannot remember the ection that it is in. It is wild land, joining the Fitz-erald ranch, which is an old settled place, but he can-ot say whether the Fitzgerald ranch is a donation land laim. Part of this eighty acres that he owns is in the oothills. Ashland's water system originates southwest f Ashland. Ashland gets its water supply fourteen iles at the top of the butte. The Reserve comes down ithin three miles of the city. This is known as the shland Reserve and contains 16,000 acres, they claim. he Reserve was for the purpose of keeping the water ure for the city. It has timber also. The country with-two miles west of Ashland is probably a thousand eet higher than it is in Ashland. It is not very abrupt, ot very rough, and not very broken—it is not nearly broken as it in in some places. It is kind of a smooth ountain, lots of soil on the mountain. There is a agon road up to the Ashland Mine, and one up to a an by the name of Mahan who lived there for several ears. The Ashland Mine is three miles west of Ash-nd. That country up in there west of Ashland is not ltivated to amount to anything, there is no good saw mber on it either. It has been mined, and some of the g timber has been used for mining and for wood, and e rest of it is rock and chaparral and manzanita, and rubby oak—stuff of that kind. The surface is not so ry rocky, in spots there is rock. He thinks not over e-third of that could be cultivated even it it was eared. That land is nearly all owned by Mr. Billings d Mr. Anderson, who bought that in an early day, d have owned it for years, he thinks. Billings lives in the edge of Ashland, and he thinks he has a section—nearly a section—around there, which he pastures and upon which he cuts fire wood. He sells plenty of cordwood at six dollars a cord and delivers wood to Ashland, and that is his only revenue outside of pasture. West of Jacksonville is a mining country. The Opp mine has a 20-stamp mill out there, just two miles from the post-office at Jacksonville. There is a good deal of that railroad land out west of Ashland and in the township south of Gold Hill, referred to in his testimony, which is covered with small stuff on it, with manzanita, chapparal, and greasewood and stuff of that kind.

Q. Don't you know, Mr. McWilliams, that there is about 100,000 acres of this railroad land grant in Jackson County that you could not sell today to anybody, excepting for prospective mines, mining prospects, for a dollar an acre, scattered over the grant, all over it, on account of the rock and chapparral and stuff of that kind—no timber on it of consequence?

A. No, I think there aint an acre there I couldn't sell for $2.50 an acre.

Q. That is your judgment.

A. That is what I would think.

Q. Well, if Mr. — I can't think of his name—in 1896 General Reames lived at Jacksonville. Did you know him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. An old timer there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now dead. And Mr. Beekman—C. C. Beekman?

A. Yes.

Q. Who lived there for 40 years, testified that there was over 100,000 acres of that land that was not worth twenty-five cents an acre. You would think that they were mistaken, would you?

A. Mr. Beekman is a kind of a pessimist, you know.

Q. Well, isn't there a lot of that land that you really couldn't do anything with, excepting probably having a large area of it you might try to pasture a little of it?

A. Well, the land that I am acquainted with—

Q. Well, I am not speaking now about what you are specially acquainted with.

A. Well, I couldn't speak to what I don't know.

Q. Haven't you been over a lot of this railroad land that you wouldn't consider of any particular value?

A. No, sir, I have not seen any but what I would consider worth $2.50 an acre or more.

Q. Well, what is the best of it worth that you have seen?

A. You don't mean for timber?

Q. Well, for anything.

A. Well, I aint much acquainted with the timberland. I would say it was worth from $10 to $15 an acre, a great deal of it.

Q. The timber quarters you would not know what they were worth for timber?

A. No, I aint acquainted with the timber business at all.

Q. You don't handle timber at all?

A. No, sir.

Whereupon witness testified, that there is a great deal of good timber in Jackson county. The best section of timber is in Jenny Creek, he has always understood that was the best. He only knows by hearing people talk about it what is reputed to be the amount of timber on a good quarter section. He understands that a timber quarter to be valuable for timber, that would sell on the market, would have to cruise about three million feet to be called merchantable timber, and according to his information a good many quarters in that county will cruise that and more. He is in the real estate and loan business. He applied to purchase some of this land under the Act of April 10, 1869. He applied for the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 1, township 39 south, range 1 west. It had a prospect on it, he spent quite a little money on it. The railroad company sold him that land. That was fourteen years ago, and he got it for two dollars and a half an acre. He bought that under an arrangement that was then in force where the company sold any land that was considered mineral at a flat rate of two dollars and a half an acre, on a quit-claim deed.

Q. And that was the custom that obtained in Jackson County and Josephine County on the part of the Company for years?

A. 14 years ago, yes, sir, they sold it. I wrote to Mr. Andrews. Mr. Britt came up there and found me mining on the land, and he says—I was acquainted with him personally—he says, "Mr. McWilliams, you are mining on my land." And I says, "This is not your land." He says, "It is railroad land. I am agent for the Railroad Company." "Well," I said, "I will show you that that is mineral land, and you can't hold it under your grant.' And I got a pan of dirt and panned it, and got a string of gold about that long. I says, "I am going to try to hold this claim. I have a brother who is a lawyer. It wont cost me very much." And he says, "Mr. McWilliams, I will tell you. You can buy that for $100. It is cheaper than to contest." He says, "You will have to apply to George H. Andrews of Portland." So I did, and got that land.

Q. In other words, the company, where there was mineral on the land, and it was possible that there was mineral in it, and it had mineral prospects, the Company had in force a rule under which they could buy this so-called mineral land at $2.50 an acre, at a flat price, under what we call a quit-claim deed?

A. Yes, but they did away with that shortly afterwards.

Q. I know, but that was obtaining at the time you bought yours?

A. Yes, I tried to buy the other forty.

Q. Many people thought that the company had no right to these lands in which there was any evidences of mineral found, though they had a patent to it?

A. Yes.

Q. That was the advice which you had from your brother as a lawyer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was a question that had been litigated some in the courts down there before Judge Hanna?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In Josephine County particularly there were several suits of that kind in which the Company won out? That is right, isn't it?

A. Well, I don't remember about that.

Q. The courts held that the patents were conclusive in the absence of fraud?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you paid this $2.50 an acre for this piece of land as mineral?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you develop it?

A. After that I ran about 100 foot more tunnel.

Q. And did you find any—did you make it a paying mine?

A. No, sir, I quit.

Q. Well, why did you quit?

A. Well, my money ran out.

Q. Well, now, isn't that the experience of a good many men who went to mining down there in that country?

A. Well, that their money run out, yes.

Q. They could not develop it, or else it did not appear in paying quantities, sufficient to justify further expenditure?

A. Well, I still think it is a good prospect, only I got a better prospect back of Jacksonville, and paid $1,000 for it. We have a ten-foot hole, and we have developed that and took out $18,000 out of that.

Q. What mine is that?

A. That is the Gold Standard, we call it, adjoining the Opp Mine.

Q. Is that on railroad land?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you get the title to that?

A. Well, we got it through Mr. Tom Reames. He had bought it from the Railroad Company, and he deeded to us.

Q. I see. So the title was out of the Railroad Company and in your company?

A. Yes, sir, in Mr. Reames.

Q. There is a good deal of mineral land over Jack-on County, isn't there, both placer and quartz?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. A year or two ago there was a discovery of a pocket of some $23,000 or $24,00 dug out, just picked up on the surface of the earth down there, wasn't there?

A. Well, I have heard that, at Gold Hill, yes. Long before my time, though.

Q. But those pockets are scattered all over in Josephine and Jackson Counties?

A. Well, that is the characteristic of all mining countries.

Q. The result was in 1905 and 1906 there was a good deal of activity in mining and locating men on mineral prospects, wasn't there?

A. Well, there wasn't any locating that I know of. People located themselves. They went out and found something.

Q. What I mean is, there were people that were in all these towns, Grants Pass, Medford and Ashland?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Prospecting and getting out on these differ[illegible] lands?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Trying to find mineral lands, and trying to locate on them?

A. About 12 years ago there was lots of them, yes.

Q. And it was very active up to about 1906, and 1907, when the Railroad Company, as you say, withdrew the lands from sale?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then that created a good deal of agitation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And discussion as to whether or not the company could not be compelled to sell these lands?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then later, as timber became an item, that added to it, didn't it?

A. Well, I think it did.

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.

Q. Mr. McWilliams, you spoke of some other timber tract that you tried to buy there, or mineral tract that you tried to buy of the Railroad Company, other than the one that you did buy?

A. Yes, another 40 acres. I had spent $500 on that, too.

Q. Well, what was the history of that?

A. Well, I developed that, spent $500 on it, and then I thought if I could buy it I would save working the assessments every year, and I made application to buy it about 1905, I guess, and the company would not sell it. They said that they were not going to put their land on the market for awhile on account of the records being burned in the San Francisco fire. I guess that was later than 1905, because that was after the earthquake, the next year after the earthquake.

The records had been burned, they said, and they had to re-list the lands, and have them passed.

Q. Do you know anything about the practice of the Railroad Company when contests were filed against the mineral land, or by the mineral man against the Railroad Company in the Land Office, prior to the issuance of patent, claiming that the land was mineral land, and therefore exempt from the grant, excepted from the grant, of getting a mineral man to dismiss his contest, and permit them to get patent, upon the agreement that they would sell the land to him at $2.50 an acre, representing that if he had to obtain it from the Government, he would have to pay $5.00 an acre?

A. Well, it would be just hearsay with me. I have heard that that was the case.

Whereupon H. S. PALMERLEE, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn testified that he is thirty-six years old, resides at Swastika, Oregon, on his homestead a few miles from Swastika, which is a little postoffice established by themselves, in Klamath County, Oregon. When his homestead is surveyed it will be the southwest quarter of section 36, township 38 south, range 5 east. He has lived on his homestead about seven years, which was unsurveyed land until about a year ago and the plats have not yet been filed and so far as the records are concerned would still be classed as unsurveyed land. He has never perfected his homestead filing on the land. It was placed in the forest reserve about a year after he settled on the land. The character of the land through there where his homestead is situated is a large plateau covering several miles in extent and the soil is rather of a clay, sandy clay loam he would call it, and generally speaking it is timber land. His homestead is chiefly valuable for grass and grain and roots and some vegetables and he raises on it rye, wheat, oats—vetch and timothy do particularly well. He raises cabbage, kale and roots, such as carrots, onions and beets. The elevation is too high to make fruit a success, and is about 5300 feet. He has about five acres cleared on his homestead and 150 acres under good substantial stock fence. He has a good substantial house, well built, ceiled and papered, workshop, woodshed, barn and hay shed and fences inside his main pasture enclosing buildings and clearings upon his homestead. There are other settlers up in that community. He would say that right in that locality a very large percentage, he would say 80 per cent of the land could be cultivated and has soil that would be productive and lays in such a position that it could be cultivated when cleared. His homestead is in township 36 south, range 5 east in section 6. The reserve takes in part of section 3, all of sections 4, 5, 6 and 7, township 38 and has been extended since they settled there in 1906. He would judge from "Defendants' Exhibit 259" that his homestead is within the limits of this grant. He knows from his own knowledge that railroad land adjoins him just across the county line in section 1, township 38 south, range 4 east and the section south of him, section 7, is considered a railroad section, which was unsurveyed until a year ago. He is acquainted with practically all the unsold lands, referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259" in the north part of township 38, 5 east and about two-thirds of township 38, range 6 east and in 4 east practically all of 38 south, range 5 east. This land lies very level as a general thing. Of course there are ridges and hills through it but as a general thing that township lays very nice and he thinks eighty per cent of these lands in there could be rendered suitable for cultivation after it is cleared. There is a variety of timber on these lands; the white fir predominates there. There is also red fir and yellow pine and a very little white pine which makes up the balance. He has been through townships 40 and 41 south, range 2, 3, 4 and 5 east to quite an extent and has been all through those townships sufficiently to acquaint him with the general character of the lands therein, and in his opinion twenty-five per cent of township 40 south, ranges 2 and 3 east could be rendered suitable for cultivation. Then over in 40 south, 4 and 5 east there is a much larger percentage; that takes it down into a more level country which could be tilled a great deal easier than it could in the other portion. The other portion lies a good deal of it up in the Siskiyou mountains and some of it is quite hilly and rocky. He would say, to be conservative, that forty per cent of the last named townships could be cultivated, referring to 40 south, ranges 4 and 5 east, and these percentages, as to the entire area that he has covered in his testimony, if the land were divided into 160 acre tracts would continue generally as to land that could be tilled. There are settlements and farms which have been there for some time in the same general communities as these lands about which he has testified. There is one in particular that he thinks is located in township 40 south, range 3 east, where the people have been there forty years, one family and in that same township there are several others that he could mention who have been in there from four to seven years from what they have told him, the only way of knowing, and from personal acquaintances, and while the land that they are located on in this particular locality is the one that he says is twenty-five per cent tillable, he would think they have small patches cleared of 10 to 15 acres and good comfortable homes and the balance is used for grazing and he would say that the grazing land all in through this rough part of the country raises very luxuriant grass, and the wild pea vine grows there, which is considered one of the very best stock feeds that they have in the mountain ranges. These settlers keep stock, goats, cattle, horses, hogs, in various numbers. He had some difficulty in obtaining his filing on his homestead. One reason was the unfriendliness of the Forest Service in holding back their applications and putting in various false reports in regard to them and their first application was thrown down. The second application for survey was lost in the Medford office and hindered for about six months;

then the surveyor's notes were lost in the Portland office for three or four mouths and finally reached Washington and they are there now, he supposes, they have not heard from them for a long time, and they hope they are there. This has had an effect upon the improvements of his homestead in this way. After they had been there about five years they got so little encouragement from the Government as to their doing anything that they ceased to do very much in the way of improving. They would like to know something definite before they would do very much more. They had spent a good deal of time and money in making their improvements and it is his intention to make a home of his homestead and cultivate the soil and use it for stock raising.

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified that he could not say positively as to how much timber he has on his homestead. The majority of the timber on his homestead is a white fir, which is not considered of very much value and he has not had any experience in estimating the amount of timber on the land and therefore his opinion would not be very valuable on that line. He would simply guess that there might be two million feet of good timber on his homestead. He has not cruised it and is not a timber cruiser. His business is that of farming. He was educated in Minnesota, came to Oregon seven years ago; was formerly a farmer; was raised on a farm and with the exception of about eight years that has been his work. He has never been in the Government service and has been in the grocery business and dry goods business in southern Minnesota.

He came to this section of the country where he located, to get a homestead about seven years ago. About that time there were a great many inquiries for timber and when he came out here he had in mind that he would get a good timber quarter, this quarter, his homestead, was shown to him but not as a timber quarter. When he came out from Minnesota he did take a timber quarter under the Timber and Stone Act in section 2, township 38, range 5 east, about three miles east of his homestead. He has been in the stock business to a very little extent while he has been on this homestead. It is a good stock country around there. He has never heard, and could not tell the number of acres in its native state on this out range that are estimated to be necessary to support one head of cattle. The ranchers there, or homestead entrymen, run stock and pasture them out in the common, in the Forest Reserve, and he thinks they pay for that privilege in the Forest Reserves forty or sixty cents a head for the season. Stock raising is the chief industry that these people have and the cattle all run at large over railroad lands too. The Forest Service for some reason or other has been antagonistic to all settlers locating in that part of the country. They do not know what the reason is but nevertheless it has been true that so far as they have been able to learn their reports upon settlers have all been other than favorable. It is not entirely because the Forest Service have reported that these lands were chiefly valuable for timber and were being taken for timber and not for homesteads. There is lots of land in through that reserve that is devoid of timber and should an applicant wish to get one of these pieces of land, the report made by the Forest Service would be that if planted to timber it would grow timber, or that it was reserved for Forest Rangers Stations and it seems to be the method of the Forest Service to retain these lands as a timber reserve, that is lands that are either actually timbered at the present time or for growing timber in the future.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Do you know that Mr. Graves is of the opinion that nearly all of the lands within the forest reserves that are sought under the guise of actual settlers are really desired for timber? Don't you know that that is his published opinion?

A. Well, judging from the method of procedure of the forest rangers through that country, I would think that they do.

Whereupon witness testified that fruits do not successfully grow on these lands on account of their elevation. They are subject to frosts there during the summer months. George W. Jones, the postmaster at Swastika, the nearest postoffice, is a stock man and has a large ranch of 320 acres. Swastika is just a postoffice. For their nearest trading point they go to either Ashland or Klamath Falls. The distance is about the same. Ashland is about thirty miles distant. He is directly on what is known as the Dead Indian Road, the old established road. A man by the name of Whitcomb located him on this land. Whitcomb's principal headquarters had been at Klamath Falls. He would call the lands which he has described and over which he has been in these various townships a timbered country, but would not say that the chief value of these unsold railroad lands was timber. There is now no demand for timber there at all and there has not been an active demand for timber. He has not known of a single sale made in that locality recently or at all. He is speaking of the locality of his homestead and there has not been very much of a demand for past years for timber lands in these various townships both east and west. He understands that Hopkins has about forty thousand acres in there on the Jenny Creek belt, about twenty-five miles southeast from him. He has heard cruisers talk about two million to three million feet as being a good timber quarter in that country. The man that had been forty years in there, of which he spoke in particular, raises all kinds of produce, fruits and grain, butter and eggs, and everything of that kind and he thinks his place is in township 40 south, range 2 or 3 east, about fifteen miles from Ashland he thinks. He homesteaded his place before the railroad acquired this grant. His name is J. M. Tyler and his postoffice is Soda Springs on the Green Spring Mountain road. He sells to the markets at Ashland and raises produce in the way of butter and eggs and he raises pork for that market and sells that in Ashland and is extensively engaged in that. He makes a little more than a good living. He is not in the hog or egg business as such, but is in the general farming business. His chief income would be from stock, butter and eggs, and he has been there he thinks about forty years. The other settlers that have come in there later are Mr. Davis who lived back about two or three miles still further. He is off to one side of the main road and back in among the hills and has a homestead which has timber on it and it is just a fair timber quarter he would think. He has, he presumes, about ten to twenty acres cleared and has been there about seven or eight years, and is about two or three miles away from this man who has been there forty years. Another is J. D. Williams, whose homestead is about two miles still further back. He does not think he has a very extra good timber claim and thinks his is principally open land. He could not say how much he has cleared and under cultivation, but thinks he has about twenty-five acres and the balance he uses for pasture. The lands of this man are mostly fenced, some with wire fence and some with rails. They all have stock on the out range, cattle and hogs, that is what they get their living from principally, the stock business. They raise very nice potatoes and strawberries in that locality. Whenever they have more than they need for their own use, they haul it to Ashland, which is their nearest market. There is no stage travel in there, they are off the stage road to one side. The land which has timber on it could not be tilled until the timber is removed.

Whereupon JAMES F. WILSON, called as a witness on behalf of complainant being duly sworn testified that he is fifty-seven years old, resides in Linn County, Oregon, near Crawfordsville and has lived in that country since 1881. He has followed principally logging but he is farming now. His farm is located in section 20, township 14 south, range 1 west and he owns only one hundred and seven acres. He does not remember how long he has owned it, but he never moved on to it until five years ago, although he bought it a good many years ago. It was a donation land claim. There are sixty acres under cultivation that he farms and he raises pretty nearly everything. He does not raise grain to thresh but raises grain hay, puts pretty nearly everything into hay that he raises. He has a young orchard on the place but none bearing. It is a pretty fair fruit country. He raises pretty much all kinds of vegetables. He purchased eighty acres of land from the Oregon and California Railroad Company about 1885, or 1886, and paid $3.50 an acre for it, it was good farm land, and he bought it for raising stock. He had it about all in farming land and pasture excepting ten acres, it was timber and densely covered with what he would call pole timber. When he speaks of pole timber he means from a little bush up to say ten inches. There was quite a lot of big timber rotten at the top, it was not counted valuable at all at that time. The timber had no value at all and he was not interested in timber. When he purchased the land it was solely purchased for agricultural uses, that is what he bought it for. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259" he lives in section 20, township 14 south, range 1 west. Holley and Crawfordsville are in this township. All north of where he lives was taken a good many years ago and has been settled years and years in old donation claims pretty much all of it. South of him then begins land that has been taken principally since he came into the country. He is acquainted with the general country south of where he lives now and is very well acquainted with all of township 15 south, 1 west over in the Mohawk country where he is. He has been all over and run his cattle all through the lands between the Mohawk and the Calapooia, that is townships 14 and 15. After he gets off of 14 and 15 he does not know the lines. The other he has been to corners and all around that land in townships 14 and 15 south, range 1 west, and he will say for twenty miles east of his old place through there hunting cattle and deer; that is east of Crawfordsville in townships 14 and 15 south, range 1 west, that lies through a low gap in the mountains, it is high on both sides, all nice land pretty much all of it. There is some in the east, a little on the east part of that, that is getting rough. Eliminating two or three sections he would say that half, or in the neighborhood of half of this land, after the timber that is on it has been removed, could be farmed or tilled. There are two of these sections one could hardly find a level enough place "to whip a dog on," section 11 in 15 and section 2 in 14 he did not make his estimate on each one. Referring to section 11, township 15, there is a mountain which rises up right there and covers that section. The section about covers it. It is very fine timber and only about eighty acres of the south side is bare and very rocky and very steep. Section 2 is on the head waters of Brush Creek and is all broke up in gullies before it comes down to the main creek. That is very rough in there and heavily timbered, about the best timber there is in that country. There are settlers on the even numbered sections in this area with which he is acquainted in township 14 and 15 south 1 west. Township 15 along the river was pretty nearly settled when he came to the country in 1881, that is in the even sections, part of it in the even sections. There were some settlers off the river and there are some beyond, they are farming, some raising grass, stock and hay. The land about Foster and Sweet Home country is bottom land and is sandy land and is a little better land than where these settlers are in townships 14 and 15 south, 1 west. There is quite a bottom on the Santiam, along near Foster, bottoms and sloping land, it runs back up but this is taking him off of townships 15 and 14 and in a country that he never ranged over only to go up the Santiam River. He is acquainted, however, in that locality, has been up the river clear on across the mountains. There are a number of ranchers there in that Sweet Home country in townships 13 and 14 south, back in ranges 1 and 2 east, but he has never ranged through that Sweet Home country only to travel the main road and he is not acquainted with them, that is, some places that he knows were only just on the road, he has been over six or eight times across the mountains there. Fifty per cent of the land in each 160 acre tract in townships 14 and 15 south, 1 west, could be plowed except those two sections, he would say that a man could get very little tillable land on either one of these two sections.

Whereupon on cross examination witness testified that on the north hillsides of these railroad sections it is good timber, facing the north. Those north slopes on these hills and mountains carry the heaviest stand of timber, it seems to be much older than on the south side. The south side is not much bald in that country, it is all a timbered country. It runs from a pole country up to what he calls second growth, that is, generally speaking, among loggers, called second growth, that is trees that will cut say from four to eight hundred feet to the log, sixteen foot log eighteen to twenty inches at the butt. It has a thin bark and thrifty looking timber. Pole timber that he speaks of is six to eight inches and about like telephone poles. He supposes likely that this timber has grown up since it was burned over at one time but he does not know, it does not show it. It does not show that there are any big stumps there anywhere. He paid $3.50 an acre for this 80 acres in 1885 or 1886, and it is all cleared, in plow land and grass, except about ten acres. There are about thirty acres plowed on the place. He cannot tell just when he sold it. He bought it, he thinks, in 1885 and lived there about twelve years and then he bought another place and he sold that and he thinks he held it about two years longer, which would make about fourteen years, that would be about 1900 when he sold. He got $10.00 an acre for it. He logged a great deal of the time when he was living on this 80 acres; that is he drove team a great deal of the time for other people, hauled the timber, drove the team. He was principally ranching and logging, but not for himself at that time. At the time he was living on this eighty he was ranching and logging and raising stock was his business principally. His stock ran on the range. The settlers away from the river have generally sold out. They had principally timber claims and sold their lands, he thinks, the principal part of them along that river and away from the river, to the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company. He cannot tell the year when they sold but somewhere about the time that the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company went in there, about 1890, some odd years. It would be hard for him to tell the amount of timber that these homesteads that were sold to the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company would run, they had cut off and burned up so much timber there before there was any valuation, before it was worth anything and cleared the land and such like and he thinks really they had cut the best of it. What they had left would lay in such shape that they would go through there and estimate what was left, and it would be a hard job for him to tell how many acres they had, or what it would amount to, but it was of sufficient value for the timber for the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company to buy it. They gave up their settlement and moved away when they sold the land. He would say that some of these people had from five acres up to forty acres in cultivation on their homesteads. Most of these people that sold had lived there for a great many years and had done clearing. They did not sell about as soon as they got their patent, they finally sold out afterwards to the timber people. This 107 acres that he owns in section 20, township 14 south, range 1 west is something a little above two miles from Crawfordsville principally southeast. It was a donation land claim of Thomas Woodfern and he cannot tell but expects it was settled in 1850. It was an old claim and was about two miles from the Calapooia River and lays on Brush Creek. He has not cruised any of these timber lands over on the Mohawk and through townships 14 and 15. He did not do any cruising except once in awhile when some of his neighbors had logged so much that they would want a cruise before they would have the regular cruiser of the Company to go in, that is they would want him to give them his judgment so as to guide them in dealing with the Companies and that was as far as he ever cruised any timber. That was on some of these homesteads that were sold. He never directly applied to purchase any other railroad land excepting this eighty acres. He never wrote to the Company about it but asked Britt, who stopped at his place a great deal when he was looking over this railroad land cruising it and running it out and getting the estimates of the thing, and there was an eighty that laid adjoining him on the north, the other half of the 160 acres adjoining the 80 he had bought, and he told Britt that he had a notion to buy it and Britt said he could not buy it. This was within the last seven or eight years while Britt was doing this work. It must have been right along in 1890 when Britt told him that he could not buy, that the thing was shut down then until they got done, they were not done cruising, they were not half done when they were at his place. Most of the time they were surveying right around his place. This 80 acres that he wanted to buy from Britt was pretty well timbered and was flat black land and the timber was not of any value then, but it has since become of some value, but he was not buying it then for that. At that time timber was not worth very much, they would burn it up. That eighty he thought would go something like over 1,500,000 feet. He has not bought any stumpage since he got his land or had anything to do with it since he bought the railroad land. They sold their land instead of selling the stumpage. They sold their land out to these timber people, referring to the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company, who owns most of this along the Mohawk River.

Whereupon WILLIAM COCHRAN, called as a witness on behalf of complainant being duly sworn testified that he is sixty-one years old and resides in Linn County, Oregon, two miles north of Brownsville on a place partly in section 19, township 13 south, range 2 west and section 24, township 13 south, range 3 west and is engaged in farming there and raises most everything that is usually raised on a farm, oats, wheat, barley, etc., fruit and vegetables and has about 125 or 130 acres under cultivation and 800 acres altogether in his farm. He has the farming part of his farm rented at present. He raises stock principally, sheep at present. He raises apples, pears and prunes. The place was his father's donation land claim. There is railroad land in the vicinity of his farm, adjoining him on the east and northeast, consisting of forty acres in two separate tracts. Four-fifths of these two tracts could be tilled and cultivated. In its native state the original character of this country was comparatively open. There was scattering timber at that time on a portion of it. He has cleared and cultivated the portion that was not heavy timber. The land he has not gotten under cultivation there is used for pasture. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259" he is fairly well acquainted with the country at large, five or six miles south and north of the Calapooia and east from Brownsville eighteen or twenty miles and he is acquainted north and south five or six miles each way from Calapooia River which runs in a northwesterly direction and rises in a southeasterly direction. He is fairly well acquainted with all the land that runs along the Calapooia for eighteen or twenty miles east of Brownsville. He has traveled over it quite a good deal on each side of the Calapooia five or six miles. He is fairly well acquainted with the lands south of Crawfordsville, a distance of five or six miles on the Calapooia. He could hardly tell the lands with which he is acquainted by township and range and he has given the best description that he could. He has been over that land, hauling lumber and hunting and in hunting he would go off of the river and through the fields and woods there. Speaking generally as to the lands where the railroad lands are situated but not necessarily refering to the railroad sections alone, taking that whole section, he would say that four-fifths of the lands with which he is acquainted along the river could be rendered suitable for cultivation and the balance could be used for stock range. There are people living in this section farming and engaged in farming on lands of similar general character. Taking the whole country that is settled altogether he thinks that this average generally, if the country were divided into 160 acre tracts, would hold good as to those tracts.

Whereupon witness testified:

"Q. Mr. Cochran, in your opinion, what has been the effect of the Railroad Company's refusal to comply, or its failure to comply with the terms of the grant, and sell these lands to actual settlers at $2.50 an acre, in 160 acre tracts—what effect has that had on the community that you are acquainted with there, if any?

A. I would say that it has retarded the settlement of the country."

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified that his father's donation was taken in the early fifties, before 1850, he should think. He is now sixty-one years old and was born on the donation land claim.

"Q. Your father was William Cochran?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are a nephew of former State Senator Cochran?

A. Yes.

Q. Uncle Bob, as we called him?

A. Yes, sir."

He has lived in the vicinity of Brownsville all his life. His father's donation claim is about two miles north of Brownsville, which has a population of 900 people. The Calapooia is one of the oldest settled portions of Linn County.

"Q. Now, you are acquainted in a general way with the lands on either side of the Calapooia for four or five miles and for a distance of twenty miles east of Brownsville?

A. Yes, sir."

That includes the donation claims, and the homesteads and other entries that have been settled along the Calapooia and that are not railroad lands, as well as the railroad lands, and also includes any portions of the railroad land that may have been sold heretofore, within this four or five miles on either side. He thinks most all of that country along the Calapooia there east of Brownsville was taken up under the donation law. These unsold lands that lie within four or five miles of the Calapooia River are in the foothills like, of the Calapooia. Not knowing which are railroad lands he could not say what they are covered with but only just as the country generally is. There is some timber four or five miles away from the Calapooia but not dense, not very large timber. There is some logging timber or saw timber within four or five miles of the Calapooia on the south side in spots. He would say eighteen or twenty miles up the Calapooia, near the Calapooia, there is some saw timber. He has never taken a homestead in this country and never applied to purchase any railroad lands excepting those two forties which have not any valuable timber but are covered with oak grubs and when cleared one could plow the land, most of it. He does not know what it would cost an acre to grub these oak lands. They used to, twenty or thirty years ago, have Chinamen that they could get to grub the land down in the valley and they paid all the way from $15.00 to $30.00 an acre, depending on the stand. The Willamette Valley and around in Linn County was always substantially a prairie country. He guesses Linn county was one of the largest prairie counties in the Willamette Valley and had more prairie than any other county, unless it was Lane. In the four-fifths of the land on either side of the Calapooia within four or five miles that could be put under cultivation, he includes what had been settled, including donation land claims and all that have been taken in the early days.

Whereupon, on re-direct examination witness testified that what he terms prairie land is that which lies down away from the hills and on the level. There is some grub land out on the prairie in patches, but it is mostly on the foothills where the oak grubs and young fir grow. There was not originally in the vicinity of Brownsville considerable of this oak grub and young timber, small growth of timber on nearly all of those lands, it is second growth fir, that is young fir that has grown up in the last fifteen or twenty years, possibly longer and oak grubs that have grown there since he became grown.

Whereupon, on re-cross examination, witness testified that in the Willamette Valley as late as 1860 to 1870, much of the valley land was not broken up, not plowed, and tall grass where the stock did not run over it, where it was not burned, came up and was in existence all over the valley,and later on, because there were no fires put out by Indians and others, oak grubs and second growth fir sprang up all over the valley in different parts and that is what he referred to about the oak grubs growing out on the valley. There is not much fir that grows out on the prairie but the oak grubs are a growth within the last forty or fifty years and it was formerly prairie. He accounts for that in this, that there were a few scattering large oaks out on the prairie near where those patches of oak grubs came and he supposes that is what seeded the ground, and he thinks they did not grow before because the Indians burned the land off.

Whereupon, on re-direct examination, witness testified that he thinks the Willamette Valley and Cascade Mountain Wagon Road land grant begins at Sweet Home and does not extend up as far as Brownsville. The Willamette Valley was practically all taken up by old donation claims he thinks and was the early settled part of the State. The early settlers took it that way.

Whereupon JOSIAH H. BEEMAN, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he lives at Gold Hill, Jackson County, Oregon, and has lived in Oregon twenty years and at Gold Hill all that time. He has been engaged in the development of mines, principally quartz mining since he came to Oregon. He has traveled largely all over Jackson County and to some extent in Josephine County, examining the opportunities for mining. He has traveled over a good deal of district that is not mineral in character in the way of hunting excursions, and for research of the formations. He has lived and was born on a farm. He worked on a farm in the east, in Michigan for three seasons and he has farmed some in a small way in Jackson County and he thinks that in his experience in Jackson County he has become familiar with the general industrial history of that county to which he refers and he has become familiar with the general character of the soil and other conditions that enter into the question of the adaptability of that land to agricultural and horticultural uses, and has made considerable examination together with men whom he believes to be experts in that line, examining the different types of soil, from an agricultural standpoint in Jackson County. He has been active in connection with his local commercial club in the capacity of president of the Gold Hill Commercial Club and a member of the Southern Oregon Development League, and they have an association connected therewith, with the State League. His interest in the industrial life in that community has not been limited to mining. He has been very much interested in the upbuilding of his community and has tried to gain a knowledge as to the adaptability of the soil for various purposes in the different districts. He had a long conference with Mr. Howard Reed who was carrying on experiments on behalf of the Department of Agriculture. Together they went over the district lying east of Medford, known as the desert land, and made a thorough examination of the work and experiments carried on by the Roguelands Company, and the possibilities of the success of their proposition in the development of that land. He has noticed the development of the higher lands in the last five or six years and the growth of the trees that were set out on the higher lands, other than what would be called Rogue River valley lands, that the lands lately developed show a better growth than the lower or the high priced fruit lands of the valley known as the Rogue River valley. There is generally a greater depth of soil. The lands are air drained, and to a large extent sub-irrigated. By sub-irrigated he means that the water comes from the higher mountains under pressure of some kind and flows and seeps down the incline through the soil—keeps it moist and prevents the sap souring and allows a healthy growth of the bacteria of the plant. He really knows very little about it from a theoretical standpoint and wishes to testify only from practical knowledge and watching the industry from a personal visit and investigation. He considers the hill lands the most valuable in Jackson County for agricultural purposes. He has made observation as to the usefulness of the so-called decomposed granite land. That land is largely the type of soil in Josephine County close to the vicinity of Grants Pass. It is called there by those people, volcanic ash, to him it is known as granite. Those lands are very valuable lands with irrigation. He rather thinks that most of the granite lands require irrigation. He could not testify to many particular tracts of land in the granite of Josephine County as much as Jackson County with reference to the growing of fruit, grapes and other agricultural and horticultural crops upon those decomposed granite lands without irrigation. There is very little of the granite lands in Jackson County. He does not know of experiments in these granite lands without irrigation. He knows in a general way where the railroad lands are situated in Jackson County which are involved in this case and these railroad lands average about the same as the other hill lands in Jackson County, which he has been describing, as to adaptability as to soil for the uses of which he has been speaking. His testimony upon that subject includes the communities where these railroad lands constitute a part of the lands. He knows of a good many places where they are raising very fine fruits on lands involved in this case now owned by the Railroad Company. He knows of instances where the adjoining lands are used. There are a great many places where the Government land has been taken up by the settler, homes built and made thereon, and while the railroad lands adjoining are lying idle, they are the same character and types of soil.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. I will ask you whether, in your judgment, speaking of these railroad lands as a whole, 160 acres of them, if open to settlement, would support a settler and his family?

A. Yes, sir. There are a great many 160-acre tracts that I believe would, if the lands as a whole were thrown open for settlement.

Q. Are you familiar in a general way with the manner in which the railroad company has sold or refused to sell its land in Jackson county?

A. Yes, sir, I have had a large experience in that line.

Q. I will ask you to state whether the policy that has been pursued by the railroad company has promoted or retarded the development of industrial and commercial conditions in Jackson County?

A. It has very decidedly retarded the commercial development in all lines of industry.

Q. Has that effect been restricted to the railroad lands themselves, or has it also extended to the intervening lands?

A. Very largely to the intervening lands in certain districts.

Q. How? Just explain what effect this policy has had, and how it has brought about the result you refer to?

A. Well, where the government lands would lie along established county roads, that is, along the good wagon roads, that land has been taken up and settled upon to a large extent by homeseekers; but in districts where there were no school facilities nor good wagon roads, those districts have been absolutely retarded and unsettled, I think by the main reason that the grant has been taken off the market.

Q. What lands?

A. The railroad lands.

Q. Now, is there any reason why roads could not be established and schools established in those communities if the lands were open for settlement?

A. I know of settlers that have gone upon the railroad lands and have attempted, apparently in very good faith, to make homes, that afterwards they found that they could not sustain themselves for the reason that the neighbors were distant, there were no means of ingress and egress to the property, and that the railroad refused to sell them the land after they had made settlement thereon, and that good lands for agricultural purposes have been taken up as timber claims, and have been sold to timber dealers, which has retarded the development; whereas if the lands were thrown open as is the purpose and intent, as I believe, of the grant—that the country would have been largely settled up, if conditions were different. Did you want me to go on about the mining interests?

Whereupon witness testified that on the very high lands adjacent and tributary to Gold Hill for a radius of eight or ten miles in most all directions, they raise very fine pears. They bear very early, from one to two years earlier than the fruit in the lower Rogue River valley proper, on very high lands he has taken pride in sending grapes and fruit to his friends in Portland and San Francisco. He thinks that fruit and those grapes are superior to the fruits and grapes that grow in the Rogue River valley proper as to quality and he thinks they can be grown to a greater degree of profit than the lands known as, for instance the Burrell orchard, which is the highest priced land that has been sold to his knowledge in Jackson County. In most instances irrigation on these hill lands is not necessary. He thinks there are a great number of tracts of 160 acres that have from five to 160 acres upon them that would sustain a family and that more than fifty per cent, approximately, of the unsold railroad lands situated in Jackson County and in that part of Josephine County with which he is acquainted in quarter sections, would be fit for settlement and the maintenance of a settler and his family, that is more than fifty per cent of the quarter sections, more than fifty per cent of the quarter sections contain enough of this land to sustain a settler. There are a great number of 160 acres that would support a large number of people. These lands that he speaks of are scattered throughout the county. There is considerable of this railroad land involved in this suit in the vicinity of Gold Hill, a great many acres he believes, that is, in all directions from Gold Hill, within a radius of ten, twelve or fifteen miles. There are considerable desirable railroad lands within that area that are not timber lands to any degree. The lands about which he has been asked to testify here are practically non-timbered lands, nothing but fire wood and brush on them. The timbered section of Jackson County is up in what they call the Evans creek district, the Butte creek district and some in the Siskiyous and he is acquainted with those. He thinks these lands, after the timber is removed and the lands are cleared would make very fine agricultural land to a large extent. He has been engaged in quartz mining, as he has said, for twenty years. He purchased quartz mines, paying pretty large sums for the mining properties and a great number of them had been situated on odd sections owned by the Railroad Company. He filed protests in 1895 and 1896 against the issue of patent to the railroad company for these lands, and on other tracts the railroad company made application, and he made protest after the application had been made, together with those interested in the development of mines in Jackson County. Hearings were ordered by the Department in proper order, and at the hearing the railroad was represented in a great number of cases, in fact, all the cases, he believes by N. E. Britt and a corps of assistants, he had five generally. All of those witnesses testifiled to having qualifications as to farming experience. He is testifying now from his personal appearance in the cases and from his personal knowledge of conducting the examinations in these cases. The witnesses produced by the Railroad Company were to the effect that these lands were chiefly valuable for agricultural purposes and in all the cases the lands involved in these particular cases were very high or mountain lands. In section 29, township 35 south, range 3 west, where his stamp mill is situated, the lands are very steep and the railroad witnesses testified that they were very fine agricultural land and he thinks that they were right and that they are good agricultural lands, and also mineral lands. He had taken out a great many thousands of dollars in gold and silver from the lands now owned by the Railroad Company and withdrawn from sale. The fact that they are withdrawn from sale has retarded to a very large extent the mining industry of Southern Oregon. It is difficult to obtain capital for development of any enterprise until they can show an absolute title to the property, which of course is prevented by the refusal of the Railroad Company to sell the lands. In most of the tracts of land with which he is familiar and where these contests were heard, there is very fine agricultural land. His own land is in section 29, is quite steep, but the soil is very deep. He has been able to raise very fine vegetables, all the vegetables necessary for his camp. He has there grown potatoes and pea vines eight or nine feet high, and they had an abundance of peas on them. They had very large potatoes, some as nice potatoes as he every saw, both as to quality and smoothness, that is true of a good many of the mining camps, placer mines and quartz properties. He would say that there were more than twenty instances of contests of the kind he has described where the testimony was of the character mentioned. These contests commenced in 1896 and ended on October 14, 1912. Mr. Britt made the proposition to him that if he would withdraw his protest and let the Railroad Company obtain patent to the land on their agricultural value it would agree to sell him the lands after it had obtained patent. The company made that proposition to most, or to a great number of the protestants, to his personal knowledge and he knows of instances where it was accepted by the protestants, who did withdraw their mineral protests and allowed patent to issue to the Railroad Company. He, however, refused to enter into any proposition of that kind, as he was sure that the lands were chiefly valuable for mineral, and he carried his cases to their conclusion, which resulted very largely in favor of the Railroad Company and against the miner for the reason that it became generally known that the Railroad Company would sell the lands to settlers; and there are those who believed that the Railroad Company would sell it who are at this time unable to buy the lands that they were interested in. The title of N. E. Britt was, he believes, chief surveyor of the Oregon and California Railroad Company and he had charge of the cruising in that particular Southern Oregon district. Witness took into consideration the question of clearing the land and reducing it to cultivation in determining its usefulness for agricultural and horticultural purposes. It is particularly noticeable as to the value of these lands from a practical standpoint in a trip from Gold Hill south on what is known as the Mountain road to Jacksonville, that land, lies very steep and high above the valley proper, commanding a full view of practically the whole of Rogue River Valley and until a few years ago was regarded as of no value, but in a great many instances it has been demonstrated beyond a question of doubt that those lands are the best fruit lands in Jackson County and it has been shown that the higher trees have the greater growth, in speaking of trees in the same field planted on a steep hillside, from the highest point down to the black alluvial soil in the valley, that the higher most tree would comparatively be four or five times larger than the tree on the lower line down, or what would be known as the river, the alluvial black soil showing that the tree had some advantage, or a large advantage over the lower trees, which is accounted for by being air drained and possibly sub-irrigated. In mining he has known sub-irrigation to be over 3300 feet in elevation, at the top of Jump-off Joe, they mined on the very top of the mountain there, yet at the depth of sixty feet it was necessary for them to furnish the miners with gum clothes, gum coats and gum boots. And in the fruit lands some six or seven hundred feet above the elevation of Gold Hill, which would be 1600 or 1700 feet in elevation above sea level.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Mr. Beeman, I will ask you, from your knowledge of the general conditions in that country, your observation of the developments of the lands as a whole, whether in your judgment, if these railroad lands had been offered to settlers, they would have been settled upon, improved and developed, and would now sustain settlers and their families, and homes on them.

A. I most assuredly believe that they would be largely settled upon if they had been sold or had not been withdrawn from sale.

Whereupon witness testified, that there is practically no saw timber in the immediate vicinity of Gold Hill and there is no timber on the land along this mountain road to Jacksonville, referred to by him. He is speaking from traveling over the lands and through across the mountains and going through and over the trails and personal observation and study of the types of soil in the different mineral belts. He believes that he is one of the first men that met Mr. Townsend when he first came to Oregon to investigate this case. He has given the subject of this suit special thought and consideration to a large degree since that time. During the first trip of Mr. Townsend here he went to the southern part of the grant and he took him over some of these lands that he is now referring to and took many other people too. He is quite enthusiastic as to the adaptability of these lands as to their natural resources but he has not intentionally permitted his enthusiasm for the value of these lands for the purposes stated to influence his judgment or testimony. He is positive he has not done so and is sure he has not been over enthusiastic in his work and study of these, and in any testimony that he might give here.

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified that he practices before the land department but has not been admitted to the bar of the State or to the Supreme Court of the State. He came to this state from San Francisco where he was in the merchantile business for a number of years. He lived in San Francisco all his life, with the exception of three years when he went to Michigan. He considers that he is a mining man and that that is his business at the present time. He owns the Lucky Bart mine in sections 29 and 30, township 35 south, range 3 west and the Alice group of mines situated in section 11, township 37 south, 3 west. He is the sole owner, with his wife, of the Lucky Bart property. In the Alice group he has associates. He has some lime locations that he owns himself, two-thirds and an associate one-third, in township 36 south, range 3 west, in section 20, and he has some stock interest in other mining properties. He thinks he has 7,000 shares in the Gray Eagle, or the Oregon Gold Hill Mining Company, which is in section 29. He thinks the par value is $1.00 a share. He received that as an owner of the claim, but did not have title to the claim, the record title belongs to the Railroad Company, he has a possessory mining title. They have run several hundred feet of tunnel, winzes and shafts on there. At the time that he sold it they had taken out but very little gold, it is a gold mine, it was development work entirely, their ore was all on the dump. That land is patented to the Railroad Company and is part of the land that he lost in these mineral contests. He did not organize this company and he does not know who organized it. There are two claims, practically forty acres located on 1500 feet by 600, which would be 3000 feet by 600. He purchased them from the original locators and they were located under the mineral law and he purchased the claims from the mineral claimants. The mineral claimants protested and won out but in making the segregation they were not awarded the amount of ground that they were entitled to under the decision. The decision was that the seven claims of the Lucky Bart Mining Company should be cancelled from their application. In making the segregation and survey, the railroad surveyor filed an affidavit that he could not find the claims of record as were testified to in the case, although they were of record. In making the segregation, for instance, they found the claim of Buckskin, which the notice said was 1500 feet, they segregated only 1400 feet and took a patent to a fractional lot known as lot number 2. The Railroad Company made the survey. Witness and associates were awarded only the portion of the claims covered by their location and they got a patent for, he thinks, less than one hundred acres, because it was mineral. He guesses that they are squatters and that that is their only right to possession. They have constructed a stamp mill, built a road at large cost, and extracted a great many thousand tons of ore. The portions of the mine owned by himself and wife that he did not receive title to, he purchased from the Railroad Company at $2.50 an acre in 1901, being 52 and a fraction acres and the deed was made to him personally and he owned it individually. They had a contest as to section 11 on mining claims that they purchased in township 37, traversed through the entire section 11. They did not get a patent to any of that—the Railroad Company got the patent to it. He won out as to that contest, but was wrong as to the section. The testimony was that they supposed that they were in section 13, the decision was that the lands claimed were more valuable for mineral. The railroad got a patent to the land, however, under some process that he did not know at the time how it was done. He had a suit in the courts to set aside the patent, which was heard in Jackson County. The decision was not to set aside the patent, he alleged in his complaint that the land was mineral but it came about in a way that the Railroad Company sold its mining land to others. He and his associates did not get any title from the Railroad Company but sued a party who bought from the Railroad Company. In that instance the price, instead of $2.50 an acre was $12.00 an acre, but the court held that this party was a trustee for witness and associates. The title of the case was J. H. Beeman and John R. Mitchell against William Mendenhall, the case did not go to the Supreme Court. Witness finally lost the land. Judge Hanna decided that Mendenhall had a right to buy it from the Railroad Company at $12.50 an acre. Judge Hanna ruled that the patent was subject to attack, but title having left the Railroad Company under the patent he and the litigants fought it out between themselves and he lost. That was the way it was done. He did not appeal to the Supreme Court because he was pretty short of funds at that time. He had purchased forty acres where his tunnels were from the Railroad Company which would be the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 11, where his development work was. He had purchased that in 1901 through his associate Mr. Mitchell. He is assessed in Jackson and Josephine counties for last year something close to $10,000. It is not all on his mining property. He has some property in Gold Hill that is assessed, some store buildings and a residence.

Most of his assessment is made up of Gold Hill property, practically all of it. He is assessed on this mining property at $6.00 an acre or 52 and a fraction acres in section 29 and forty acres in section 11, which would be 92 acres at $6.00 an acre, and also is assessed for the stamp mill and he does not know just what that is assessed at, but about $1,000 for improvements, something like that. He is assessed on this mining property then for about $1500.00. He was never at any time in the business of promoting applications and so-called settlements of these lands about the time Mr. Townsend first saw him in 1907. He never in any instance was connected with Mr. Hammersley or anybody else in the business of making application and tendering the $2.50 an acre on these printed blanks. He absolutely refused to have anything to do with such a proposition. He did not locate Frank Gingrass on some railroad lands, but he did have something to do with it. Gingrass located on a piece of railroad land in section 19, township 33 south, range 3 west and attempted to locate on 160 acres. The place is northeast of Gold Hill about twenty odd miles. Mr. Gingrass was a man who worked for him in the mines and he knows a great deal about the railroad lands and wished to settle upon them and witness assisted him. He gave him the use of animals and a horse and some implements on settlement. This land had considerable saw timber on it, he would judge about from two and a half to three million feet. Gingrass lived there for about a year and left it after the railroad refused to sell it. Gingrass offered $2.50 an acre under this act and was refused, he was a single man, and cleared up quite a piece, built a cabin with windows, floors and doors in it, built a corral, dug a well and cleared, he should judge, not over an acre and a half, something like that, and stayed there nearly all the time he was building his house while he was there. Witness did not furnish him money to build it, but only assisted him by furnishing him horses and stock and stuff of that kind. Gingrass pastured stock out there, he did not have any cattle but had some horses, one horse belonging to witness and Mr. Ray had two most of the time there and with that exception witness had nothing to do with locating people on any of this railroad land. He thinks he was interested and heard about twenty mineral contests in all, in a great many instances he was attorney for the mineral claimants. Hammond & Vawter were first engaged for the Railroad Company, in a large number of them W. I. Vawter, who is now manager of the First National Bank of Medford, was one of the firm and one of the leading and responsible lawyers of southern Oregon. A. S. Hammond was at Medford at that time, the firm was Vawter, Hammond & Webster. He does not remember any others who represented the Company in these hearings, he thinks Judge Durham of Grants Pass succeeded when Vawter retired from the service of the Company. Dexter Rice of Roseburg also appeared in these contests. Dexter Rice is still local attorney for the Railroad Company in Douglas County, was interested in this last case. The first of these contests he had anything to do with, was about 1897 and these contests strung along from that time down to October 14th last. He won in all of them and then did not get the patent, in all of them the Company got patent finally to some of them, portions of them, that is, he got the decisions but the Company got the land, not all the land, that was true in section 11, but this was not generally his experience that he would get the decisions and the Company would get the patent to the land. That happened in section 11 and partly in section 29; that is, as to the fractions of the claim. It was in 1897 or 1898 that Britt made this offer to compromise. There were a good many people who bought this railroad land that was thought to be mineral in character at a flat rate of $2.50 an acre and took the Company's deed out there during that time. There were a lot of people who did not have any contests with the Company, rather than enter a mineral claim they would buy a forty from the railroad wherever they thought there was a mineral prospect, that was a way that was not regarded by himself or others familiar with it as a proper way to do it. A good many people who had no controversy with the Company would go to the Company, thinking they had a prospect for a gold mine on a forty and would inquire of the Company what it would take for its title to that land, finding it to be patented, and they would buy it at a flat rate of $2.50 an acre. The business was handled for years prior to the time the land was taken off the market in 1905 or 1906 from $2.50 an acre up. The mineral land did not go at a flat rate. This land in section 11, after the trial and hearing and the railroad had received the patent to it, he attempted to buy it after they had got a patent. He did not lose, he won, but he never got the land. After he had this contest and refused to compromise he then wanted to buy the land. The Company wanted to sell it based upon the true value of the mine, and in this instance they would not sell it to him at $2.50 an acre, he could not get the Company to set any definite price, they said it would be based upon the true value of the land as given by Mr. Mills. None of this land had any good saw timber on it, practically none. He supposes there is a lot of good agricultural land on it, but it was more valuable for mineral. He made proof in his cases that the land was chiefly valuable for mineral and that it was not agricultural and he produced witnesses as to the mineral character of the land, but he did not protest that it was not fit for agricultural uses. The decision of the Land Department or the Local Land Office was in his favor on that question, they held it was chiefly valuable for mineral. The Railroad Company finally got patents to some of the claims but not to all of them. He does not say that he thinks that particular land is chiefly valuable for agriculture. This decomposed granite that he speaks of is hauled by the carload by the Railroad Company and distributed in its various depot grounds and yards, as side walk and other stuff of that kind, so that a man going along the road down there and stopping at Grants Pass or Medford or Gold Hill would go out on this granite gravel walk around the railroad buildings and find it perfectly dry and almost solid. This would be agricultural and horticultural with water on it, he has seen it demonstrated. He has seen very fine gravel lands in the Evans Creek district demonstrated to be orchard lands. Evans Creek lies immediately west and northwest of the town of Rogue River between Grants Pass and Woodville. The granite belt commences right close to the railroad. People did not settle largely upon this granite land, but have recently settled upon the granite land a great deal along the upper Evans Creek from Rogue River to what is called Bybee Springs, sixteen or seventeen miles. They raise alfalfa and onions on this granite land, which diffuses very readily. It is a different character of granite than that hauled by the Railroad Company. It is granite soil, and looks like mighty poor land to look at it, it is granite soil and there is some earth in it, it is not about three-fourths earth, he thinks it is largely just the decomposed granite. Granite is rock but is of different character, some has more mineral in it, more iron. He thinks that this desert land has not been attempted to be cultivated until about two years and a half ago, something like that, there are several thousand acres in that desert. He does not know where these people came from, they located water and built ditches, and it is called the Roguelands Company and the ditch is called the Butte Creek, he believes. The first proecdure to develop that desert was to take a surveyor out and survey off certain distances where they were going to blast for trees, and set stakes where they would put holes, and there is soil of about eighteen to twenty-four inches deep, then they encounter what is known as hardpan and it averages about eight or nine inches in thickness and is a sedimentary cement that has settled there, rock formations, and is what they call cement. They get below that by drilling a hole and blasting it, then they have a depth of rock and gravel underlying that, washed or boulder gravel, showing that at one time that land was at the bottom of an inland sea and on top of that above the hardpan is a silt soil of clay and it shows there has been an erosion from the higher hills at one time. At one time it had not occurred to him that it was worth anything at all. He does not think these people are going in there drilling holes down through this hardpan, blasting the soil and rock up, taking a steam plow with a depth of about two feet and undertaking to break through that hardpan in that way, they are not blasting altogether, that plow is not for that purpose, they plow the sub-soil with the plow, it is full of little ravines and pot holes, so they can build their ditches and irrigate all the land. They are not plowing under this hard pan where they are planting trees, they blast it.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Well now, they are planting young trees on there, two-year-old trees, aren't they, and getting water on, and they are making nice blueprint illustrations of these five and ten-acre tracts with this water, and selling a contract to carry water on there for a number of years, and trying to sell that to the general market at so much an acre? Isn' that the scheme?

A. I know nothing about that part of their proposition.

Q. They haven't yet got to the blueprint stage, the lithograph stage, have they?

A. I didn't go there for that purpose. I went to ascertain whether or not the lands were adapted or could produce.

Whereupon witness testified, that these people have a tract there, he should judge there were eight or ten acres in it, that they use for a demonstrating and experimental farm and experiment station, and he should judge, from eating the fruit of the trees, that there is water on the land to keep the trees green. He has eaten very fine fruit off of these trees, three year old peach trees, which he presumes the peach trees are fillers, he knows what a filler is and believes they are used for that purpose. They are planting apples and raising canteloups, tomatoes and watermelons on this experimental tract. He should judge the apple trees are about three years old, he does not remember whether they are bearing yet on this place. There is one place that has been there for a number of years, it is an old orchard, part of it, that is where their experimental farm is on that old place, an orchard of apple trees to be commercial must be about eight years old in the Rogue River valley proper, but in the higher lands, such as he knows, people have made a commercial profit in less age than that, about six or seven years, that is apples, and five years for pears. There is a person on these hills that he knows of, that he can name, that is today selling commercial apples to the trade. His name is Firman Zana and his place is on a high mountain west of the Sams Valley country north and west of Gold Hill ten miles, he is on a homestead, witness does not think it is on a donation but thinks it is a homestead. He believes it is section 12, about three miles from Sams Valley postoffice west, and there are other places right along there in that neighborhood. He could not state the amount of Zana's sales, but he has bought apples from him for the last eight or ten years, quite a lot of fruit for family use. That piece of land has been settled, portions of it, for a long time, Zana set some out, and has some trees there that are four or five years old that are now bearing. It has been settled around Sams Valley for thirty or forty years, but this hill land has been improved lately, in the last few years. He does not believe that these places were taken up thirty or forty years ago, but he does not know when this place was taken up. There is a small amount, commercially, of grapes on these hills. George Lyman has a claim on very high land, just a small vineyard, he would judge about two or three acres, something like that. It has been put out a number of years and is an old vineyard, and sells grapes mostly to the stores there. He thinks they ship some from Gold Hill, which is about three miles away north. Lyman has been living there ever since and he has known him during his residence there. He guesses that his place was a donation or a homestead, settled a long time ago. Mr. Johnson has a vineyard on a very high hill, about a mile and a half from Gold Hill, it is a small place, something like two or three acres in vineyard. He sells to the stores down town and to the people and he does not know that he packs any grapes for shipment. Witness has bought them in boxes, and has sold them for him. They are Tokay grapes and a dark grape, which he believes he calls Berkshire, some name like that. Johnson has been there for a good many years. He does not know where the exact corners are but he understands this vineyard was on railroad land that Johnson squatted on it. Johnson has been there during the residence of witness in Gold Hill and he thinks Johnson ought to have good title by limitation. Johnson has a ranch there that they call the Bible Ranch, he does not know positively whether or not the land Johnson squatted on is railroad land, he never talked with him personally about that, he was testifying as to the high lands, as to the production of the land, but he does not know whether this particular land was railroad land or not. This Bible Ranch was planted and cleared of brush on both sides of a very steep ravine, and it looks from a distance like an open book, like the pages opened up in a book, it is spread, his fields are, clear along his lines, which gives it that appearance, one can see that a good many miles, this place was pretty high and pretty rough. The Sugar Pine Door & Lumber Company did not cut over a good deal of land around the country that he has been testifying about, nor around Gold Hill. Gold Hill is a place of about 500 people. He has lived at Gold Hill during the whole time that he has been in Oregon. He has tried to do his part as a citizen, to promote the settlement of the southern part of Oregon, or of this portion of the country. He is not in the real estate business and does not solicit any real estate to handle. He has never located, or tried to locate people on Government lands. There is a lot of Government lands in Josephine and Jackson counties unsettled and these lands are about the same general class as the railroad lands that are unsold. The lands that are more valuable than the lands around the Burrell orchards around Medford are largely taken. The balance in this district are not taken because it is pretty hard for people to maintain themselves on account of being away from the main roads as established by the county. They could get roads in there by taxation, but a poor man coming in to settle, it is difficult for him to bring these things about. He thinks that some of the Burrell orchard lands, which are about three and a half miles southwest of Medford, which had eight or nine year old pear tree orchards on them were sold for $2,000 an acre and other orchard land that has two or three year old Spitzenbergs or Yellow Newtowns is sold from $800 to $1,000 an acre. They have several thousand acres of that valley land there.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Well now, then, if this unsold government land, and these hill lands generally, are worth more than that kind of land, I should think that they would have these big orchards all up on these hills.

A. They have.

Q. Where are they?

A. They are on the line of the road going south from Gold Hill toward Jacksonville and on the west side of the road it is steep and mountainous. The east side slopes down to the Rogue river valley proper. In the past seven or eight years they have built and developed very fine orchards on that hill land.

Q. Name some of the people that own some of these orchards, and how large the orchards are within that territory seven or eight miles from the railroad.

A. I don't know the owners of the big orchards there.

Whereupon witness testified, that he calls twenty-five or thirty acres or ten acres a big orchard. They have cleared the land of the grubs and stumps and there is a lot of rock left. They have planted these trees on that kind of land. There are some of these trees that are eight or nine years old, the Van Vleet orchard, he could not tell how many acres each of these people have, but they have upwards of ten or fifteen or twenty acres. One man who ran for sheriff one time, whose name he cannot think of now, has an orchard. There are eight or ten such places along that hill land. They paid $200 and $250 an acre for it he is told. They bought it from the owners of it along there. Mr. Niedmeyer owns a tract there that is undeveloped that he has refused that much money for, he thinks, he would judge that it is about three and a half miles from the line of the road. It is all pretty rough and steep, and was not covered with timber at any time but with brush, principally shake brush or chaparral brush, as it is called. Some portions of Jackson County have a lot of very fine timber in it, Josephine county has a lot of fine timber. These unsold railroad lands are pretty well covered with timber in the upper districts, not in the districts around Gold Hill. The foothills are not covered with anything except scrubby brush and things of that kind, and as one goes back from the foothills he gets into the timber, away up on the upper Evans Creek is what they call the timber belt, that is a part of it. He assisted Mr. Townsend in working up the testimony in this case of the witnesses around Gold Hill and Jackson County to some extent. He was not employed by the Government to do that. He has been here in attendance at court about ten days. He did not have a number of witnesses here from Gold Hill that he brought down, or that he notified Mr. Townsend would be good witnesses. He indirectly cited cases to the inspectors. The inspectors were representatives from the field division office. Mr. Laughlin for instance representing the Government and he gave these inspectors the names of the various witnesses that he thought would make good witnesses. He did not give him twenty names, but could have done so, he told him regarding Mr. Ray and he should judge he gave him half a dozen names. He did not take written statements from these witnesses himself, but just turned them over to the inspectors who took their statements. He does not think he gave a written statement to Mr. Townsend himself.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Well, you have kept in pretty close touch with

Mr. Townsend and his assistants since 1907, when he first came out here?

A. I have been very much interested, yes, sir.

Q. You have kind of had it in for the company, haven't you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You had no feeling of any kind?

A. No, sir.

Q. You felt kind of good after the company—after you had won these cases and the company got the land?

A. I felt that if there had been any justice done me, and done the people at large—

Q. Well, you started in to get even, didn't you, Mr. Beeman—just to be right square about it?

A. I was not prompted by any such motives, no, sir.

Q. You couldn't feel very good if you thought you had been wronged by the company in these mineral contests, could you?

A. Well, there was nothing vindictive in my attitude.

Q. No, if you are hit on one cheek you are willing to turn the other—I know that; but you didn't feel very kindly towards the railroad officials and the company after you had won the contests and then the company finally got the land, did you?

A. I didn't think that I had had a strictly square deal.

Q. Well, naturally you wouldn't feel very good about it, would you?

A. I haven't anything personal about it, I wouldn't see them wronged, if I could help it.

Q. But still you have been pretty active since this agitation for the forfeiture of this grant, haven't you?

A. As a citizen of the state, I have, yes, sir."

Whereupon, on re-direct examination, witness testified that he had been living at Gold Hill all this time. He has referred to a large amount of Government lands in Josephine County, but over half of the County is in the reserve, Siskiyou Forest Reserve is one of the recent reserves and was created somewhere in the year 1907. Mr. Loughlin called upon him about three months ago. He came to Gold Hill and he introduced him to some people whose names he had already on his list. Some of the names, the people were here as witnesses. He does not know whether it is a fact that subpoenaes were issued for all of them and some of them were not found by the marshal. Mr. Townsend has talked with him several times about this case since he has come here as a witness and before. In his talk with Mr. Townsend, Mr. Townsend said that he had heard of instances where the Railroad Company had by its deputies ordered settlers off the land and witness investigated and tried to ascertain whether or not there were instances where the company had done so, and Mr. Gingrass went upon the lands, witness knew that Gingrass intended to do that so witness took witnesses, filed affidavits with the Railroad Company, he being one of the affiants, that were cutting timber, intending to hold and work the claim, and locate a permanent home thereon; that they had built a house, constructed a well, irrigating ditches, corrals and fences, and that Mr. Gingrass tendered $2.50 an acre. Witness has the letters where the Railroad Company refused and sent back this tender, but did not order the man off the land, simply said that his offer was necessarily declined. He did not find that the Company had ordered him off the land. He found no instance where the Company had ordered the settlers off the land. He has never been in the employ of the Government and never received a cent compensation from the Government. His mileage and per diem as a witness here at this time will be the first money he has ever received in the whole matter. He is under subpoena as a witness on behalf of the United States.

Whereupon witness testified:

"Q. Now, Mr. Beeman, upon the question of your feeling toward the railroad company, and without asking you for the details of the matter, I will ask you if you are not at this time co-operating with the railroad company in certain litigation relating to the taxation of property situated in Gold Hill? I ask you that leading question in that form, because it is just the ultimate fact that I care for rather than the details of it.

A. Yes, sir, I am."

Whereupon, on re-cross examination, witness testified that there is an attempt on the part of certain people of Gold Hill to pave a lot of streets down there and he is co-operating with the Company and other property owners in respect to that matter. This is a recent matter, within the last thirty days.

Whereupon, on re-direct examination, witness testified:

Q. Mr. Beeman here is one question that I want you to make clear. I asked you as to the percentage of these lands that you thought could be cultivated after being cleared, and if I remember correctly, you said approximately fifty per cent; and I then asked you what percentage of the quarter sections could be used for the purpose of settlement and cultivation, and my recollection is that you said fifty per cent. Now, in the latter answer I want to know whether you mean fifty per cent of the area of the quarter sections or fifty per cent of the quarter sections themselves?"

A. My understanding of the question was that I answered fifty per cent of the area.

Q. Well, what percentage of the quarter sections in that part of Jackson county and Josephine county covered by your testimony do you think contains enough tillable land or agricultural or horticultural land to support a settler and his family?

A. I think it would run upwards of seventy-five per cent of the quarter sections.

Q. You directed my attention during the noon recess to one instance illustrating the value of these lands for agricultural and horticultural purpose. I don't recollect the details, but please explain it to the court.

A. The lands that are now held by the railroad company that I believe have a market value upwards to $400 per acre.

Q. Upon what do you base that view?

A. The adjoining land sold, four and a fraction acres for $2800, which I believe as a purchase price; I do know that the owners refused $2200 for the tract, and it sold for, I believe, $2800.

Mr. Fenton: How much in the tract?

A. Four and a fraction acres.

Whereupon witness testified, that adjoining that land is lot 5, section 21, township 36 south, range 3 west. He does not mean, of course, that all of the railroad land is of that value. That is a tract of eighteen acres in lot 5, eighteen and a fraction acres, he believes. That tract is well adapted to the raising of vegetables. The Germans on the adjoining tract raise very fine vegetables on the adjoining lands and it is exactly the same character of land, as those he spoke of.

Whereupon, on cross-examination, witness testified that this lot 5, section 21, township 36 south, range 3 west, containing eighteen acres lies half a mile west from Gold Hill, he should judge within half a mile of the city of Gold Hill on the banks of the Rogue River. It is gravel soil. He would not call it Rogue River bottom land. It is on the banks of the river, but it is on gravel soil, the subsoil is rocks down, wash gravel, the gravel does not give it its value, it is very productive though. This eighteen acres is not occupied by any one. It is claimed to have been owned by a client of his who paid taxes on it for a number of years. This man thought he owned the land and claims to own it now. There is a fence around it, and he has claimed to own it for a number of years under the statute of limitations and he is paying taxes on it. It is not under cultivation. This man is Edwin Crews and his postoffice is Medford, he bought this land from his predecessors in interest, meaning his predecessors in interest were granted this land in 1884 by the Government. W. S. Fitzgerald transferred it to various people and it passed into the hands of Mr. Crews who thought he had a good title to it until after he had purchased. This is lot 5. Crews bought it from the successors of Fitzgerald. The Railroad Company claims adverse title to him. Crews claims to own it, he believes, by purchase. The patent has gone to the Railroad Company he has learned, since his purchase, on investigation that the patent has been issued to the Railroad Company. The date of the patent was some time in 1897 he believes. Crews has been in possession of it, he or his predecessors, ever since 1884, and they thought and believed they had a good title and witness believes that they have a claim there whether they can make it or not. Witness would not call it a good title, but thinks it is worth $400 an acre and they have done nothing on the land, have not cleared it or anything. He believes Mr. Messner, the immediate predecessor, has been paying taxes on it for five years and how long before that he does not know, the abstract shows the taxes are all paid on the land by these various people since 1884, it also shows that the Railroad Company has been paying taxes on the same tract, and the County has been getting taxes twice.

Whereupon witness testified:

"Q. Well, you speak of that to counsel for the government, not to illustrate the value of this grant that is unsold, but I suppose just to show what a valuable piece of land this fellow has got that he claims to have gotten away from the railroad?

A. There are similar instances where I regard the lands of a very high value comparing them with prices of adjoining lands."

Whereupon witness testified that that tract came under his particular notice. He thought there might be like cases, he does not know of them though. He did not volunteer that to counsel for the Government since he was on the stand this morning. He spoke to Mr. Townsend some time ago and had forgotten it.

Whereupon, on re-direct examination, witness testified that the abstract of title furnished the predecessor of this land showed that it belonged to Mr. W. S. Fitzgerald; that a patent was issued to him for the land and it does not show that there was any patent issued to the Railroad Company for the land. It is a case where the Government has issued two patents for the same piece of land, one to the settler and then subsequently to the Railroad Company covering the same piece of land. It was granted to W. S. Fitzgerald by patent specifically describing this land, lot 5, 18 acres, and acreage and everything tallies. The abstract was furnished by a regular abstract firm and he has had the abstract for his work and he has it in his possession. He believes it was a homestead patent prior to the railroad patent for this particular tract.

Whereupon GEORGE W. KEARNS, called as a witness on behalf of complainant being duly sworn testified, that he lives at Grants Pass, Josephine County, Oregon, and has lived there about ten years and has been engaged in the timber business there, and before he moved to Grants Pass he lived at Wolf Creek in township 33 south, range 6 west, in Josephine County, Oregon, and has lived in Oregon all of his life. He was born in Linn County and the greater part of his time he has been in Oregon but was associated with Sisson, Crocker and Company for about three years in California. He helped to build the Oregon and California Railroad from Roseburg through to what is known as old Fort Lane, that was when the road was started from Roseburg in the spring of 1881. He was foreman on construction work. He knows the country in the southern part of Oregon along the railroad and is pretty well acquainted is familiar with Josephine, Jackson and Douglas Counties and best acquainted as to detailed portions of the country in Josephine County. He has been engaged in the timber business for the last ten years handling timber lands, nothing only timber lands and homesteads. He understands cruising and has done some of it, mostly all for himself, once in awhile but not often he does work for other people. He has become acquainted with the lands in Josephine County by being over these lands, locating them, cruising them and has been in most of the townships in the eastern part of the country where the railroad lands involved in this suit are situated. He is pretty familiar with the industrial history of that county. There are different soils in Josephine County. They have the granite soil, the red soil and that black river or alluvial soil and some of the lands are steep and rough and some of them are not. He knows where the Siskiyou Forest Reserve is, in Josephine County. He has a little County map that takes in about everything. He has worked in most every township in Josephine County outside of the Forest Reserve. There are about three classifications of soil there, granite soil, red shot soil and river black alluvial soil. He would think that part of the county would be about one-third each, as to these soils, he thinks that would probably be fair, along all the rivers there, the Illinois River and the Applegate River and the Rogue River and the other lands, he thinks would average pretty close of one-third each in regard to the classifications of those soils. The Applegate river soil will raise melons, grain, alfalfa, fruit and vegetables of all kinds. The red soil is good fruit land, good alfalfa land, good grape land, everything like that, if one has water. It must be or should be irrigated. Those granite lands, what are called granite lands, have soil in them, but they are demonstrating beyond any question of doubt that they are superior fruit lands to the low lands. In section 12 in township 36 south, range 6 west, he believes there is a man who owns the southwest quarter of that section by the name of Skinner who has a homestead there, who has raised the finest apples and tokay grapes, strawberries and everything without irrigation, also peaches. In the southwestern part of section 12, the southwest quarter, that man there has the nicest fruit grown in the valley. They use them for demonstration there to show what the valley will grow, or what this granite land will grow. There is railroad land involved in this suit near that land referred to, used for purposes of illustration, there is section 11, which is all good land. Sections 1 and 3, each, is good land, he thinks one will find these sections still intact, owned by the railroad people. He thinks this map would show that there are some of these lands that have been sold in the grant there, the maps in evidence show for themselves what railroad lands are in the vicinity of the lands of which he has been speaking. They have been experimenting with these so-called granite lands with reference to growing agricultural or horticultural crops for a number of years. These orchards are bearing with which they are now demonstrating. This grantite land grows the best of grapes. When he says granite land he means there is some soil with it, granite land is a mixture of clay of some kind, but to look at it, it looks perfectly white, granite in it, but there is soil in it. The granite itself is very hard, some of it. The Company has a big granite quarry where it takes out all the granite for all its depots and everything like that, right where it is marked "Granite," in section 12, the same section he is telling about now. This granite, some of it, he thinks is in section 12, there is quite a lot of it that is in that section. This on these places of which he is speaking is decomposed granite, but that granite there, they have to shoot it, blast it, it is hard enough for good building stone and everything like that. The land that he has referred to by way of illustration is near the place where the Railroad Company is taking out this granite for its depot walks, etc. The three characters of soil in the territory with which he is acquainted in the vicinity and of the same general character of these railroad lands, as he explained granite soil is on the high ridges, the red soil on the low benches and the river soils generally in flats. All these soils will produce sufficient agricultural or horticultural crops to maintain a settler and his family on 160 acres of that land. The land in this part of the country, where the railroad lands are situated are all of that character. Of course there are some spots that have rock, but he would say that there was ninety per cent of it of that character of soils, and fifty per cent of the quarter sections there would be of such a character that if properly used, could be made homes of and support a settler and his family. There are instances where a quarter section would support more than one family and where a settler would not need a whole quarter. This is not theoretical in his judgment but he has seen it demonstrated there.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. I will ask you whether, in your judgment, if these lands should be disposed of to settlers, they would become settled up and occupied by settlers, cultivating the land and maintaining themselves and their families, and making homes of the lands?

A. Yes, sir, I think they would.

Q. I will ask you then, whether, in your judgment, the policy that has been pursued by the Railroad Company with reference to the disposition of those lands, has retarded or promoted the development and settlement of that county?

A. I think it has retarded it.

Q. To what extent?

A. Well, to quite a great extent.

Q. Now, has that effect been limited to the railroad lands themselves, or has it also affected the development of the intervening sections?

A. Yes, it has the intervening, as well as the railroad lands.

Q. Do you know whether that situation is actually met with by the people of Grants Pass in their efforts to develop that country?

A. Yes, they are all very anxious for those lands.

Whereupon witness testified, that there have been people coming in there looking for lands to quite a considerable extent. They have calls all the time for homesteads, cheap lands. The Government lands are principally all taken. There is some timber in Josephine County. The good merchantable saw timber would be in township 35 south, range 4 west, and in 5 west there is some timber, also township 34, 5 west there is some very good timber. The balance of the county has some timber, but not very much. In the western part of Josephine County, there is not very much timber. The Forest Reserve has most all the timber, and has covered nearly all the timber west of him there. The biggest part of the land about which he has testified would have to be cleared, it is good soil after it is cleared. In a number of instances there are places where they could get five or ten acres on the 160 acres that would be very light clearing, if any. In between most of these little creeks, there are creeks all through there, take township 36 south, range 5 west, and between all those streams there are hills and ridges. All those ridges are good soil and are covered with scattering timber, some of them are very steep, but at the same time they grow grapes on these lands where they are so steep that when they haul them off the hills, the sled runs onto the horses. They use a sled instead of a wagon because of the steepness of the ground.

Whereupon witness testified:

"Mr. Fenton: A man could fall out of his dooryard there?

A. Pretty near, yes, sir, some of it in places."

Whereupon witness testified that he would say as a whole in this general vicinity he has referred to that there would be twenty-five per cent of this rough land that would be tillable, that could be plowed. All these bottom lands could be plowed and he would think, but that is merely a guess, that there was fifty per cent of that bottom land that is not entirely flat, but comparatively level, which could be farmed, for instance the Illinois valley, the Applegate valley, Deer Creek valley and Sucker Creek valley, all of those valleys are comparatively level and cover from one to two townships, or maybe more. The country all around Kerby, Althouse and Holland is comparatively a level country, referring now to townships 38, 39 and 40 south, ranges 5, 6, 7 and 8 west. He is familiar, to a considerable extent, with the lands in Jackson County, he has done a great deal of work in township 33 south, 3 west, 34 south 3 west, 40 south, 2 west, 41 south, 3 and 4 west. There are railroad lands in these townships, odd sections, and these lands he considered timber lands; however, there is a lot of good soil in these lands, he would say that there is quite a per cent of these lands that would, after the timber was off, make good homes. All these bottom lands in Josephine County, to which he has referred are all in farming lands, mostly in fruits of all kinds. A great many of these bench lands and hill lands in Josephine County raise most everything, alfalfa and fruits of all kinds and vegetables of all kinds and he thinks he could, if desired, point to specific tracts of land in that county, as well as give general testimony with reference to it. Some of the even sections adjoining the railroad lands involved in this suit are used for agricultural and horticultural purposes and are of the same character as the railroad lands and the same use could be made of the railroad land. The altitude of Grants Pass is 960 feet. There are some points in Josephine County where the altitude would run up to 3000 feet, possibly more. The hills and mountains there are all gradual slopes and he has known of instances where these hillsides have been used for agricultural or horticultural purposes. The lands he has explained in section 12, as above stated, are very steep lands, he would say the highest point on these lands would be 1200 to 1300 feet high. He has heard the testimony of Mr. Beeman with reference to the lands over in Jackson County and is familiar with some of the territory referred to in his testimony and he agrees with Mr. Beeman in so far as he is familiar with them. He thinks that is all the information he can give with reference to the character of the land there with which he is familiar, or that will throw any light upon the question whether the land could be used for the purpose of settlement and development. The soil is all right in most of these lands, only where the very heaviest timber is, and even at that there is good soil in them. In township 34 south, range 5 west, while it has quite an elevation, it has good soil and will produce, when the timber is cleared off. Timber grows there on the granite soil. The heaviest timber grows in Josephine County on what is called gray or red shot soil, red lands. There is a little milling or logging operation going on in Josephine County, but not to any great extent. He thinks Mr. Spaulding is the biggest operator there now. He is over in what is known as the Sweet Basin country. In section 11, township 37 south, range 6 west, there is part of that that is sold by the Railroad Company that is the very best of land and the people who own it hold that land at about $150.00 an acre, that is a fair and reasonable price, he thinks it is a very good price, but that it is worth that; of course it is improved and all that and the land is cleared and under cultivation and his general description is a fair representation of it, as a whole, he thinks. He considered these lands in the several townships in detail, including these railroad lands, at the request of the Government, he had a map of the Railroad Company which shows the railroad lands and also what is purported to have been sold off, whether it is correct, he does not know, the map is the same as these maps in evidence in this case, it is the lower section which includes Josephine County, covering ten townships, from 31 to 41.

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified that he is fifty-five years old and was foreman on construction of the road from Roseburg to old Fort Lane from 1881 to 1883. Old Fort Lane is above Gold Hill in the edge of the valley at the same station that is called Tolo, about three or four miles north of Central Point and three or four miles south of Gold Hill. He was engaged in this construction work between Roseburg and this point a little more than two years. He worked through the Cow Creek canyon, which was a very rough piece of construction, and in his judgment, as a railroad construction foreman, he would say that the Cow Creek Canyon compared with the most difficult pieces of railroad construction in the west. The country on either side of the Cow Creek Canyon is right in a canyon, these mountains run up pretty high on each side there and they were then covered with timber. Since that time a good deal of the timber, close to the railroad, has been cut off for lumber or fuel for the railroad,—some of it but not all of it. There is not very much good saw timber close to the railroad between Tolo and Roseburg now. The valley that they went through with the railroad settled when they got there in 1881. He would think that, as a dealer in real estate, and a man familiar with the location of these bottom lands along the Rogue River and these other streams, that most of that land was taken under the donation land law, or under the homestead prior to the time the railroad grant took effect. All he knows about the amount of level or clear land in the valley or in the county being appropriated by homestead or donation claims prior to the vesting of the grant, is that when they got to Grants Pass and in going up the Rogue River, when they struck the Rogue River, these level lands were all owned, title had been taken from the United States and they were all owned at that time. Grants Pass, so they claim, was named for General Grant. There is not very much of a pass there, they went over the old stage road but it does not appear to him to be very much of a pass. He recalls that from Roseburg south over the old stage road through the Cow Creek Canyon, a stage was maintained from Roseburg to Redding in those early days, and that they used the Concord coach and drove all day and all night and it took about two days and nights continuous driving to go from Roseburg to Ashland. He got in the stage once at Rock Point and he thinks he got on at three or four o'clock in the afternoon and they got to Roseburg the next day about the same time, a distance of about seventy-five miles. That road had been maintained as a stage road from the days of the discovery of gold in California until the time the railroad was built. He had the pleasure of riding the last stage that came over the Siskiyous. He does not know whether there is nine billion feet of timber estimated to be merchantable saw timber in Josephine County; he does not believe there is, that is drawing it a little strong. They have a lot of good timber in that country. The Sugar Pine Door and Lumber Company operated around Grants Pass and took a lot of that timber within a radius of about six miles of Grants Pass and maintained an establishment there and employed several hundred men for several years, until they got the timber practically all away within a distance of six or seven miles of the track mostly. After that, they hauled logs, skidded them in from west of Grants Pass, some five or six miles, but they did not haul logs into Grants Pass, they had little sawmills out there. He does not think there are twenty sawmills in Josephine County now all together. He only knows personally of two or three mills that are operating there in Josephine County.

"Q. Now, isn't it true, Mr. Kearns, that there is a lot of this land that you say could be cultivated, or made tillable if the timber was removed, that is very steep, and a man could hardly drive his team or could'nt plow it up without he had a side hill plow?

A. Well, there is some of those lands in that condition, but however, they are doing it." They just turn their moldboard and go back, with a side hill plow they have, they can switch over and turn and go right back with a side hill plow. He has been at Grants Pass about ten years, engaged in the timber business and locating people in quarters of timber under the timber and stone act and in Josephine County he would not say that he had located, within the ten years under the timber and stone act, more than fifty or seventy-five persons. He charged a location fee. He would make an estimate of the land himself, had sufficient knowledge of cruising to be able to make a practical estimate upon which a man could safely buy. A fair marketable claim would carry two million feet. He has located quite a number of homesteads that had timber on but not good merchantable timber. There is scrub timber.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. In going through looking for these timber claims, have you ever noticed a number of timber quarters that had been entered under the Homestead Act by single men, where the improvements had been abandoned after the title had been obtained, and where the title had been transferred to some of these timber holdings or investors? Have you noticed that in your observation in going through these timber regions?

A. I have noticed a great many cabins that has been abandoned, but that was in townships where it was unsurveyed, and it was squatters. But you take it in where the lands was Government lands, where they could get their filing on them, and prove up on them, I don't know of very many of them.

Q. Well, wasn't it quite a practice, and hasn't it been until the prosecution of the land fraud cases in Oregon about six or seven years ago, for people in the towns, to exercise their homestead rights on these timber-lands, and make an effort to comply technically with the Homestead Law, and then commute at the end of 14 months, and pay the $2.50 an acre?

A. Oh, I know of a few cases, but there are not but very few cases like that.

Q. Never saw many since the prosecution of these land fraud cases?

A. Not so many before that. It is a pretty hard matter for a man to go out onto one of these pieces of land that is timber, you know, and try to prove up on it as a homestead.

Q. Well, they did do it in some instances, didn't they?

A. Oh, they have done it.

Q. Now, you say there are no vacant lands in Josephine County now?

A. Oh, there is some, I guess.

Q. I mean Government land.

A. There is some, I guess, yes.

Q. What is the reason that is not all taken? What is the trouble with it?

A. Most all the lands, however, in Josephine County that I know anything about personally had some kind of a filing, or tied up some way that it is not free to go and locate it.

Q. The Forest Service—I mean the Forest Reserve policy of this administration and the preceding administration has enclosed about one-third of Josephine County?

A. Oh, yes, can see here what it has taken.

Q. Has enclosed about one-third of Josephine County within the limits of a forest reserve. That is true, isn't it?

A. Yes, that is true.

Whereupon witness testified, that he thinks the population of Josephine County the last census was about eighteen or nineteen thousand, but he does not know the population of Grants Pass at that census but in his judgment it would have been about five thousand people. Grants Pass is the county seat of Josephine County which was created out of Jackson County, but he does not know when, but it was done, he thinks, before they built the railroad.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. What, in your judgment, is the fair market value of all of the unsold railroad lands in Josephine County? Just take that you know, now, what, in your judgment, is the fair market value of all these unsold railroad lands, supposing they could be sold in quantities of 160 acres, or not to exceed that?

A. Well, that, of course, would be owing to what a man would want them for. That would be only a guess on my part.

Q. What would be your guess?

A. Well, I would guess that those lands—

Q. Take them on an average now?

A. Take them on an average they are worth $10 an acre.

Q. What in your judgment, would be the value of the best timbered lands that the company owns in that county, unsold, per quarter section?

A. Well, that is including the land?

Q. Yes, including the land and timber and everything there is connected with it, per quarter section?

A. The best timber-land would be worth $5,000 or $6,000 for a quarter section.

Whereupon witness testified that he did not participate in locating people under this Act of April 10, 1869, on these railroad quarters. There was a good deal of that done in that County and several hundred people sent hundreds of dollars but he never placed one of them yet, but he knows that that was done. He got all prices for locating people on a timbered quarter and generally got all he could, he has got as high as $600 and $700 a quarter section from timber investors, this was good timber and it was not in Josephine County but in Jackson County, township 33, 3 west, a man by the name of J. H. McDonald of Port Huron, Mich., paid him that. McDonald got hold of 160 acres under the timber and stone act four or five years ago. When he was working on the railroad from Roseburg to Old Fort Lane, between Gold Hill and Tolo these lands through there were not considered worth very much, he understood that those lands right around Tolo there could be bought for about $15.00 or $20.00 an acre at that time, that was out in the valley, and the hill lands around Grants Pass were all vacant Government land at that time and there was then no market for them. The first timber inquiry began in Josephine County and Jackson County about eight or nine years ago, when it became a matter of commercial and merchantable transaction and became pretty active. He has been in the timber business, timber locator, for about ten years and he thinks that was about the time the timber inquiry began and he has continued in that business ever since. It is quiet now simply because there is nothing for them to take. Most of the people who have timber want to sell and he does not consider the prices very high. He has a lot of timber lands now for sale at different prices, ranging all the way from $15 to $30 an acre, which is about the ruling price at this time, these lands are situated in all parts of Josephine and Jackson Counties, he has quite a lot of these lands for sale, one tract of 20,000 acres owned by different people situated in Douglas County, simply got it in shape for selling and he is trying to sell it to a large concern that can afford to buy it. The price is $1.00 a thousand stumpage. That 20,000 acres it is estimated will cut 50,000 to the acre, which would make about $50 an acre or about a million dollars. He has had it on his books about two or three months and thinks he has a prospect of making a sale. That land is situated in Douglas County on the Smith River, quite a ways, about fifteen miles from the railroad. That goes into something over fifteen miles before one commences to get into the timber and then the timber goes right along down the river. It is quite a ways from Eugene. Smith River is a tributary of the Umpqua and goes into the north side of the Umpqua. About twenty-five per cent of these rough lands about which he had spoken he thought could be made tillable and he would class as rough lands about twenty-five per cent of the total unsold railroad lands and of that he thinks twenty-five per cent could be tilled, after the timber was removed. He thinks take the whole grant over, that about fifty per cent of the quarters could be occupied by settlers so as to enable them to make a living on a quarter section. They could make a good living if they could get five or ten acres. If a man started in broke on there, he would do like they did in the early days in Oregon, the facilities for making a living now-a-days are different from what they were then, he could put up a tent, if he could not build a house, and he could get in a little garden and he could work around and make it. They could work out for the first year or two and get money to support their families; it would not cost a man like it does, it would be a pretty hard matter, he could devote himself to the stock business too after he got started.

Whereupon witness testified :

Q. Now, isn't it true that most of these people that have gone out and settled on these even quarters, quarters in the even sections have three or four acres in garden and truck, and a few hogs, a few cows, and worked out part of the time, and then they get stock, and let the stock range out over the unenclosed lands, and in that way they get along until they can make final proof and get title to their lands? Isn't that about the way they do?

A. Well, some of them does that way, but my experience with the most of these homesteaders is now, that the first thing they do is to clean up a little piece of ground, and get in strawberries, and get in a good garden, potatoes and such as that, and then, if they are any ways close to towns, they can haul their wood into town. Wood is worth something, you know. They cut wood.

Q. Well, the towns are not very numerous except on the railroad, are they?

A. Oh, no, only the lands that is tributary to the railroad.

Whereupon witness testified, that there are practically no towns off the railroad there, but just post offices. These homestead ranchers sold strawberries. This man on Section 12, sells a lot of strawberries, and is right close to Grants Pass and has a market. They are not all situated within four or five miles of Grants Pass, but they have it now so that they have auto trucks that go out there thirty miles and bring in that stuff, garden stuff and apples. They go as far as Kerby and up on Williams Creek and get garden truck and bring in everything and ship it to Portland. They are bringing in their apples now with auto trucks, they bring in about five tons from Williams Creek a load with these auto trucks. They are shipping them everywhere, they are shipping them east. It takes about eight years for an apple orchard to become a bearing orchard, he thinks, seven or eight years. A homesteader going out and putting out an apple orchard would have to wait about eight years but if he would put out a peach orchard he would not have to wait so long, from four or five years. A pear orchard would bear in seven or eight or nine years, something like that. The Yellow Newtowns or Spitzenberg is about the apple that they market in the eastern market. They claim to ship something like 25 or 30 carloads of apples annually from Grants Pass, and the bulk of them come from those bottom lands along the Rogue River and he does not know whether they ship a carload of pears from Grants Pass, he does not know how many pears are shipped. Shipments of pears of any great consequence, he thinks, are from Medford, Central Point and Ashland, and some from Eagle Point, and he thinks they ship more apples than they do from Grants Pass, he knows that they ship a very large number from Medford and from the little stations on both sides of Medford along the railroad. He has been in attendance as a witness on behalf of complainant ten or twelve days and sometimes has been listening to the testimony of the various witnesses, he came down here ten day ago as a witness on behalf of complainant and has been in attendance on the court ever since. He has not been specially employed or solicited bv the complainant to get any witnesses in this case. He was subpoenaed. He was interviewed by Mr. Schwartz, special agent of the General Land Office. He don't know that Schwartz is the regular inspector of the General Land office but supposes so. He has not had any litigation of any kind with the Railroad Company or in which it was interested.

Whereupon on re-direct examination witness testified that when he came here ten or twelve days ago, it looked to him as though there were a hundred witnesses for the Government ahead of him and those had to be called first. Very few have come since he came, most of them were here when he came.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Now, Mr. Kearns, with reference to the time that it would take a settler to establish an orchard on these lands, I will ask you whether the same problem does not confront a settler in the valley lands there?

A. The same thing, yes. It takes the same length of time. Only in these bench lands in these granite lands—they are much earlier than they are in the bottom lands.

Q. Well, would the length of time that it takes to get a producing trees, either apple tree or peach tree or pear tree be any greater obstacle in the matter of settling these lands that you have been testifying about than it would as to the lands in the valley?

A. Not a bit. The same length of time. In fact, I think it would take longer.

Q. Where?

A. In the bottom, because, as I stated before, these granite lands when a peach is three and four years old on the granite lands, it produces.

Q. Well, now, how about the obstacles that confronted the early settlers in the valleys there? Did they have those same difficulties to encounter?

A. They had those same difficulties to go through that they would today.

Q. Did they have to work out until they got themselves established?

A. I suppose they did. I think the times are better now for those class of people than they were at those days.

Q. You were asked as to what a man would do who went out on some of these lands and was broke. Now, I will ask you what a man can do on any agricultural or horticultural lands in the world, if he is broke?

A. He cannot do very much. He can do the best he can. That is about all he can do.

Q. Now, these people who have come to Grants Pass seeking lands of this character, have they come there broke, or are they people who have come prepared to buy lands and improve them?

A. Most of them have come there with—they have come there some of them with capital, capital to buy lands and improve them. Others come there with only a small amount of money. It was only four or five months ago I placed a man on a piece of land out there that only had $250. It was a relinquishment. He got the relinquishment for $250, and he has cleared up, and he must have ten or twelve acres cleared now. And he has absolutely made his living there since he has been there by doing this clearing, working for the neighbors around, and on his place, and improving it. His place today is worth—you cannot go and buy it of him. You cannot go and buy his relinquishment short of $1,000 today, and that is about four months ago—a man by the name of Wise.

Q. Now, how do the lands along the railroad through Josephine County compare with the other lands in the county?

A. The railroad lands or lands along the railroad through Josephine County, some of them is about as rough land as we have got right where the railroad run.

Q. Does the railroad follow the canyons there?

A. The railroad follows the canyons and the river.

Q. Speaking generally, I mean.

A. Yes.

Q. Of course there are some level bottoms that the railroad passes over, I presume?

A. Oh, yes.

Whereupon on re-cross examination witness testified that the Wise homestead that he bought is in section 2, township 37 south, range 6, about six miles from Grants Pass on the south side of the Rogue River, west in the foothills. It has some timber, it is brush land, but no saw timber. It was not vacant before this man reliquished it, it was a relinquishment and had been taken for two or three years.

Whereupon THOMAS BENTON MASTERS, called as a witness on behalf of complainant being duly sworn, testified that he is fifty-one years old, resides at Portland, Oregon, at the present time, but formerly resided for eight years in Polk County, Oregon, about the central part of the county. He was superintendent of the logging camp and cruising timber while he was a resident of Polk County, he was superintendent for the Willamette Valley Lumber Company. He has lived on the coast thirty-two years and has been in Oregon twenty-five years out of that time. When he first came to Oregon he was a street car driver on the Holladay line and went from that to railroading and from railroading went into the timber. The timber business has been his business for the last twenty-six years. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259" he points out Falls City and Black Rock and he is acquainted there. He points out the right of way from Falls City to Black Rock, he located that right of way. From the break of the hill that runs between Falls City and the Lacreole, between the break of the hill, about a quarter of a mile this side of the break, which is really abrupt right there, there is not much timber. He is acquainted with townships 8 south, 6 and 7 west and part of 7 south, 8 west. Falls City is in township 8 south, range 6 west. He is sufficiently acquainted with this section of country to know the soil conditions and the formation of the land and the suitableness of the same for agricultural purposes after the timber has been removed. He has been through that country and is familiar with township 7 south, ranges 6 and 7 west. Seventy-five per cent of that country in township 8 south, range 6 west, and the north part of township 9 south, ranges 6 and 7 west, in his opinion, would be susceptible to cultivation, after the timber is removed. He has been over township 7 south, ranges 6 and 7 west sufficiently to give him general information as to that territory and as compared with township 8 south, ranges 6 and 7 west, it would be just about the same. The north part of township 9 south, ranges 6 and 7 west, is better than township 8 south, range 7 west, better land. Where the timber is good it is just about the same, but the land is better, altogether better, more tillable land. He is acquainted with the general conditions of the southern portion of township 9 south, ranges 6 and 7 west, sufficiently to acquaint him with the general conditions there, as compared with the other lands that he has been over and the general conditions are just about the same as they are in township 8 south, range 7 west. The township south of township 8, ranges 6 and 7 west, is better, a good deal better, that is the southern part of Polk County, that is a good deal better than township 8 south, range 7 west, but not any better than township 8, 6 west, generally. He had occasion every once in a while to go over these lands on what he would call a job of going out and cruising a piece of timber or looking for a piece of timber for the Company or someone else, and they would tell him to look over certain parts of certain sections and in that way he had a chance to get an idea of what the land was. As a timber cruiser employed in the timber he was required to make a report on the character of the soil and its suitableness for cultivation after the timber was removed.

Whereupon witness testified as follows:

Q. Now, Mr. Masters, if these lands were divided into 160-acre tracts, would this percentage that you have stated be generally carried out as to the number of acres that could be cultivated on the 160-acre tract?

A. Possibly there might be in one 160 acres that I know of, in 8-7, that there would not be 75 per cent. But in another 160 acres, there would be the whole of it in the same—well, in 8-7.

Q. Then the percentage would generally work out on the whole thing?

A. On the whole thing, yes, sir.

Whereupon, on cross-examination, witness testified that there are no mountains around Falls City or up towards Black Rock. What he means by a mountain is a place where a man could not take a horse or a mule or could not take a pack of one hundred pounds on his back or anything like that, that is, what he thinks is a mountain. Black Rock is between seven hundred and eight hundred feet above sea level, that is not what they call the coast range there, when they go out cruising, but when they go to the mountains, they go over about township 9 south, range 9 west, or over in that country. They always calculated that the mountains got higher until they got seven or eight miles beyond Black Rock as they go west, that is what they call mountains. There is not any timber to speak of south of Falls City. There is a lot of underbrush and second growth. It is wild and in brush and is not all cultivated. On the Luckiamute, west of Helmicks, all the way up for fifteen miles one goes into the mountains and is in the timber all the time, excepting what time one is not in the burn or in some little brush. Falls City by railroad is 9.45 miles from Dallas by what is called the Salem, Falls City and Western Railway. There never was but one sawmill at Falls City and that has been there fifteen years. There is a sawmill two miles west of Falls City. Falls City is incorporated. He owns property in Falls City. When he speaks of Falls City he means the corporate limits, just as one would mean if he meant in Portland. The sawmill that is operated there is known as that of the Falls City Lumber Company. The capacity of the mill for ten hours he would say was 80,000 feet, cut into cants, not into inch boards, but into cants. There are three large timber concerns that do business at Falls City or near there. There is the Spaulding Logging Company, Charles K. Spaulding Company and there is what is known as the Dallas Logging & Lumber Company and the Great Western Lumber Company and then the Falls City Lumber Company, there are four instead of three, and these are all rather large concerns except the Great Western Lumber Company. They get their timber from the railroad, that is the Great Western Lumber Company and the Spaulding Lumber Company and the Dallas Lumber Company. He could not tell just where they got their logs or whether they own any timber land up there, he has heard that they do own timber land up there but he could not tell whether they do or not. He never knew of the Charles K. Spaulding Logging Company hauling any logs to Independence, but they are taking logs out on lands in that section up there. Charles K. Spaulding Logging Company is one of the largest logging and milling concerns in the Willamette Valley, they are not the largest, but they are one of the largest. The Booth Kelly Lumber Company is probably the largest, they are in the Willamette Valley. Up until within the last year, the Spaulding Logging Company did not take out as much timber as the Dallas Lumber Company. He has been over the unsold railroad lands in the places that he spoke of and can tell some particular sections of railroad land that he has cruised or been over. He has cruised some lands that the Oregon and California Railroad Company owned or now owns in Polk County, and he did that for the Company about eight years ago, cruised forty acres for the Company which was in the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 15, township 8 south, range 7 west. The railroad ran across one corner of it and took about one hundred feet of one corner off of that. He does not know that the Salem, Falls City and Western wanted to get a right of way across that forty but he knows that he cruised it, that Company got the right of way across that forty. It is his recollection that he found there was on that forty about 400,000 feet, that is a better forty than the average of that railroad land in there, it is not an average, but it is better than some of it. If it had been as good as some of it, Hirschberg would have had it. It is not an average forty that he cruised of timber lands that he knows there belonging to the Company, it is worse than the average and he thinks that the lands of the Company there would go a lot better than two million feet to the quarter of saw timber. He does not know all the lands that the Company has not sold, he only knows a little land that they had not sold at that time, that is that was supposed to have been sold, they would not average as much per quarter section as two million and a half, that is, not such as he knows. He knows of the unsold lands of the Company about six or eight quarter sections that is, of lands that are not sold, that is, he knows positively. He does not know whether the other lands are sold or unsold, but those that he is speaking about he knows are unsold, six, seven or eight quarter sections that he knows are unsold would average very little timber per quarter section. They would not average a million to the quarter section, they have not been cut over, they have been burned, they would not average a million to the quarter. He has never cruised them and could not say what they would average, he would have to guess at that, this one particular forty that he did cruise. There was no use of cruising those because there was nothing to take off. His knowledge of the rest of the land there that belongs to the Company is just going through the country like a timber man would. He thinks that about seventy-five per cent on an average could be cultivated, after the timber was cleared and the stumps taken out, it would not be too steep. It would be better than land about Derry and Dallas but it would not be level, it would be better. Derry and Dallas are too flat, that is too flat around Derry and Dallas for fruit.

"Q. You don't want the court to understand that this land that is lying back there in the foothills is better than the land in the Willamette Valley and ought to have been settled years ago, do you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you have got the notion that the lands that are back in the foothills, covered with fir timber, however rough it might be, are better than the old Willamette Valley lands.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I see. Well then why didn't the people go in there and take up the even sections fifty years ago? Why didn't they do that?

A. They didn't have no way of clearing those trees off them."

It is only recent years that they have gone in there to settle at all. He could not say that a good many have settled and taken homesteads in that timber country, have proved up and sold their timber claims to the Charles K. Spaulding Logging Company and other people, but he guesses that some of them have done that, but he does not know of any who have sold to the Charles K. Spaulding Logging Company. He does not know a man that sold any of them. They all sold before he got there.

Whereupon witness further testified:

Q. Well, you have gone out there and looked them over. You are a timber man, and cruiser, and dealt in timber quarters. Didn't you find quarters there that people were applying for and wanting to buy, timber investors, and didn't you sell some of them?

A. The timber is mostly all, when I went there eight years ago bought by three different parties.

Q. Who were these three different parties?

A. Spaulding Logging Company and Joe Hirschberg and the Willamette Valley Lumber Company.

Q. How many acres did Joe Hirschberg get hold of by one way or another?

A. I heard 19,000, but I never knew how many. That is what I heard.

Whereupon witness testified that he did not say that Hirschberg got the best timber, but would say that he got his money's worth. The other people that bought there, the Spaulding Logging Company, he does not know how much the Spaulding Logging Company owns, or how much the Willamette Valley Lumber Company owns, but they are large holders of timber lands in that country. He has tried to take a quarter section of this railroad land, he thinks it was the southwest quarter in township 8 south, range 7 west, in Polk County, he did not settle on it, he did not take it, but applied to the Company to buy it under this Act of Congress and offered them $2.50 an acre, there were no printed blanks to sign. He just made his application put his money in, but they did not take his money. He made his application the latter part of June, 1907, before he applied to purchase. He knew what kind of land he was taking. He had gone out on the tract. He would judge there was about three million feet of timber on that quarter section, it is about eighteen miles from Dallas and about eight miles from Falls City, but not in the mountains. It is in township 8 south, range 7 west. He went through it, before he applied to purchase it and got a pretty good idea of how much timber there was on it before he applied. He offered to pay $2.50 an acre and he expects the timber on it, if he could get a good title to that quarter section, would be worth $1,000.00. He does not know if it is worth as much now as when he applied for it, he has never lived on it. He lives in Portland and is running a woodyard, has a woodyard at 542 First street and has been in that business six months. Before he came to Portland he was living at Black Rock running a general merchandise store, and had been in the mercantile business at Black Rock two years. He did not apply to the Company to purchase this timber land while he was a merchant at Black Rock. Before he was in the mercantile business at Black Rock he was running a logging camp, superintendent for the Willamette Valley Lumber Company, and that was the time when he applied to purchase the land. Black Rock is just a postoffice—those logging camps, two or three little stores there mainly for the loggers.

Whereupon, on re-direct examination, witness testified that all of the best sections of the railroad lands there have been sold, and that was the reason he said that the ones that were unsold did not amount to very much, that there was not a million feet on them, he did not think. He knows there was not in fact.

Whereupon J. N. SWITZER, called as a witness on behalf of complainant being duly sworn testified that he is forty-seven years old and resides at Willamina, Yamhill County, Oregon, and has lived in Yamhill County forty-six years and one year in Washington County. He was born and raised in Yamhill County. His father was a farmer, and never had a very large farm, but owned at one time 320 acres close to Sheridan, which he sold, he was buying and selling, changing around, different times, never stayed in one place very long on one farm until he got up in the mountains there and homesteaded. His father homesteaded in section 10, township 5 south, range 7 west and lived on his homestead about fifteen years. It was burnt over land, all dead timber when he entered it. His father cleared up about 18 acres of the 160, and there has been more of it cleared since, it had been pretty heavy timber one time in the early days, there had been forest fires which killed all the timber, a good deal of it was rotten. His father raised hay, vegetables, never threshed any grain there, always fed it out to the stock. The hay includes wheat, oats, vetch, they did not raise vetch then because they did not have it, they had wheat hay, oats hay and timothy, and raised all kinds of vegetables, carrots, parsnips; the soil was good soil. His father had about three acres of onion land and they raised onions on it for sale. They raised about six hundred sacks of onions there one year. He does not remember the year that his father went there, it was in 1878 he thinks, somewhere along about there that they went up into the mountains. That was the means of earning a support for himself and his family, there were seven children, this place was about twelve miles from the railroad. He has been engaged in farming pretty near all his life until the last three or four years, and has farmed there near Willamina, has farmed all his life in the Willamina Valley since he got hold of his farm and most of the time in township 5 south range 7 west. His father raised fruits on his homestead, had a few trees, not very many, never set out much of an orchard, about half an acre, but raised good fruit, the soil was adapted to that, it was good fruit land, raised apples, pears, plums, berries. Willamina is in the valley. His father's homestead was right at the head of the valley, one might say it was out of the valley up in the edge of the mountains. He means the Willamina Valley, is up on the Coast Fork, a branch of the Willamina River. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259" his homestead was right on the forks of this creek in township 5 south, range 7 west. There is very little of that land marked in green on this map that shows south and west up there, there is section 27 which is every bit of it good land, and is in township 5 south, range 7 west. There is one small part of that which shows green there, part of that has been bought years ago, the yellow part there. It does not show on there, and that marked red is railroad land that has been contracted, but the railroad company still has title to the land. He is familiar with that part there that is red. There is no waste land there on that section 27. Section 15, in township 5 south, range 7 west, is all timbered land, there is 600 acres of railroad land in that, and one forty sold out of that section 15. There is about fifty per cent, it would run near sitxy per cent of that section that could be rendered suitable for cultivation, for tillage, after the timber is removed. He has a pretty fair knowledge of the lands in township 4 south, range 7 west, and of that country and the existing conditions there. He is not very much acquainted in township 4 south, range 6 west, he has been there but has never paid much attention to it, he was over there for stock. He is acquainted with the general conditions existing in that township and is acquainted with the general country in the parts which show the green markings there on the East Fork of the Willamina. That is a timbered country in there. Take the whole thing, after the timber is removed, about forty per cent of that land could be rendered suitable to cultivation. He has a general or specific knowledge of those lands marked in green, in township 5 south, range 7 west that he has not mentioned, and he would say that probably forty to fifty per cent in township 5 south, range 7 west, that he has not specifically mentioned by sections, could in his opinion be rendered suitable for farming purposes. There are people living, making homes and farming the lands similarly located in these townships, 4-7-, 5-7 west. Township 5-7 west has been settled quite a long time, most of that land, some of that land was taken under the old donation act in township 5 south, 7 west, quite a bit of that was old donation. If this land were divided into 160-acre tracts these percentages of plow land would generally hold good, in his opinion, that is, there would generally be these percentages of plow land as to each 160-acre tract.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Mr. Switzer, in your opinion, what has been the effect of the Railroad Company's failure to follow the conditions of the grant and sell to actual settlers at $2.50 an acre, in tracts of 160 acres in this community that you are acquainted with in Yamhill County?

A. Why, it would all be taken. It would all be sold at that price now.

Q. To actual settlers?

A. Yes, sir, settlers would buy it now. Most of the Government land is taken in township 4 now. Nearly all the Government land is taken up, and in 5-7 it is all taken, I think. I don't think there is any Government land left there.

Whereupon witness testified that all of the Government land there has been homesteaded, all homesteaded in there in the last two years. There have been some forty odd families located in townships 4 and 5 south, range 7 west. The first settlers in the settlement of this country went on the low lands, the valleys, and open places along the streams. The more recent settlers have gone on the hills, the land is rolling, all of it mountain land, a good deal of level land on it, nearly all of those more recent settlers there have a little piece of bottom land on some of those creeks and streams, these townships are well watered, every forty has water on it, in either township, he thinks. He does not think there is a forty but what there is water on it, springs, there might be a forty too, but one could not take an eighty without getting a spring on it.

Whereupon on cross examination witness testified that his father's first name was A. J. Switzer, and he took a homestead and lived at one time over on Red Prairie in Polk County and on Mill Creek and had a place over there, it was about four or five miles from the county line where he lived, he does not know what donation place it was, but it was a donation land claim and he was living there in 1868, 1869 and 1870, along there, he does not remember when he lived there. His father left there and went over to Washington County, they were there a year and then they came back and lived right south of Sheridan for a year and then went into the mountains. When they lived south of Sheridan they lived on a donation claim, Johnson owned the place at the time they lived on it, it was south of the Scroggins place, right up on Red Prairie there. He does not remember when they went up on the upper Willamina and his father took this homestead, but he thinks it was somewhere around 1878. At the time his father went up there he was the last settler on the creek. There was another man who went in the same time he did, a fellow by the name of Burton. At the time his father took that land he took the first place that was not taken up that creek, a man by the name of James lived there below, and it was four or five miles up the creek by the road from the donation land claim of Charley Fendell. Willamina is a place of about 500 people, at the end of the railroad that runs from Portland out to Sheridan, it goes about four and three-quarters miles from Sheridan to Willamina. The railroad has been there about five years, he thinks it was built four or five years ago by the Newberg Pressed Brick Company, it has a brick plant at Willamina, and they built that branch to ship out this stuff. Around that Willamina country is an agricultural and fruit district, and the last ten years a good many people have come in there from Tennessee and other parts, and have settled around Willamina. There was no donation land claim adjoining his father's homestead, it is all homesteaded. His father sold to Jack DeLashmutt who lived on it. It was a stock ranch, and that is about the way his father and his family made a living on that place. They kept some cattle and hogs and their stock ran out there in the mountains, it was all open then to pasture. A good many claims have been taken, homesteads have been taken in the township north of this one in township 4 south, range 7 west in the last two years. That used to be a timbered township, but it is all burned over, there is no green timber on that township at all now, it is an old burn. It has been, he would guess fifty or sixty years since the first big burn. Every few years there would be fire come through there and burn it. There is no young fir on it to speak of, once in awhile there is some young fir. If fire had not been over that every year, there are some places where the young fir would have come back, some places where it would not. The stock keep the young fir down as much as the fire. Take that country close to Willamina, it has a heavy forest on it, it has saw timber and the reason is that nothing was ever done with it, they just let it lay idle and the timber came up on it and it is a pretty heavy forest now, all second growth fir, they are making ties of it today, it has grown, he would say just exactly, but there are trees there that have come up since he went to that country that they are sawing ties out of now, that is trees probably eighteen inches at the butt. If fires and stock had not interfered the young fir there, in its native state would reproduce in the course of fifty or sixty years and make saw timber. This old burn has been taken the last two years, quite a good many people have gone in there and taken homesteads, they have not much clearing to do, they have the old logs and stumps to take off the land, and there is quite a bit of hazel and vine maple brush coming on this land, which has been growing, the fire kills it every few years and the stumps are in there and old roots, but the brush does not get very high except along the creek it grows very high and rank along the creek. The best timbered township in there would be township 4 south, range 6 west, he thinks, no, township 5 south 7 west, there is some timber, but not much in those two sections. There has been no timber logged off of the railroad lands and sold to the sawmills or cut down, he thinks, but there has been on the even sections, some of the even sections have been taken as homesteads and they are all cut off, sold off now on the homesteads. These people that took the homesteads in these timbered parts, did not sell the land to timber people, they cut the timber off, sold the timber there to the mill, sold the stumpage. He does not know about what a quarter section of that best timber would run in million feet. He has no knowledge of timber himself. He never cruised in his life. There is considerable good timber in sections 27 and 11 of these unsold railroad lands. Section 27, township 5 south, range 7 west is not clear land, but is good land, it is all timbered except about ten acres of prairie in it that has been plowed, the rest of it is timber, second growth timber and some old growth, but it is good land and lays good and is all good soil, referring to the 121.20 acres of unsold lands of the Company. In section 15 there are 600 acres of unsold railroad land which is not all timber, there are some open burns in that, not very much though, it is mostly timber, there is a small burn in which the timber that is left is old growth timber, pretty good timber. The land adjoining section 15 at the present time has been selling at from $25.00 to $30.00 an acre, and the land in section 15 is worth $25.00 an acre for the timber alone. A man could afford to buy it for $2.50 an acre just for the timber.

"Q. And when you say that most of all that would be bought and settled upon at $2.50 an acre you mean that they would pay $2.50 an acre for most any of it there, and make the best use of it they could?

A. Yes, they would buy all that open land at $2.50 an acre now.

Q. Practically all the unsold railroad land in townships with which you are familiar, if put on the market at $2.50 an acre would be bought up wouldn't it?

A. Yes, would be bought up.

Q. By speculators or investors?

A. No, settlers would come in there and take it right now.

Q. I understand, but wouldn't it be a good investment for one to buy that 600 acres at $2.50 an acre?

A. Yes, it would be a good investment for any man.

Q. I could make a good investment to buy any of that land at $2.50 an acre?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I wouldn't have to live on it to make a good investment, would I?

A. No, sir, wouldn't have to live on it."

He is not much acquainted with township 4, 6 west. He has been over that, it is directly northwest of McMinnville and he is not acquainted with that very well. The Jones sawmill he does not think is in township 4 south, range 6 west, he thought that was further over. Fairchild is on the north fork of the North Yamhill, which is in townships 2 and 3, ranges 5, 6 and 7 west. 3 west would be immediately west of Carlton. He is not much acquainted with that at all. He lived there when he was small. He was born right there close to Carlton. McMinnville is in township 4, range 4 west, and the county line between Tillamook and Yamhill corners over west of McMinnville about ten miles. Willamina River as shown on this map has an east, middle and west fork, and Willamina River runs up into that timbered country in township 4 south, range 7 west, and the stream runs south to Willamina. Charley Fendell's donation land claim is just up the creek from Willamina in section 25, about two miles from Willamina. He notices these yellow sections all around in there on both sides of the Willamina Creek, running clear up into township 4 south, range 7 west. His father's homestead was in section 10, township 5 south, range 7 west, on a direct line about five or six miles beyond Willamina. He was over on the Coast Fork. Not all of that country, in yellow there, is rolling foothill country, some of it, quite a bit of it is valley land. The Fendell place is all level valley land on the Willamina River, out from the river it is all rolling land. The Willamina Valley, where the Fendell place is, is a narrow valley, a narrow little valley of low lands and runs up on the hills. Sheridan is four and a half miles east of Willamina. Those foothills north and northeast of Sheridan towards McMinnville are all bald hills with quite a bit of brush and small grubs on some of them. In the early days the oak grub were not nearly as numerous and heavy as they are now, lots of that oak has grown up. He was told in that section of the country before it was broken up, that grass in the Willamette Valley and foothills there grew from a foot up to four and five feet high, but he did not notice much about that, they told him in an early day that grass was all over the valley as high as a horse's back. The fires kept everything down, the Indians kept it burned off. As soon as the whites got hold of the land, it has grown up, since pioneer days, with enclosure of the premises, and the stopping of the fires, the timber has increased and become more than there was before, excepting where it was grubbed. He thinks Yamhill county, this section, is one of the oldest settled portions of Oregon. The Grande Ronde Valley is west of Sheridan and Willamina about seven or eight miles, about seven miles to the edge of the valley. He thinks General Phil Sheridan had a fort there at Fort Sheridan in about 1860 or 1861 before the war. The old fort stood there until two years ago, when it was removed to Dayton and preserved by the people of the town as historical. The Grande Ronde Indians were put on the Grande Ronde Reservation and later on the Siletz. There was some settlement in these foothill lands prior to twenty years ago in a few scattering places on the creeks as they ran up. These foothills around Sheridan have been owned longer than twenty or twenty-five years ago, they have been settled quite awhile, they were in the country when he was there, and it was all open country. There have been no settlements in the timber back there, not away back until within the last few years. Before that there were some few ranchers on the creeks in the stock business, some up on the hills in township 4, there have been some ranchers for the last twenty-five years, they were not stock men, they kept a few head of cows, that is all, they cleared up quite a piece of land, some of them did in township 4 south, range 7 west. These railroad lands have not been much in demand until within the last ten years, there was nobody in there buying any land at that time. People come in thicker now and they want the land. Timber became the object of considerable inquiry in his section of the country eight or ten years ago, eight years ago and timber has become pretty valuable now. These 600 acres in section 15 are chiefly valuable for timber, more valuable for timber than for anything else now, but it is good agricultural land when the timber is off. It would cost quite a bit to clear it, some parts of it would cost almost as much as one could buy the cleared land for, in some places a man could get 25 or 30 acres clear, once in awhile. To clear land would cost pretty much as much as to go and buy cleared land.

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.

Q. Now, Mr. Switzer, the settler who goes on the land, what method does he use in clearing the land? Does he hire it done?

A. No, he clears it himself, as a general thing. He goes on there, and he clears a little every year, what he can.

Q. Would it be possible for a man seeking a home of moderate means, to obtain any lands at $2.50 an acre that he could clear up and cultivate?

A. Oh, yes, yes.

Q. By his own labor?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. At $2.50 an acre, that he could clear up?

A. Oh, no, not clear for $2.50, no.

Q. I don't believe you understood my question, Mr. Switzer. Could a man go over into this country, and buy land at $2.50 an acre?

A. Could he go and buy it?

Q. Yes. Are there lands for sale there at $2.50 an acre?

A. No. No, there is none there for sale, no, I should say there is not.

Q. Then a man seeking a home, having small means, he could not go down in the valley and buy land, could he?

A. No, he could not buy land in the valley there very cheap.

Q. His clearing of this land, his labor in clearing this land, would be something like putting money in a saving bank?

A. Yes, something like that, yes.

Mr. Fenton: You can't very well convince an old settler of that.

A. They go in there, and they get a little place and they clear up a little every year. And in a few years they have got a home. There is one man up there that got a piece of that land, bought a piece of it one time, and sold it a few years ago, and he has been offered $100 an acre for it. He has cleared it all up, and got it in cultivation. One forty of that 160 he was offered $100 an acre for.

Q. Where was that?

A. Township 5, Range 7.

Q. Was that timbered land?

A. It was burned over land, hill land, this red shot soil.

Q. Is that the same character of soil that is found on these lands?

A. Well, it is different from valley land below, but it is the same as the hill land all over 4 and 5. It is that kind of red shot soil, the hill land. The bottom land is kind of black loam on the creek, some sandy.

Q. You spoke about this section, its chief value being for timber. You mean in its present condition?

A. In its present condition, yes.

Q. It could not be farmed until the timber was removed?

A. Oh, no, it could not be farmed until it was cleared up. A man would soon clear up 25 or 30 acres on one part of that section that is a burn, lays nice, very. It has been burned ever since I can remember, fire went through there.

Q. Mr. Switzer, how is this land adapted for fruit raising?

A. It is good fruit land.

Q. Are the settlers in there raising, successfully raising fruit?

A. There has never been very much orchard put out there, only one upon the hills. There was one put out there 18 or 20 years ago, a small orchard. It is a fine orchard, bears the finest kind every year. It is good fruit. There has been quite a little set out in the last three or four years. There was one 20-acre orchard set out in 5-7.

Q. That has not had time to mature yet?

A. No, on the hill, right adjoining it, close to it, there is an orchard been bearing there for a number of years.

Q. How, if at all, has the demand for lands for settlement purposes, homesteading purposes increased in this community?

A. Oh, it has increased wonderfully in the last four years, five years. They have taken everything they can get hold of, settlers are coming there, getting in there and getting on all the land, wherever they can get a forty they are taking it.

Q. Are they carrying on dairying to any extent in this country?

A. Yes, up there on the Willamina there is quite a few of them dairying.

Q. Has that industry increased in the last few years?

A. Oh, yes, sir, a few years ago there wasn't any one dairying in there.

Q. Where is your nearest creamery?

A. We all ship our cream from that country to Portland, Dallas, Corvallis—we haven't any creamery close. They run a wagon up there clear up to the head of the Willamina.

Q. That is a wagon collecting cream?

A. Yes, the Hazelwood. I used to run a wagon for the Hazelwood myself up there and collect cream, seven or eight miles above the town.

Q. That is the Hazelwood Creamery of Portland?

A. Yes, sir. They get all the cream from that country pretty near, most of it. Independence gets some, and Corvallis gets some.

Q. How are these lands adapted for dairying purposes?

A. They are all right for dairying. That is really the finest vetch there is. They are adapted to vetch. Then the wild pea-vine grows all over that country, used to.

Q. Now, this burn that you spoke of, Mr. Switzer, did that burn destroy the soil?

A. I don't think so. It seems to produce mighty well anyway.

Q. In your opinion, would these lands, if divided into 160 acre tracts, be suitable for settlement in areas of 160 acres, that is, where a man would go on with the purpose of farming and making a home of it?

A. Oh, yes, on 160 acres, a man could make a home there on 160 acres of land.

Whereupon F. J. STEWARD, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn testified that he is sixty years old and lives in Sheridan, Yamhill County, Oregon and has lived in Yamhill County fifty-five years and in Oregon since 1852. He was not born in Oregon, but when he came here he was a small boy. His occupation since he has been a resident of Yamhill County was that of a farmer and he has been engaged in farming on the south and west part of the county and has farmed several different places there. There was the black, rich soil farm lands, some nice farms and some bottom land that he farmed. They were lands that were taken up in the early days, he thinks, which were used for farming purposes, that land was taken up under the donation land law. He took a homestead in township 4 south, range 7 west, it was high mountain land, situated in section 32. He has had experience in farming mountain land as well as valley land. This mountain land produces pretty nearly everything one would try to raise. There are some fruit trees and gardens. People have gardens up there, and they raise hay, grain hay. There is no threshing in there because it is an out of the way place for a threshing machine to get at. They do not raise grain to thresh, but they raise stock and fruit and garden. One might call it a farming country, the way the people live there. The land is used more for dairying purposes and raising stock. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259," he is acquainted with township 3 south, range 7 west and township 4 south range 7 west, mostly acquainted with them. Township 4 south, range 7 west is on the west fork of the Willamina. They do not call that Willamina branches there, they are named by these creeks, West Fork of Willamina is called Coast Creek, that is the way they are named on their blue prints on the map there. He is better acquainted with that country by following the names of the creeks. The East Fork of the Willamina is called East Creek, that is in the green section of timber there, and on the Coast Creek country, all of that, and in through that country there is all a burned district, has been burned off years and years ago, before he was acquainted with the country it had been burned off. There has been heavy timber all through that country, and it was burned, and the fire killed the big growth, and the timber stood there for years, until it became rotten, then it breaks and falls on the ground, that is in townships 4 and 5, range 7 west, that is the big burn, goes clear through to the coast, it goes clear back, reaches over to the coast and about forty miles wide, clear through along the Coast Range and goes clear over to Nestucca. He has been over these lands and he thinks he is acquainted with the conditions of them, the soil conditions and the growths that are on the land and the possibilities for agriculture and in this particular country that he speaks of there are thirty-five to forty per cent of that land that could be tilled. Judging by the places that are taken, claims they call them, people that have settled in there, that is in the area covered by the grant marked there in a general way, in his opinion, that this percentage would hold good as to 160 acre tracts, if divided into subdivisions. They could not perhaps take 160 acre tract and cultivate it, one could not start in and get thirty or forty per cent just in one place, in one certain piece, but one could have a field in one part of that tract of land, and on another portion of that land one could take a nice little field where people could open up and clear up the ground. That area is not heavily timbered, it is brush, it is not timber in that, most of that, some of it, in certain sections that he knows of has timber on it, but the most of it is what they call the burned district. There are settlers in that burned area. That land has been settled there ever since the people seemed to find out that there was a place for homes there. The way that he looks at it, the people who advertised this country here up along the areas there along the coast have enticed homeseekers to come there and hunt for homes, and that has been of late years, just the last few years that they seem to know that they could go and make homes there. A good many of them are successfully farming this land, they are there, they have brought their household goods there, got pianos and all nicely fixed. Those lands were acquired by homesteaders by taking quarter sections, the settlers that are on them.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Mr. Steward, in your opinion, what has been the effect in this community of the Railroad Company's failure to fulfill the conditions of the grant, and sell to actual settlers in tracts of 160 acres, at $2.50 an acre?

A. I don't know as I know exactly the conditions that the Railroad Company agreed to, on this land. But there are people now that would take the land and buy the land if they could get it.

Q. Well, assuming that such a condition exists, that the Railroad Company were required to sell at $2.50 an acre, in tracts of 160 acres only, to actual settlers, people who would actually settle upon the land.

A. Yes, sir, they would.

Q. What has been the effect of the failure to fulfill those conditions in this community?

A. Well, I hear people say that if they could buy a certain quarter section of land there, they would like to buy it. That has been the talk for a good many years.

Q. For what purpose did they desire the land?

A. For homes, for a home, yes, sir, to make their home on it, and to improve it.

Q. In your opinion, if this land was opened up to sale at $2.50 an acre, only to actual settlers, would the land be taken by people who would take them up in such tracts for homes and farming purposes?

A. That is what people tell me they would do.

Whereupon on cross examination witness testified that he took his homestead, he thinks, nine years ago. He took the northwest quarter of section 32, township 4 south, range 7 west and it is about eleven miles from Willamina in an old burn. There was timber and brush and dead timber on it when he took it. There was no saw timber on it, nothing but logs. He did not live on his homestead at all one might say, he took the claim there and his wife felt that that was not a very nice place to live so he had a little house and barn put up there. A man paid him a little something for his house and barn and he relinquished his rights and never really lived on the homestead. He thinks he got $35.00 for his improvements and the man to whom he reliquished, filed on it. His name was Cossach, a German. He did not perfect title, he lived on it, he and his son together stayed there about a year and they relinquished to a man by the name of Ryan but he does not know what they got for their relinquishment. Ryan did not prove up on it, Ryan did a little work on it and was called to Alaska and went away. It seems as though he had to go away, and a man told him a few days ago that he paid him $300.00 for his improvements. He was improving it, going ahead with it. He relinquished to somebody else under some circumstances a short time ago and that man is living on there now and has filed on it as a homestead. He does not know if he will relinquish or not. He might if he could get enough money out of it.

Q. You don't know whether he will stay on it and prove up?

A. No, I could not tell you that.

Q. It was not a very desirable quarter, then?

A. Well, not very. There was a railroad quarter down this side I would like to have got, but I thought if I could not get it, I would take the other. It was on an odd section. I don't know whether it was railroad land or not.

Q. The railroad section this side was on the market at one time, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember what the company offered it for, before 1905, about the time the change of administration in the land grant came about?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Well, anybody could have bought it 20 years ago for practically nothing, couldn't they?

A. I presume they could have got it cheaper than it could be got now.

Q. Don't you know, Mr. Steward, that a great deal of this railroad land there in the foothills and around could have been bought 25 years ago for probably $1.50 or $2.50 an acre?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was not any demand for it, really, was there?

A. No, sir. There was not the people here to ask for it. There was not the home-seekers.

Q. I know, but there was no settlers that wanted it?

A. Settlers had just worked back, they had taken claims along here, it was not policy to jump back on that land.

Q. I understand. What I mean is 20 years ago these railroad lands had no particular value to anybody.

A. Didn't seem as though they did, no, sir.

Q. Consequently there was nobody asking for the lands excepting a few farmers who wanted a forty adjacent to them.

A. Yes, that is it.

Q. And as the country filled up, and principally within the last five or six years, or seven years, and particularly since timber became an item, all the good timber-land in that whole country has been taken some way or other, hasn't it?

A. It has, yes.

Q. Some of it taken as homesteads, and some have taken it under the Timber and Stone Act?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the lands in this burn and open place are begun to be settled more or less?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Some of them having the experience that you had, of relinquishing, and never going on?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And others taking it, the second man relinquishing, and so on, until somebody has finally got the title to most of it?

A. Yes, sir.

The farming that he had done was chiefly down in the valley. His father's farm was about six miles, five miles southwest of McMinnville in the old settled place and was a donation land claim, the William E. Warren donation land claim and one immediately south of that was the Richard Miller donation land claim and all that country was taken up under the donation land law, 640 acres, and the foothills as they were bare and open were taken under the homestead, and sometimes partly under the donation law. He remembers where Charley Fendell's donation land claim is. It is two miles up the creek from Willamina and he has been there a long time. His brother-in-law, N. K. Sitton, lived down near Carlton on a donation land claim too, he thinks.

Whereupon, on re-direct examination, witness testified :

Q. Mr. Steward, you spoke, or rather, Mr. Fenton spoke of the lands being on the market in the early days, and there were no takers. As a matter of fact, there were even sections open to settlement there?

A. Yes, sir, the even sections.

Q. Which a man would have to pay nothing for to the Government except filing fees of $4.00?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those were the lands that were taken by those first men that came in there?

A. They were the lands that were taken, yes. Under pre-emption law, there was some pre-emption claims at that time.

Q. That was prior to the Homestead Act, some of them?

A. Yes.

Whereupon witness testified that on this homestead that he took there he sold his improvements, that was all, and really received no compensation for relinquishing the claim. The man that is on the land now is clearing it, slashing the brush off and clearing it. He has a garden on it. The railroad quarter of which he spoke that he would like to buy is in section 29, township 4 south, range 7 west, it is good land, creek bottom partly, it is quite good land. What they call Kennedy Creek comes down through there and there is quite a bottom of nice land through there, some bench land and fine grazing land, alder, ash and willow. It would just depend on how much a man cleared of this track as to how much plow land could be obtained, it has small brush stuff that could be cleared and one could plow quite a big per cent of it, it has no value for the timber that is on it and is only valuable for the agricultural uses to which it could be put. There is quite a little bottom along up through, of flat land, along up the branch flat land, they call it beaver dam land, good land for raising vegetables, anything like that, beaver dam land, as they express it, is very rich soil. One finds a piece of that land, as one goes up on the high ridges, there is high ridges, pieces of land one could not farm at all on this land, perhaps, but other portions are good land. This land adjoining Mr. Booth that belongs to the Railroad Company there, is in section 35, he does not remember how much is in that tract, it is in township 4 south, range 7 west. This railroad land in section 35 is high red soil, red shot land, good soil, if it was cleared off, the timber is rotten, the old big trees are rotting on the ground, it has a fine place for building, fine water as one ever saw, it lays out there, stock runs over it, some places it would not take anything hardly to clear it, other places it would cost considerable to clear it. There is a big body of that tract that could be cultivated, but he does not know what it would be and it seems to him there must be fifty or seventy-five per cent of that tract there that could be cultivated and that land is worth, from an agricultural standpoint, $20.00 an acre anyway. He sold land in there in section 33, a little piece for Mr. Booth, for $20.00 an acre and it was higher and farther away than this land.

Whereupon on re-cross examination witness testified that he had not applied to purchase any of this railroad land under this act of Congress.

Q. There was a good deal of excitement after this agitation started about this Government suit, among people trying to get these quarter sections for $2.50 an acre, wasn't there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not so much in your section, where the land was agricultural, as in the timbered sections?

A. No, perhaps not.

Q. You knew that that was going on as to the timbered lands in other parts of the state?

A. Yes, sir, I understood it was.

Whereupon H. S. MALONEY, called as a witness on behalf of complainant being duly sworn testified that he is sixty-three years old, resides at McMinnville, Yamhill County, Oregon, and has lived in that county since 1877. He is now county recorder of that county and has been such since July, 1908. He has had twenty years' experience in farming and surveying in that county. He owned farming lands in Yamhill County near Sheridan, which is in the valley. He has been more or less engaged in surveying work since 1878, land surveying principally, he has done some government work. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259," he had been over the upper part of all these lands north of Sheridan and Willamina, surveying, that is, in townships 4 south, ranges 5 and 6 west and has some little knowledge of township 3 south, 6 west, and also has been in 4 south, 7 west and has been all over township 5 south, range 7 west. Township 3 south, range 6 west is up in the Meadow Lake section, Jones' mill, and is principally burned over land, there is some green timber, he is not very much acquainted there. He surveyed some near Meadow Lake, which is principally burned around there, that is in the big burn which has been mentioned in the testimony of Mr. Steward and Mr. Switzer and is in the same area. There are some sections in there which have green timber, and there is some green timber in section 8, township 3 south, range 6 west. Meadow Lake is in section 15 and his knowledge of that land in township 3 south, range 6 west is rather limited with reference to agriculture. He rather thinks it is too high an altitude though to be very profitable for agriculture. He does not know just what it is, he has never taken the altitude. It is high and mountainous and he does not believe it would be successful for agricultural purposes but principally for stock raising. There are some settlements in township 3 south, range 6 west. There is one that would be in section 23, township 3 south, range 6 west. He has surveyed some in section 23, which is in a burn, but there is a shingle camp there, there are considerable shingles, and he thinks probably that was why that was taken. There was no land in cultivation when he was there and south of section 23 it is nearly all green timber. In township 4 south, ranges 6 and 7 west he is acquainted. Township 4 south range 6 west, the line runs diagonally from the northeast to the southwest corner, the southeast part of that township is principally green timber and would be considered as agricultural at least forty to fifty per cent. of it, if it was cleared. In section 15, he knows there was some railroad land that has been considered good agricultural land, but it has never been cleared, it is known as the Horse Ranch up there, it is fine grazing. Township 4 south, range 7 west, with the exception of perhaps the south tier of sections, is mountainous and principally adapted for grazing. There are settlers in that township, around there in township 4 south range 7 west, nearly all that south tier. There is a man by the name of Wade who took a homestead up in section 22, who lived on it his time and proved up, it is in a little basin in the mountains there on what they call Bible Creek. On section 21 a man by the name of Bible took up a quarter section there, which was practically all level land. He did not take it as a homestead, he bought it under the timber and stone act and the principal value at that time was the cedar timber, down logs, all fallen timber. It was not logged off but the cedar logs are valuable for posts and shingles, that is how he got it under the timber and stone act, but there were some little beaver dams along the creek that were valuable and the altitude is lower, snow does not lay there deep. The altitude is not very high in that country, not in that basin but there is some of that which is mountainous all around it, that is too high an altitude he thinks for agricultural purposes. He does not think that he ever took the altitude in that country, but it is something like 2,000 feet though he should estimate, to the higher ridges, something like that. There is more of the high elevation in township 3 south, range 6 west, than there is of any other kind, it is mostly high. Only the lower elevations of that land are adapted for fruit raising. Bald Mountain is in section 29, which is a very high point and can be seen from all over the valley. He presumes that the land in this vicinity, at an elevation of 2,000 feet, would produce grain and similar crops, although he has never seen it. Ordinarily 2,000 feet is not an elevation that would prevent the growth of grain hay, he does not think it would prevent it, if one had soil, he thinks it would grow. The character of the soil in township 3 south, range 6 west, the higher mountains, he thinks is coarse shot land, as it is called, and there is not very heavy timber on it, it is burned over now, the timber is small. There is first growth of timber on Bald Mountain, the old logs were there twenty years ago, something like that. It has scarcely a log over a foot in diameter, showing that it never had been very large timber on these higher mountains, but the lower levels, of course are washed from the hills and that land is pretty good soil. The growth of the timber that is on there now is second growth in this burn, there is some timber on it. It is principally fir, young fir, but it is generaly so thick that it never grows to any great size, it has grown so thick in there, it is more of an underbrush, it is not very difficult to remove, slash it off and burn it. The northern part of township 3 south, range 6 west, with which he is acquainted, is in that condition generally. The southern part has some green timber, heavy saw timber, old large fir, generally the size of the trees indicates the soil, and it is good timber. There is nothing that would prevent cultivating this land excepting the removal of the timber. These portions that are heavily timbered, take township 3 south, range 6 west, as a whole, the southern part of it, is pretty good, would be pretty good for agricultural purposes, but it is rather steep and broken. He has surveyed some in section 23, 15, 16 and 8 in township 3 south, range 6 west. He was there surveying for the Meadow Lake Club at one time, meandering or surveying their lands. Most of the lands were in the lake. Meadow Lake Club is the corporate name, it was a club house that was located there. At another time he surveyed some for a land holder in section 23 by the name of Frank Martin, he thinks. He has located a claim or two near the Bald Mountain as it is called in the south part of the township. As to settlers there on the even sections in this township, there are Williams Bros. and a man by the name of Cobb who have taken claims in there on the burnt part of it and then the others have been taken as timber claims, the south part. The south part is timbered and he thinks the land was taken up mostly under the timber and stone act, some of it was taken as a homestead. He thinks Mr. Ivan Daniels took a homestead. These lands in township 3 south, range 6 west could be used for fruit purposes, those that are not too high an elevation he believes would be useful for fruit purposes. The elevation there would be mere guess work on his part, he is not an expert on those things, but on the top of Bald Mountain, the size of the growth of the timber where the logs are, rather indicates altitude. As a general rule, the foot hills are regarded as better land for fruit, on account of the drainage, but when one gets to the higher altitude, he does not know, he has never been engaged in the fruit business. He has a large orchard on his farm where he has lived for twenty years which was in the valley. He is acquainted with the lands in township 4 south, range 7 west, there are portions of that upon which he located settlers twenty-five years ago, in the west half of section 6 of that township on the Nestucca River, on a piece of bottom land, he presumes fifty or sixty acres of level land and it is not a very high altitude, and there were apples bearing at that time, that was in section 6 in this township a part of which was in the burn, it covers part of that burn. He is told that in the last year or two, every quarter section, in this township on the even sections, was taken up. This burn will in time become valuable by the undergrowth of young fir coming up now, but at the present time, it contains no merchantable timber, nothing unless it would be some of the flats where cedar logs are which are good for posts and shingles. It has been fifteen years since he was in township 4 south, range 7 west, and he has not been there since these settlers have gone in there and he knows nothing of the progress they have made, with reference to the land they have settled upon, except what he has gleaned from a paper that is published in Willamina, from a correspondent out among the settlers which he reads every week. It has been, he thinks, eight or ten years since he was in township 3 south, range 6 west, and he does not know whether the even sections there, such as were taken, have been settled on in that time. He is acquainted with a considerable portion of these lands in township 4 south, range 7 west, they are in this burn. From his personal knowledge, he could not say whether the even sections are settled in that township, but he understands that they are, every one of them. It has been, he thinks fifteen years since he was over in that township, he does not recall the time when he was in there. There is, as he has said, in that township, this basin where Mr. Bible has taken his claim and Mr. Wade has taken his claim. Bible got his claim under the timber and stone act and Wade homesteaded his as vacant land. They are not using that for farming purposes, but they are using it for grazing purposes. Bible bought his holdings and does not live over there, he rents it for grazing purposes. There is a high mountain just south of this basin. The top of it, of course, is rocky and rough, but on the south slope of what is known as Springer mountain, there are some little pockets with wonderfully rich soil, but it has a great deal of rock, large rock. Some of these pockets are from one to two or three acres in there and some little cherry flats that are very fertile. It would be pretty much of a guess as to the true percentage of these lands with which he is acquainted, in township 4 south, range 6 west and 4 south, range 7 west, if divided into 160-acre tracts that would be suitable for settlement, that is, that enough plow land could be obtained to support a family, but there are very few of these quarter sections but what would have from five to twenty-five per cent of land that could be cultivated. In township 4 south, range 6 west, the southeast portion of it, some of them, were donation land claim taken in there. It would be mere guess work to say whether men have homesteaded and earned their support for themselves and families, on lands similarly situated, containing a similar amount of land in a 160-acre tract in this burned section in which the Railroad Company still owns some land. He does not know of but one settler in township 4 south, range 6 west. He believes he has made a very good living, he thinks, by raising strawberries on his land there and has peddled them out to McMinnville, that is, from his acquaintance of fifteen years ago, he has not been there for something like fifteen years. Mr. John Wortman of McMinnville owns a quarter section in section 8 and there are two or three other claims that are taken adjoining him there in section 4, but they were taken mostly for the timber, he thinks.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Mr. Maloney, how many acres of plow land, in your opinion, would be required to a 160-acre tract, taking into consideration the use of the remaining 160 acres for grazing or other agricultural purposes, how many acres do you think it would be necessary to have so a man could go on the land and earn a living from the soil there in this community?

A. Well, for those higher sections there, I don't believe a man, unless he has stock to utilize the grazing, could make a living on what land could be cultivated.

Q. Unless he had stock?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, utilizing it—if he would utilize the rest of the land for grazing purposes?

A. Well, it would be pretty hard to say."

Whereupon witness testified that he distinctly remembers some man calling upon him at his office in McMinnville, but he does not recall the date. The face of the gentleman sitting there (Mr. Laughlin) he has seen him before, he is the man who called on him there and witness executed some document in reference to the character of these lands after he had conversed with Mr. Laughlin.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. I will ask you to examine this document, Mr.

Maloney, and state whether or not that is an affidavit that you executed before Mr. Laughlin, relating to these lands on the date that is stated in the jurat to the affidavit?

A. That is my signature, and as far as I can see, it was executed.

Q. What were the circumstances under which you signed that document, Mr. Maloney?

A. Well, in what way?

Q. Just state the circumstances,—how you came to execute that, any conversation leading up to the execution of it with Mr. Laughlin?

A. Yes, sir. I dictated to him, I presume, what is written there, in substance, at least.

Q. You read the statement over before you signed it, didn't you?

A. I did, or he read it to me. I don't remember which, of course, he—

Q. Now, Mr. Maloney—

Mr. Fenton: Of course he what?

A. Either I read it, or he read it to me, me looking on.

Mr. Fenton: I object to this as a manifest effort on the part of the United States to impeach its own witness, and to impeach a man who for 20 years has been one of the leading and substantial citizens of Yamhill County, who has been for eight years its County Surveyor, and for four years its County Recorder, and for 20 years has had the respect and confidence of everybody in Yamhill County:

Mr. Rabb: The affidavit is not offered for the purpose of impeachment, but offered for the purpose of showing that the Government has been taken by surprise with the testimony of this witness, as reliance was made by the Government upon this statement made over the signature of Mr. Maloney, and has called him as a witness basing it upon that statement.

Mr. Fenton: Then the objection is further made that that is not a good reason for attempting to get into the record a statement made by this witness at the instance of the Government Inspector, upon a conversation that may have been loosely had in his office, and written out by the Government Inspector for the purpose of this case.

Q. Now, Mr. Maloney, in this affidavit, is it not stated that 'I, H. S. Maloney, a citizen of the United States, of legal age, residing at McMinnville, Oregon, where I am County Recorder of Yamhill County, being duly sworn, depose and say: I have lived in Yamhill County, Oregon, near the lands below mentioned, since the year 1877. For about 20 years of said time I lived on a farm, about half way between the towns of Sheridan and Willamina, Oregon, where I raised farm products. However, I hired most of the farm labor done, and spent most of my time in surveying near-by lands. During the remaining portion of the time since 1877, I was also engaged in surveying work, except since about three years ago, when I became County Recorder. During said period from 1877 to 1908, I served as County Surveyor and Deputy County Surveyor for a number of years.

"I have surveyed lands in Township 2 South, Ranges 5 and 6 West; Township 3 South, Ranges 5, 6, 7 and 8 West; Township 4 South, Ranges 5, 6, 7 and 8 West; and Township 5 South, Range 7 West; and have as a consequence become familiar with the lands embraced therein. In some of these townships, I have made several surveys of section and quarter section lines and of particular tracts.

"The greater portion of the even numbered sections in the townships above described has been occupied by settlers for years; and the odd numbered sections will average just as good for purposes of settlement as the even numbered sections. I am confident that, should the said odd sections revert to the Government, and be thrown open to settlement and entry, at least ninety per cent of the quarter sections embraced therein would be taken up by settlers for home building purpose. I think that said quarter sections of 160 acres each will average at least 10 acres of tillable land per quarter section, and that most of the remainder of each such quarter section could be used to advantage for grazing purposes.

"Except on the high elevations, fruit of excellent quality and quantity can be raised on said cultivable lands.

"The odd numbered sections in the townships above described have not been, and are not being now, settled upon, because it is generally understood among the people that said lands were withdrawn from sale by the Railroad Company a number of years ago, and that title from the Railroad Company cannot be secured. Consequently, I can give the names of no settlers on odd numbered sections who have made application to the Railroad Company to purchase and been refused.

H. S. MALONEY.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 29th day of February, 1912, at the Court House in McMinnville, Oregon, the affiant having previously read same.

HARRY E. LAUGHLIN,
Special Agent."

That reading is correct of that statement, isn't it?

A. As far as I know it is, yes.

Whereupon complainant offered in evidence the document referred to in the questions to the witness marked "Government's Exhibit 123." Whereupon the same was received in evidence and is hereinbefore set out and described and made a part of this Statement of the Evidence and identified as "Government's Exhibit 123."

Whereupon witness testified in answer to interrogatories on behalf of defendants that the hand writing on the back of this document is in the hand writing of Mr. Laughlin and was made at the time.

Whereupon defendants offered said writing endorsed on the back in evidence and the same was received in evidence as follows:

"Note. Mr. Maloney is engaged in a political campaign for re-election, and does not wish to be called as a witness till said campaign is over, unless it is absolutely necessary in the interests of justice." Signed "Laughlin." "Further Note. Mr. Maloney is a man of substantial character and definite opinions, and, in my opinion, would stand up well under cross examination. Accordingly, I believe he would make an excellent witness for the Government. Laughlin."

Whereupon said witness was further interrogated and testified as follows:

Q. Mr. Maloney, at the time Mr. Laughlin called on you at your office, and you executed this affidavit, you went over township plats, did you not, which you had there in your office, before you executed the affidavit or expressed an opinion?

A. He had the township plat there, which was copies of the Government plats which I had, and we may have referred to the maps on file in the office.

Q. You used your own plats? You had plats there in your office?

A. Yes, sir, have had them there all the time.

Q. Which you looked at and examined prior to executing this affidavit?

A. Oh, yes.

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified that township 2 south, ranges 3 and 4 west, is nearly all in the old settled part of Yamhill County, and he thinks that the east half of townships 2, 3, 5 and 6 are in the old settled part of that county, he is not sure. Township 5, ranges 6 and 7 west is in the old settled part of the county around Sheridan and Willamina. He does not own any place now near Willamina, the place where he farmed was on the William McClure donation land claim about midway between Sheridan and Willamina, in the old settled part of the county. The claim of John Wortman was in section 8, township 4 south, range 6 west. John Wortman is cashier and president of the First National Bank of McMinnville. He is a banker at McMinnville and is considered a capitalist in that county. He purchased that quarter section from McCormack, who took it as a homestead. He does not know what Wortman purchased it for, but presumes it was more for a summer resort than anything else. It has very little green timber on it, he does not think he bought it to make a home, he has a home and resides in McMinnville. A. S. Bible referred to by him is dead, he was a big cattle man in Yamhill county for a number of years, lived at Sheridan and pastured his cattle in the foothills and mountains back of Sheridan in these townships referred to by him. This memorandum on the back of Government's Exhibit 123 that speaks about his not desiring to be called in this case until after the election, unless it was absolutely necessary in the interests of justice, was his own suggestion made to Mr. Laughlin. He was running at that time for the office of County Recorder, his competitor was Dr. J. H. Nelson, Holt Nelson of McMinnville, an old pioneer popular young man of Yamhill County and a republican, and witness is running on the democratic ticket. That county is republican by 1600 and something, according to the registration. He was elected once before County Recorder and three or four times County Surveyor and always elected on the democratic ticket and was a candidate on the democratic ticket yesterday but does not know whether he is elected or not. He probably got a majority of all the votes around where people know him at Sheridan. He came from Tennessee to Yamhill County, was born in Tennessee and had lived in Yamhill County since 1877. He first came there in 1873, but did not permanently settle until 1877.

Whereupon, on re-direct examination, witness testified that the registration of Yamhill County showed 1600 republican majority, the registration he is speaking of, the republican registration was 2,545 and the democratic 993, these are the exact figures taken from the clerk's office yesterday. He has not talked one word to any of the attorneys for the Railroad Company, either the Southern Pacific Company or the Oregon and California Railroad Company about his testimony in this case. He has been acquainted with Mr. Fenton for a number of years and Mr. Frank W. Fenton is the local attorney at McMinnville. He has never mentioned the matter to Mr. Fenton or he to the witness or the witness to him.

Whereupon, on re-cross examination, witness testified that he never had had any conversation with Mr. Fenton about this case or about anything else since he came to Portland as a witness here, and he has never talked with F. W. Fenton at McMinnville about this case, directly or indirectly, never even mentioned it to either one. He talked a little here, since he came down with Mr. Foster, Mr. Steward and Mr. Switzer. Mr. Foster is one of the witnesses that is to be called in the case, referring to Harrison Foster, F. J. Steward and J. M. Switzer, who were subpoenaed and came with him from Yamhill County and who are his old acquaintances and are witnesses for complainant, all of them. He did not come with them, they came yesterday and he came this morning. He never talked over with them what his testimony should be. He did not come down with them yesterday and he had no conversation as to what their testimony would be at all. They were just simply trying to estimate a little of what per cent. That is a problem that they consider as mere guess work as to what per cent and that was the principal talk, that is to say, he and these gentlemen have since they came here talked with each other about what per cent they thought would be, or might be, agricultural, if the timber was taken off, but they have not talked with anyone representing either of the companies or any of these defendants in respect to what his testimony should be or was.

Whereupon H. SHELTON, called as a witness on behalf of complainant being duly sworn testified that he is sixty-nine years old and lives six miles above Scio in section 7, township 10 south, range 1 east in Linn County, Oregon, and has lived there all his life, pretty nearly. They emigrated to Oregon in 1847 and he has been living there and was raised on the place, it has been sixty-five years ago, he was four years old when he came there, that was his father's place, a donation land claim of 640 acres, and he has been engaged in farming as his occupation all his life. He raises hay, oats and wheat and some stock. In its original state his father's donation land claim was mostly bottom land, there was some little on the hill side, but not much. It was not timber, only there were oak grubs on it and since they had moved there, settled there, there is second growth timber on some of it, that is, what has not been cut off. He is acquainted with the territory east of Scio. He has been out east of Scio, say ten miles each way or more. He notices on "Defendants' Exhibit 259" that Thomas Creek is marked on this map and Crabtree Creek and Crabtree, the post office, the town of Crabtree, and also Latham, Larwood and Jordan are marked on this map. He is acquainted in section 19 of the unsold lands of the Railroad Company which is south from where he lives, in sections 19 and 29, he has been over them, these sections are in township 10 south, range 1 east. There is a portion of section 19 which a man bought some, and there is fruit growing on it. He bought forty acres there in the northeast part of section 19. Some of section 19 has a good deal of timber on it, and there is some of it kind of open glades. He thinks that probably seventy-five per cent could be plowed after the timber is removed or after the land is cleared. Section 29 in township 10 south, range 1 east, has 560 acres of railroad land and is better than section 19. He has a general acquaintance with these lands shown in green markings for ten miles from where he lives in section 7 in township 10 south, range 1 east. Thomas Creek goes through that section, and according to the markings of this map that would extend over into range 2, township 10 south, range 2 east. Section 29 is as far south as he has been. He has been quite a ways northeast up towards the Santiam river, towards the railroad, up towards the north fork of the Santiam River, up that way. He used to hunt quite a bit up in there and he is acquainted with the lands as far up as the north fork of the Santiam. He has been over the land hunting, sufficiently to give him a general knowledge of the lay of the land and the soil a good deal and of the timber growths, etc. Some of it is suitable for farming and some of it has mostly timber on it. He would think there would be seventy-five per cent of this area with which he is acquainted, containing the railroad lands, take it all over so far as he has been over it and examined it and hunted over it, that could be cultivated, if it is cleared. He does not know if that percentage generally would be carried out as to each 160-acre tract. If it was divided into 160-acre tracts, it would not, hardly on all of it, some of it there is rocky and steep and it could not be cultivated. It is pretty good for grazing, there have been a good many who had stock there that run on the mountains there all the year round, here in the early days, but now days they do not allow them to run out. Speaking generally of all the townships, if the ty, Oregon, and has lived there all his life, pretty nearly. They emigrated to Oregon in 1847 and he has been living there and was raised on the place, it has been sixty-five years ago, he was four years old when he came there, that was his father's place, a donation land claim of 640 acres, and he has been engaged in farming as his occupation all his life. south, range 1 east, has 560 acres of railroad land and is better than section 19. He has a general acquaintance with these lands shown in green markings for ten miles from where he lives in section 7 in township 10 south, range 1 east. Thomas Creek goes through that section, and according to the markings of this map that would extend over into range 2, township 10 south, range 2 east. Section 29 is as far south as he has been. Speaking generally of all the townships, if the land were divided into 160-acre tracts there would be, generally, this percentage of plow land in each 160-acre tract. There would be sections perhaps that none of the land could be plowed. The lands are generally timbered in this country. Some places there are kind of open glades in it where there is no timber and then there are others that have thick heavy timber.

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified that his father's donation land claim was in sections 6 and 7, and where witness lives was in section 7. He lives on the Hammond Shelton donation land claim, part of his father's place. His father settled there in 1847, crossed the plains and he has lived there from his boyhood, from the time he was four years old up to the present time and has seen that country grow and develop and the lands settle and change hands. These unsold railroad lands that he has hunted over he supposes that for twenty years after 1866 they had no real value, not particularly.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. When did they begin to have a value, as you remember it? About how long ago and for what purpose did they have a value? What first started the inquiry among them?

A. Well, it was for the timber.

Q. When did that first arise?

A. Well, that has been about, let's see, that must have been about ten years ago.

Q. Before that, these lands were hardly worth paying taxes on, were they?

A. No. They didn't value them anything. You see they were just in the woods that away.

Q. In the mountains, like?

A. In the mountains, yes.

Q. And away from any settlements?

A. Yes, it was away from the settlement.

Q. And are they not pretty rough?

A. Well, some of them is tolerably rough and some aint.

Q. They are mainly covered with reasonably good saw timber?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. And that in the last ten years has had a market value?

A. Yes.

Q. There have been some homesteads up in that country taken for the timber, on the even sections, haven't there?

A. Yes.

Q. And those homesteads after they were taken and proved up, have been sold to timber people?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are chiefly valuable, then, for the timber that is on them?

A. Well, at the present time, but if the timber was off, why, they would be fairly good for some——

Q. They could be plowed?

A. Yes, some of them, yes.

Q. But the chief value at the present time is for their timber?

A. Yes, at the present.

Q. And has been for the last ten years?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what a good quarter section of timber up in that vicinity can be sold for now, about?

A. Well, I don't know what they could be sold at now. There is one of my neighbors there had a quarter section up there, and he got $5,000 for it.

Q. Was that a homestead?

A. Well, he took it up as a homestead, and then he commuted on it, and paid out in 14 months.

Q. He never lived on it, then?

A. Well, he stayed there awhile on it.

Q. Just stayed a night or two?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. And then commuted and got a patent?

A. Yes.

Q. And then as soon as he got the patent, why, he sold it to the timber people?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that done pretty generally around there to get these timber lands?

A. Well, I think that was about the way.

Q. The way it was done?

A. Yes, I think so, to the best of my knowledge.

Whereupon on re-direct examination witness testified as follows: "Q. Well, Mr. Shelton, this man that you spoke of, that commuted on this claim never cultivated or really established or maintained a home out there? A. Well, he put out some trees out there, some fruit trees and planted some potatoes." His name was Frost and there was some more who took claims the same time right in the same locality. He does not know whether they made nothing more than a pretense of complying with the law, he could not tell about that part of it now, they left their homesteads as soon as they had commuted and sold their claims. The land is chiefly valuable for its timber in its present condition with the timber standing. The timber would have to be removed in order to plow the land, that is the way. The land, of course, without removing the timber would be of no use for tillage. There is hazel brush and cherry and such as that in these open places. These areas could be cleared at very small cost compared to what the timber lands would cost, it would be cheaper. It is a fact that the lands in this community have been largely taken and are owned under this grant and by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company which filed scrip on a large portion of the even numbered sections, before the survey was made, there was quite a bit of that. The homesteaders in that area were comparatively few, there were not so very many.

Whereupon, on re-cross examination, witness testified that he rather thinks it would cost more to clear this timber land and put it in cultivation than it would to go down in the valley and buy cleared land. Whereupon, on re-direct examination, witness testified that if a man had little means he could not get land in the valley for $2.50 an acre. As a poor man's proposition the valley lands would have to be excluded.

Whereupon W. H. YOUNG, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, testified that he is forty-seven years old, resides about three-quarters of a mile below Scio in Linn County, Oregon, and has lived in that county about thirty-two years. He is a farmer and has been engaged in that business upwards of twenty years, and always in Linn County. His farm is in township 10 south, range 1 west, and is part of section 18. He had another place of forty acres right below that which he farmed, in township 10 south, range 2 west. He was engaged in the cultivation of land there, he grubbed out some, it was nothing but a stump patch and tree, and he got that up, and put it into oats, that was the first place that he was on. There is eighty-five acres on the place that he has now, bottom land, and the other land was about twenty-five acres on the bottom and fifteen acres on the hill. That bottom land that he farms now did not contain any growth of timber, that has been under cultivation a good many years, it was the old donation land claim of George Thomas. He has about forty acres in cultivation where he lives now, and he is making his living from this land which he is farming. He is a married man but has no children, he has had a boy with him whom he took to raise, he has had him for about ten or fifteen years. He is acquainted with farming conditions generally in Linn County. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259," at Crabtree Creek, pointing to the section above Larwood, is where they go into the mountain. He is acquainted right in about Thomas Creek, which is on the eastern place limits of the grant as shown by this map, the twenty mile limit. He is acquainted with the lands west of there, and between Thomas Creek and Crabtree, between those two creeks in there. He is acquainted in through that area between Thomas Creek and Crabtree Creek, west of the line, the twenty-mile limit marked on this plat. He went over that territory for the purpose of hunting. He has been in township 10 south, range 1 east, south of Jordan, a branch of Thomas Creek runs down there through that country. He is acquainted with the formation of this entire area between Crabtree and Thomas Creeks and the east line of the place limits, and the general formation there and the growths that are there. He would think, that between 65 and 75 per cent of that land could be rendered suitable to cultivation by removing such growth as is on it, clearing the land. This territory is not all of it covered with timber. Some of it is heavy timber, and some is in the deadenings, and some is vine maple flats. When he first started in there in hunting in this area, he supposes it has been over twenty-five years ago and this is the first year he has missed hunting there for fifteen or eighteen years, he has covered that entire ground there.

Whereupon, upon cross-examination, witness testified that the place that he owns there is a part of the donation land claim of George Thomas, who settled on Thomas Creek, but he does not know whether the creek is named after him. His place is west of Scio a half or three-quarters of a mile. The way they have to go to these timber lands, up Crabtree Creek from Scio, where he has hunted over them, takes them till they get to their camp, twenty-five miles, the way they travel by the trails. It would be a little less on a straight line, but to their camp where they hunt, that is up in the mountains. That country is pretty well timbered, in the main. He has been up Thomas Creek from Scio something over thirty miles or more, and that is in the timbered country. This little place on this map referred to is called Larwood. That is not the beginning of the mountains. The mountain starts about a mile or two miles from Larwood where they started, and these mountains do not get pretty steep after that, but just a kind of gradual grade down there—benches. He thinks the survey for their camp is about eighteen hundred feet high. This land up in there is covered pretty well with saw timber, as a class. He has lived there in the vicinity of Scio for about thirty-two years. The unsold lands of the railroad company for the first twenty years after 1866 down to 1886, or about 1890, were considered worth two dollars and a half an acre, what they were figuring it on. They were not counted worth very much. It is only in the last eight or ten years, since the land became valuable for timber, that these lands have been looking up and had a market value.

Q. Do you remember about when timber first became to be an object and people would go out and get claims under the Timber and Stone Act, and go out and get homesteads in those mountains east of Scio? About when was that?

A. I don't think it is over ten or twelve years ago.

Q. A good many people went out there and took homesteads and got their title, and sold to timber people, didn't they?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a good many people took up quarter sections under the Timber and Stone Act where they did not have to live on it at all?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then they have sold that to timber people?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the same kind of land as these railroad lands, only they are a little better?

A. Well, I don't know. It is just about a standoff between them.

Q. About the same. Well, then, these railroad lands as they go down towards the foothills, have been on the market until the last seven or eight years? They were on the market as far back as you recollect nearly, haven't they been?

A. Well, I don't know anything about that. I never thought much about that.

Q. If there were any railroad lands down around Scio, and in that section of country, little fractions here and there, they have long since been bought up by farmers, haven't they?

A. Yes, all I know of them.

Q. Now, this map shows that there are no railroad lands near Scio until you get about four miles east of Scio, then there are small fractions that the company still appears to own, between Crabtree and Thomas Creek. Is that because it was hill land or timbered land that was not taken under the Donation Law or how did that happen?

A. I couldn't say how that would happen.

Whereupon witness testified that most of the land around Scio proper was taken under the donation land claim law, and that is one of the oldest parts of Linn County, they settled part of the forks of the Santiam. He never took a homestead up there. His only knowledge of these unsold railroad lands there in the mountains, is, that he has hunted over them about once a year ever since he has been big enough to go hunting, and that is the way he got the knowledge that he has of these lands, by going over them as a hunter. He has hunted, he has made as high as five trips in the mountains, getting deer, elk very seldom. That country up there is not a wild country. He has had deer right down two years ago, right close to a few miles of his home. In the summer time, in August, the deer come down sometimes and follow the streams, but that is unusual in late years. This timber land up there is a long ways from the Three Sisters. He could not say how far from Mt. Jefferson, which is a snow peak in the Cascade Range and is nearer than the Three Sisters. Mt. Jefferson is on the headwaters of the McKenzie, the Three Sisters are further south.

Whereupon, upon re-direct examination, witness testified that Mt. Jefferson is about thirty miles on an air line from the western boundary of the indemnity limits of this grant, and would be about forty or fifty miles from any of this land at least. That is what they always count, between fifty and sixty miles, that is the way they always guessed it in the mountains, from the summit where their cabin is on the mountains. It is a fact that the greater portions of the even numbered sections in this area were taken by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company scrip prior to survey, and there were comparatively few homesteads ever filed in this timbered country. The settlers, as they came into this country, settled first on the creeks and river bottoms, and the settlers as they have come into the country have pushed back into the foothills and the mountains. In the last fifteen or twenty years the demand for lands for settlement and homestead purposes, has increased in that community. They have men in their country they cannot rent a farm for. Farmers themselves have to sell their stock for they cannot get lands to run the stock on. The lands in this area, in the even numbered sections, have been taken up practically since survey largely by scrip locations, and that has prevented settlement on the even numbered sections by persons seeking to farm to obtain farming lands.

Q. What has been the effect of the railroad company's failure to fulfill the conditions of this grant, and sell the land to actual settlers in 160 acre tracts at $2.50 an acre? What has been the effect in that community, in your opinion?

A. What effect has that had?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, it has had the effect to keep people to taking a homestead.

Q. Has it retarded the settlement of lands?

A. Well, yes.

Whereupon, upon re-cross examination, witness testified that he does not know why the people did not buy these lands at two dollars and a half an acre twenty years ago. Sometimes a man is so that he has not got means to buy them. He never gave it a thought as to whether these timber lands twenty years ago were worth anything, he knows that the whole timbered country up there twenty years ago was considered waste land, and in some parts of that timbered land it would cost more to clear the land than one can buy valley land for.

Whereupon, upon re-direct examination, witness testified that a man of small means would have some difficulty in buying valley land at two dollars and a half an acre, and especially in their country. It is a fact that other lands, other than timber lands, were open to homestead entry twenty years ago, and people were not forced into the timber sections, and that is the reason they did not take that land. He has never known of the railroad company offering any of this land in this area at two dollars and a half an acre.

Whereupon, upon re-cross examination, witness testified that he never tried to buy any of it at two dollars and a half an acre, but he had a friend who did try it, in the last four or five years, under that act.

Q. He wanted to buy a good timber quarter, didn't he?

A. I couldn't tell you what he wanted to buy. He said he tendered the money, and they wouldn't take it. That is all.

Whereupon witness testified that his friend did not tell him where this quarter section was, but it had to be up in the timber, there was no other, it had to be up in the timber.

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.

Q. The land wouldn't necessarily be valuable timber land that a man would take in this area, Mr. Young?

A. Well, the way it is standing, it would be more valuable for the timber, if you take the timber off.

Q. You would have to clear the land before you could cultivate it?

A. You would have to clear the land before you could cultivate it, yes.

Q. Well, this friend didn't get the land?

A. No, sir.

Whereupon N. I. MORRISON, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he is fifty years old, and resides in Scio, Linn County, Oregon, and has resided in Linn County about twenty years. He had been engaged in farming to a considerable extent in Linn County, in section 24, township 10 south, range 1 east, where he owns land. He is not now engaged in farming, but left his farm four years ago next February. He had a homestead there of one hundred and sixty acres which he had taken up and upon which he had lived thirteen years. The land was brush and timber when he took it up. He was a man of family when he took his homestead, and his family resided with him on the homestead during his residence there, and he earned a living for himself and family from the homestead. He had about fifteen acres under plow, and a few acres cleared up ready for plow, and an orchard set out that had never been plowed. He raised mostly grain hay, oat hay, and raised no wheat—nothing except what he raised mixed, oats and wheat mixed, for hay, he never saw anything better than he raised there, he raised vetch and things of that kind. He raised 26½ big loads of vetch and oats off of four and a half acres. That is very productive soil and he raised all kinds of vegetables, potatoes, beets, cabbage and squashes, everything. That soil produces good vegetables. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259," he is acquainted with all of township 10 south, range 1 east, township 10 south, ranges 2 and 3 east, and the north half of township 11 south, ranges 1, 2 and 3 east. His homestead was located in section 24, township 10 south, range 1 east, on the east side, next to the township line, between ranges 1 and 2 east. There are railroad lands on all sides of him and those lands were better than his homestead, that is, he means for agricultural purpose or homestead purposes. He has run lines in this area with which he is acquainted, and in trying to help people find land in there, and has hunted over practically all of it, packed in there for cruisers—all over it—packed three months, every day, at one stretch, and is thoroughly familiar with the land and its formations and soil conditions. In his opinion, from his experience in farming in this vicinity, he would think probably in the neighborhood of 70 to 75 per cent of that land could be rendered suitable for cultivation after clearing the land of any timber or brush that might be upon it. These lands would average the same if divided into one hundred and sixty acre tracts, that is, that percentage of plow lands would hold good as to each hundred and sixty acre tract. He knows some railroad sections that nearly every foot of it could be plowed. There is section 31, township 10 south, range 3 east—the railroad company does not own that now, that was sold to Green & Avery Timber Company. The railroad company has sold large areas of land there to big companies.

Q. Mr. Morrison, from your experience as a homesteader, what would you say as to the suitableness of these railroad lands for homesteading purposes, that is, going on it and taking up a homestead, and living on it, making a living on it, as you have done on your homestead?

A. I would not be afraid to tackle it on pretty near any of them. Of course, some would make a failure of it probably anywhere.

Q. In your opinion, Mr. Morrison, what has been the effect of the failure of the railroad company to sell this land to actual settlers at $2.50 an acre in 160 acre tracts, that is, the effect upon the community there.

Mr. Fenton: I object to that as assuming that the company has failed to comply with the terms of the grant in any particular, and as incompetent.

A. Well, it retarded the settlement. I know of parties that wanted to get land that did not have any timber on it, for to make a home out of—land adjoining me, and they would not sell it, would not put a price on it.

Mr. Fenton: That is recently?

A. That was seven or eight years ago.

Q. The lands, then, are not all covered with timber?

A. No, not all of it.

Q. This party that you spoke of, they wanted that for agricultural purposes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the railroad company refused to sell to to them?

A. Yes, sir. The party lives here in Portland.

Q. Did they make a tender, do you know, to the company?

A. No, no. They just wrote to them and wanted to know what the price was, and they wrote back and told them that it was out of the market.

Whereupon, upon cross-examination, witness testified that the transaction last referred to was about seven or eight years ago. His homestead is in section 24, township 10 south, range 1 east, and about twelve or thirteen miles from Scio. He is on a fork of Thomas Creek called Blue Creek, about five miles from the mouth of Blue Creek. He kept stock on this homestead and used the grain, vetch and oat hay that he raised to feed his stock. When he first started in, he had only one cow, but he got into the stock business, more or less, as he could get it, got stock, goats, sheep and cattle. He enclosed all of his homestead excepting about a quarter of a mile on one side of it, which he left open, that was back on section 19, a piece of railroad land, range, and he left that so his stock could range out over the railroad lands as far as they wanted to. He never had as many as forty or fifty head of cattle during the time he was there. He had about eighteen or twenty head, he thinks that was the most cattle that he had. He sold some each year after he got started. He could not tell exactly the most money he received in one year for sales of his beef cattle or calves. Probably the most cattle he sold at any one time was about one hundred and ninety dollars' worth, he probably sold more than that in one year. He only raised hogs, enough for his own use. He kept about ninety head of goats, and confined them to a particular pasture. The goats could run anywhere on the west half of his place, they would not go out through this opening, this quarter-mile back, there was a fence across there, he had it fenced through the center. He had 90 or 100 acres pasture, and probably five acres of this ninety or a hundred acres cleared up, ready for the plow, but it was never plowed, and probably 15 acres under plow in the whole quarter section. He still owns his place. There is saw timber there on his place, about two million feet, worth from seventy-five cents to a dollar a thousand. The majority of this railroad land that he had been over, that he had hunted over, and through which he had made some surveys, and into which he had packed for cruisers' supplies, is pretty well covered with saw timber. These cruisers were not cruisers of these mill companies or railroad cruisers, they were just timber cruisers or companies that made a business of cruising tracts of land in order to find out how much timber certain landholders had in order to sell it to other buyers. He was not engaged in the business of locating people on timber lands in that section, not actually in the business. He helped them to locate, showed them places and the like of that, but he never asked anything for it. He helped people who wanted to find a timber quarter, helped them to locate and find the quarter. The demand for these timber lands became rather active about ten years ago, something like that. For many years before that, these timber lands were not sought after very much.

Q. Don't you know that for twenty years after 1870, say down to 1890, these timber lands of the railroad company and these unsold lands were practically valueless so far as any demand was concerned? Don't you know that to be a fact?

A. Well, yes, but then if I had had money, I would have been pretty apt to have bought some of it.

Q. Yes, you would have bought on anticipating that you could sell it, if you could buy it, at, say $2.50 an acre, you could have let it lie there until it became worth something?

A. I wanted to buy, did buy some railroad land. I wanted to buy more and they would not sell it.

He bought railroad land in sections 25 and 13, township 10 south, range 1 east, forty acres in each one of them. He contracted for forty acres in section 25 in 1901 and paid two dollars and a half an acre for it. He bought a contract for the other forty in section 25, that was all. He wanted to get some more land next to that in section 19, and in 25, and they would not sell it to him, and he knew a party who had a contract on a piece of railroad land in section 13, and he bought his contract and paid four dollars and a half an acre. This man contracted it about the same time that he did, about eleven years ago, about 1901. The land that he bought for two dollars and a half an acre did not have any timber on it, it was covered with brush, vine maple mostly, but the soil was A No. 1. It was adjoining him, and that was the reason that he wanted it. The other tract had timber on it, probably about 800,000 feet, that is, on the forty acres. He sold that and got $1150 for it. He sold it partly to timber people, that is they hold a little timber there adjoining it. It was sold for the timber, that is what they bought it for, he expects.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, Mr. Morrison, whatever homesteads were taken up in that timbered country within the last eight or ten years have been chiefly taken on timber quarters, haven't they?

A. Not all of it.

Q. I know, but the main ones have been taken, the best timber quarters that they could find?

A. Well, there is a good many homesteads taken in there, or several of them, not a good many that I advised them to go back and take a piece of timber land, but they said they had been raised there all their life, and they did not think it would ever be worth anything, and so they took up a piece of brush land in preference to the timber.

Q. You advised them to take the timber?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under the Homestead Act, you thought that would be worth more money?

A. Well, I knew it would.

He knows of a section of timber land in that country for which they have refused sixty thousand dollars, that is section 28, township 10 south, range 2 east. It was to be practically a cash purchase, he cannot tell who owns it now. It was not taken under the Timber and Stone Act. He does not know the people, they were people that just came in there and took it for the timber, and it is still in the hands of the first takers, he is not positive though, but thinks it is. That section has never been cruised by timber cruisers, but it has probably sixty million feet on it, some of it is fir and some hemlock, this piece of land, that timber section, is about eighteen miles, something like that, east of Scio. Land around Scio—five or six miles from Scio—open land, is being sold in that old settled part of the country, without improvements, farming land, at one hundred dollars an acre. Nothing that is tillable, within five or six miles of Scio, can be bought for fifty dollars an acre. To buy any cleared land within five or six miles away from Scio, away from the influence of the town and in the country, one would have to pay as much as a hundred dollars an acre, or if one gets out fifteen miles east of Scio, he would have to pay one hundred dollars an acre, and down towards Albany Prairie, down in that direction, it is worth probably more than that down there. Land has been going up for several years, kept going up. He knew of people applying to purchase these timber lands up there from the railroad company under this Act of Congress, and offering to pay two dollars and a half an acre, on these printed blanks that were circulated through the country there about five or six years ago. He does not know whether there were any parties from Scio or not who did this. There were a good many of these people who were strangers to him. They came there and put up a notice on a piece of his land, wanted to build a cabin there, on a piece of railroad land that he bought, and he told them that he guessed not, it was not a piece of timber land that he had bought, there was no timber on it, they put up a notice on it, and they put up a notice on a quarter section that he had applied for, they didn't build any cabin on there. The railroad company told them, as he understood it, that they would not allow them to build there, told them if they built there they would have them arrested for trespass and for malicious destruction of property, or something like that. He was not going to allow them to build a cabin and go into possession of his land if he could help it. Aside from that particular instance, these notices were posted all through that timbered country on these quarter sections. Some parties went in there and started cabins, and then they served notice on them not to cut any more timber, not to cut anything to build their cabins out of. He does not know as there were dozens of these people, but there were a few there that he saw personally, and they claimed they were going on there, but they did not. They posted their notices just the same. Some of the places where these notices were posted had good timber, and some of them not so good, and some of them had no timber on. It would be a pretty hard matter to find a quarter but what had a little timber on anyway. It is a timbered country. These people found out what quarter section to get—there were locators that located them around just the same as they did on the government land, etc. People did not know where the section lines were, or section corners, or anything, and they would hire someone to go and show them where a certain piece of land was, and they would pay the locators a fee for that service. He thinks the highest he remembers they had to pay was about twenty-five dollars. He never heard of their paying as much as two hundred dollars if a man found a good timber quarter. They might have done so in some other localities—he does not know anything about it—but what they located in there, the parties charged them twenty-five dollars. One of these locators lived around Scio, but did not make a business of it. He made a business out there for a while, a short time. He knows of a lot of these lands being taken up under the Timber and Stone Act. These lands would be pretty good lands if the timber was off, but they were timber lands. These people that took these lands under the Timber and Stone Act did not go out there and make farms of them, he has an idea that a good many of them never saw the land. He supposes that after they got the patents they sold the land to the timber companies probably, a good many of them. He knows that most of that land has gone into the hands of timber companies, and he does not know of any one tract any larger than that big section that is in the original hands, he knows of several smaller tracts that are owned by the original owners under the Timber and Stone Act.

Whereupon, upon re-direct examination, witness testified that it is a fact that a good deal of the even sections were located there by Northern Pacific scrip, which could be filed on unsurveyed land, in townships 11 and 12, ranges 2 and 3 east. The Northern Pacific company would scrip the even sections, and the Oregon & California Railroad Company owned the odd sections, so there wasn't very much room for either the homesteader or the Timber and Stone entryman. The land around that $60,000 section of which he spoke is all about the same right in there for several sections, that is in township 10 south, range 2 east. The timber there is far above the average of this general area. There are two or three sections in there where there is not very much difference, but then take the surrounding country, it is probably a little above the average right in that locality, in township 10 south, range 2 east, and as one gets down towards the valley, the timber is less. Practically all of the government lands have been taken up in this country, and if a man desired to obtain land for homestead purposes, the last ten or fifteen years, he was compelled to go into the timbered area, like he was, to get a homestead.

Whereupon C. E. CLARK, called as a witness on behalf of complainant being duly sworn testified that he lives in section 21, township 11 south, range 1 east and has lived in that section ever since 1872. His father came there when he was a boy. His father formerly lived in the State of California and moved north into that country. Witness was one of thirteen children. His father had formerly been a farmer in California and came to Oregon in 1872 and brought him along with the family. He settled just below that land, bought about 215 acres, his old place, from a man by the name of Peter Zell where he lived. He did not die there on that place but he died about four years ago on the place where they are living. He lived there all this time. He and his father were ranching and sawmilling. His father got an old sawmill with the place when he bought it and they ran that. The sawmill was on the old place that his father bought. It was rather a small sawmill. There are different qualities of soil there. The upland is of a reddish cast, the bottom land is rich, some of it sandy loam, some of it black soil. One can raise anything planted and this applies to both kinds of soil. It is not very rough in there, just a gradual slope from the creek. He is forty-nine years old and has had no business experience excepting as a farmer, nothing any more than sawmilling there. He thinks that the soil is first-class.

They raise good fruit, good peaches. He has raised sugar corn and all such stuff as that, everything they plant there grows well. The soil is an average depth, he does not know that he could tell just exactly the depth of it. There is quite a bit of timber in that country there. The timber on their place they cut it, sawed it up into lumber, most of it. There is some little timber there yet. He thinks timber grows on good soil, it would not grow big on poor soil. Nothing has been logged off there in that country except what they had on their own lands. There has nothing been cut off the railroad lands back there. They sawed the saw timber out and the balance of what they had cleared up they rolled the timber together and burned and put the land into cultivation. He has about fifteen acres on his place that is under the plow and probably that much ready to plow that is not broke up yet. They had a home market there for their lumber from people living near by. He does not know as he could tell by the sections what area his knowledge extends to, but he is well acquainted with that country between Crabtree and Thomas Creeks and on both sides of Crabtree, some places over as far as the Santiam, and he supposes the area of a couple of townships. He has been all over that country, has seen the different farmers there using the soil and what they raise on it and that extends to townships 11 and 12, ranges 1 and 2 east. Crabtree runs right through townships 11 and 12. Crabtree Creek is northeast of Lacomb. He thinks that these unsold railroad lands involved in this suit are susceptible to use by the settler. A man could go in and subject it to settlement and make a home of it and they would have been sold years ago if they had not taken them out of the market. He knows the railroad lands, knows it all, knows the sections as they come that way but could not call to mind just their lines and knows the areas and the character of the land. Fruits of all kinds grow well on that land, also vegetables of all kinds, wheat and oats and they raise nice kale, corn, cabbage and anything pretty nearly that one plants on it will grow. He never has tried sweet potatoes, but he believes he has ground that will grow them. He put out 130 peach trees there last spring and they are as fine a growth as he ever saw. Everybody that has looked at them say they are nice. Out of the 130 he only lost two trees. The railroad company will not sell its land in that vicinity, they do not sell it, the effect of that is to stop the immigration in there and the settlement. They do not have as good schools in there as they would if it was all settled up thickly, if it was all into homes, people all living there they would have plenty of children to have good schools and would have better roads.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. What I want to ask you is, as a practical settler in that country yourself, whether the method that has been pursued by the railroad company has promoted or retarded the settlement and development of that country?

A. Why, certainly it has. I think that land would have all been sold to settlers if they could have bought it. It would all have been settled up.

Q. Do you know of any reason why the railroad company could not have disposed of that land to settlers?

A. No. I don't know why they took it out of the market.

Q. Is it good land for settlement?

A. I think so. We have lands settled up there just like it, and some of it has been bought from the railroad.

Q. I asked you once before whether it was rough land or not, but in order to make your testimony definite, I will ask you what proportion of the land in that vicinity with which you are acquainted could be plowed, cultivated.

A. That is, after the timber is all off it?

Q. Yes.

A. Oh, you take the majority of it—of course, there are some sections, probably would be, where there were rough bluffs, or something like that, that could not be plowed, but then a majority of land up there—oh, I would say 40 to 60 per cent of it could be all plowed. There might be some hillside might be a little steep, but they have got to be pretty steep if they don't use them for something on a ranch.

Q. How is it as to that land? Is the general condition of climate and moisture favorable or unfavorable?

A. O, I think it is favorable. We never had to irrigate there. Now, I have a brother-in-law from Pendleton down, he was there last year, and the year before both, and he told me I ought to irrigate, I had such a good chance there. I told him I didn't think we needed it. He was out one day right in the middle of the summer, scratched down, he said, three-quarters of an inch, and found we would get the moisture. He said we didn't need the irrigation. But then it might be good, for all I know, to irrigate.

Q. That is the usual experience that settlers always have, that somebody that doesn't know anything about it will generally give advice, isn't it, Mr. Clark?

A. Yes. In their country they have to irrigate, and here we don't. And we most generally have to have a drain somewhere to get rid of that moisture.

Q. Well, now, Mr. Clark, I will ask you one more general question, and that is this: some witnesses for the railroad company have testified that in their judgment, none of these railroad lands that are unsold and are involved in this suit, can be used for the purpose of settlement and making homes, cultivating, sustaining a settler and his family who lives on the lands. Now, without asking you to in any way reflect upon the judgment of those men, I will ask you whether you agree with them or not?

A. No, sir. I think we have got lands up there that is far better lands than between here and home—between here and Albany. It is better land than some you are selling along here for $400 and $500 an acre. It is in the railroad hands, and they don't use it themselves, nor they don't allow anybody else to.

Q. How does that land compare with the lands in the valley?

A. Well I am speaking about this valley land along here. I was up here to Fairview, along up there, and they said there were lands there you couldn't buy for $400 or $500 an acre.

Mr. Fenton: Fairview, east of town here?

A. Yes, east of town. Those little hills along there, we have better lands up there that is not in use at all.

Q. Where do you live now?

A. I live up on the same place in Linn County.

Q. The same place we have been speaking about?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it a nice pleasant home?

A. We think so.

Q. You are not looking for a trade of homes?

A. No, sir?

Q. Are there other just as good homes there?

A. I think so.

Q. In these railroad lands?

A. Yes, I think so.

Whereupon, on cross-examination, witness testified that he took a homestead in section 22, township 11 south, range 2 east about six miles from where he now lives and he must have taken that ten or twelve years ago, and lived on it during the time that he proved up. He lived on it fourteen months and then commuted. He took his family on to that place.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Did you stay there continuously, or did you go away to work afterwards?

A. Oh, I had to make a living. We got broke up in the mill business, and I just took up a homestead there to get a little start again.

Q. How long did you take your family and live practically on the homestead?

A. Oh, I could not tell as to that.

Q. Well, you built a cabin on it, did you?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you go up there in the summer time?

A. We had a cabin there for ourselves, and we had a cabin for our horses, an outbuilding.

Q. How much did you clear on that homestead?

A. Oh, we just put in a little garden.

Q. How much garden did you put in?

A. Oh, I don't know.

Q. About as big as this room?

A. Just about as big as this room. And then we set out some fruit trees there.

Q. How many friut trees did you set out?

A. Oh, there must have been a dozen or such a matter.

Q. Apple trees, I suppose?

A. Apple trees and plums.

Q. Did you fence the improvements?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, are those improvements occupied now?

A. No, sir, I don't think so.

Q. And the trees have gone to waste, have they?

A. Oh, yes. Brush growed up around them, and smothered them out.

Q. Did you sell the claim?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you sell it with reference to the time you got your patent?

A. Well, I don't remember. It was quite awhile after.

Q. Whom did you sell to?

A. Wright, Blodgett & Company.

Q. That is a big timber concern in Michigan?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you get for your quarter section, if it is a fair question.

A. $2,000.

Q. What did you pay to enter it—$2.50 or $1.25?

A. $2.50.

Q. You got 160 acres, did you?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon witness testified that he did not own his present place during the time he was taking his homestead, he did not own any land during that time. He then went back to the old sawmill place and bought this place here. His father's place was turned over to an assignee and he bought it at an assignee's sale. He has about fifteen acres on this place in section 21, township 11 south, range 1 east, under the plow and about that much ready to plow, that was the place that he bought in at an assignee's sale, it was a place that his father never owned, his father owned the place just below. His father did not take his place up as a homestead, that place just below, but bought it from a man by the name of Zell. It was the Joseph Elkins claim, he thinks it was a homestead. He thinks there was only 160 acres, but did not think they took donation claims under that. Elkins put up a mill there, a little mill for someone, and the man went off to the mines and was gone three years and he thought he would not get his pay so Elkins jumped his claim and took it. He could not tell how long that Zell land had been settled, it had been settled and sold a good many times before witness came to the country. He supposes that place is ten miles from Scio southeast and nine miles from Crabtree. When he first came there, Scio was the nearest post office, but there is a little town right close called Lacomb, two and a half miles away. It is just a small place, about three stores, just a few residences. Other people went up into the foothills and mountains and took homesteads in these timbered areas in the even sections besides himself. Some of these homesteaders are living there yet, most of them did not sell to Wright, Blodgett & Company and other timber people, they did not take any timber lands around close to them. They have just taken ranches for their homes. Some of these homestead people besides himself took timber land, there is a man by the name of Herron who took a claim up there, but he sold this in the last year to some person from Medford whose name he does not know, but not to a timber man. He sold it for a fruit ranch and they are setting it out in fruit now, they put out fruit trees. He can think of some one up there who has entered a timbered quarter like he did and has sold out to these timber people. He thinks some of them entered under the timber and stone act and some proved up in fourteen months the same as he did. Some of them disposed of their holdings to the timber people. He thinks they made about the same kind of improvements that he did.

"Q. You say that about 40 to 60 per cent of this land could be made tillable after the timber was removed. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Clark, that these lands for twenty years up there, from 1872 down, these timber lands were considered of practicaly no value?

A. Well, I don't know, it is just according to the demand for them. There was no demand for them, there wasn't many people in the country then like there is now."

He does not know when the general demand for timber became pretty active up there, it has been probably twelve or fifteen years ago. He bought some land from the railroad company. He has eighty acres that he bought from them and paid $2.00 an acre for it right where he lives in section 21, township 11 south, range 1 east. He could not tell how long ago it was that he bought it, but it has been something like twenty years ago. That is where he now lives and he has about fifteen acres cleared and there is a part of that which is on another eighty which he owns below, he owns 160 acres there. This railroad eighty that he bought is not a part of the land that he had logged off and sold to the sawmill. There is five or six hundred thousand feet still standing on this railroad eighty, that would be considered on the 160 acres that he has. The bottom land he has all cleaned off and slashed, and part of the hill land he has in pasture. He bought this railroad eighty about twenty years ago at $2.00 an acre. He was just a boy when he bought it there and he imagined it would make him a good home when he got to be an old man. One reason why he bought it was because it adjoined the eighty that he owned. He did not live on either one of these eighties just then, but he now lives on the railroad eighty.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Your father had a large family, I believe you said. Did he try to make a living running a sawmill?

A. Yes. He did make a living.

Q. How long did he operate that sawmill?

A. Well, he operated that until us boys was old enough to operate for him.

Q. And then you operated it?

A. We ran it.

Q. How long altogether, between you?

A. Well, we commenced there in 1872, and sold the last of it out, last of the mill out about six years ago.

Q. Did you operate it continuously during those years?

A. Oh, yes, we run it, worked along there.

Whereupon witness testified that people came up from the valley to buy lumber as far west as Scio. People in the Willamette Valley used to go up from the valley into the foothills or mountains with farmers' wagons and get fencing lumber or any kind of lumber they wanted and there was where the lumber trade was principally. He used to get about $6.00 a thousand feet for rough lumber and $12.00 and $14.00 a thousand for dressed lumber, and he thinks they can get twice as much as that now and a little more than twice as much. For a great number of years he sold his rough lumber at $6.00 and his second common for $6.00 and $8.00 and his clear stuff, dressed, for $10.00 or 12.00. He sold it as far west as Albany. Sometimes the farmers would come up there with their teams and stay all night. They brought their hay and oats along and camped out. That is the way it used to be done through the Willamette Valley.

Whereupon, on re-direct examination, witness testified that they had no railroad up there yet, they have just got railroad land, that is all. He thinks industrial conditions would justify building a railroad into this country. Very few people realize either the advantages or the difficulties that confront a settler in this country excepting those who have actually faced them, and it is quite an easy matter either to exaggerate the advantages or difficulties. That railroad land there is just in the foot hills. He lives right in the upper end of the valley and then at that point it starts in with mountains, slopes gradually back. That does not change his testimony as to the usefulness of this land for settlement. They have a young lady up there who has taken a homestead and her mother has been living with her and they just went out yesterday to town.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. What I mean is this: so far as the value of the land is concerned to settlers, does it make any difference whether you call it foothills or mountains?

A. Oh, I don't think so; not so they can get out and in. We have better health up there next to the mountains.

Q. Well, now, when you speak of it as foothills or mountains, does that go to the question of the character of the land, or its susceptibility to settlement and cultivation?

A. I don't think so.

Q. When your people went into that country, was the timber of any value to you except for fuel and your building purposes?

A. Well, what we sawed into lumber was. We could make something out of it, of course.

Q. As early as 1872?

A. Yes.

Whereupon witness testified that in one way the timber is more valuable today than it was when he went in there, it is higher priced now. He does not know as the timber would be an obstacle to the settlement of that country. They have got to get that timber off. Some would use the timber in improving the lands. They have to have some timber for that but then there would be more there than would be necessary for farming, putting into ranches, as far as that is concerned. They would use that timber, they would not waste it, it should not be wasted. They could take the timber and sell it and get money for it and use that to clear the land up, and even if they could not sell the timber they could clear the land and make a good home out of it. If they could get money for the timber that would not obstruct them, but would help them in making a home out of the land, it would give them that to go on.

Whereupon, on re-cross examination, witness testified that he does not know what would be the average value of these railroad lands in their present condition. At the present time one can hardly estimate timber where it will go 200,000 feet to the acre. There is some timber up there that will go that. There is other timber land that has no timber on it at all, they are just bare, one might say. 200,000 feet to the acre has been cut right there at the Star Mill, they estimated one acre just to see what it would bring. Of course he does not know if there are many acres like that, but take pieces of timber that has 200,000 feet of timber, to take the clear lumber and work it up, one could not value it hardly. It would be worth a good deal of money. He would not feel hardly capable of pricing this unsold railroad land with which he is acquainted. He got $12.50 an acre for his timber land that he sold up there. He thinks that a timber quarter that carried 200,000 feet an acre would be worth $10,000 to $15,000, and he supposes that the value depends on how much timber one has got on the land in the main, as to whether it is high priced or low priced.

Whereupon upon re-direct examination witness testified:

Q. Well, now, just one more question, Mr. Clark: suppose that the timber should be cut off, I want to ask you, as a practical man living in that community, and knowing the conditions, whether the land would possess a value with the stumps in the ground, you understand, after the timber has been removed,—would it possess a value to the settler to come in there and clear the ground, and subject it to cultivation and make a home of it?

A. I don't know as I just understand how that is, how you mean that.

Q. Well, now, ask me more, so that I can make the question more definite. I do not want to make my question suggestive to you, Mr. Clark.

A. Well, now, ask it again, and see if I understand it.

(Question read.)

A. Yes, I think it would.

Q. What I mean is this: Is that land valuable only for the purpose of having a man come in and pretend to make a home, simply to get the timber, or is it valuable after the timber is removed for the purpose of making a home of it?

A. Yes, it is valuable, of course. It is valuable for a home.

Q. After the timber is removed?

A. After the timber is all gone, yes.

Whereupon, on re-cross examination, witness testified:

Q. Mr. Clark, it would cost about as much to remove the timber and grub it out as it would to buy an acre of cleared land, wouldn't it, if you had to hire it done?

A. It is according to the man. If you or I would go to work with a grub hoe, and grub it out, it would be very expensive.

Q. If you had to hire the work done, it would cost about as much as to buy the land?

A. I saw last winter in "the Homestead," where a man cleared 40 acres, and the timber was cut down as thick as it could be sawed. He cleared that 40 acres in one season with the help of two men.

Q. He must have been a Samson.

A. He char-pitted the stumps, burned them all out at once, he burned those logs in those holes. Now, you and I probably would not be wise enough to do that.

Q. That was one experience that you have had?

A. I just read that in "The Homestead."

Q. Oh, you read that in a paper?

A. I saw the picture of the land there, and it gave it in several numbers.

Q. The char-pitting proposition is an experiment yet, isn't it?

A. No.

Q. Do any char-pitting up there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much have you done?

A. I have not done any of it, but I have seen the neighbors doing it.

Q. How much have you seen done by any person on this heavy timbered land?

A. They are doing quite a bit of it. There is a neighbor right adjoining me. I saw several big stumps that he burned out there, right on both sides of me last winter, burned out those big stumps. After he got fire, all he did was to keep that covered up, and the fire did the work itself.

Q. Isn't it a pretty big job to set fire to one of these big fir stumps and to keep it going?

A. No, they tell me not.

Q. You never have done any yourself?

A. No, what I did I took out with a grub-hoe.

Q. Don't you use blasting powder to get these stumps out?

A. Yes, I blasted out some last winter.

Q. Haven't you seen these stumps hauled out with block and tackle and donkey engines—pulled up?

A. Yes.

Q. And make a pile as big as this courthouse, and set fire to it?

A. I shot 120 of the large stumps last winter with about $12.00 worth of powder.

Q. How long were you at it?

A. Just about two days.

Q. Did you estimate the cost of clearing an acre of this land that stands as that saw-timber does?

A. No, we were just shooting out those stumps around in what I had cleared.

Q. Don't you think it would cost from $50 to $100 an acre, if a man had to count in labor and material, and hire it all done?

A. It might cost him $200, some fellows, the way they manage. Others would do it lots cheaper.

Q. I mean a prudent, practical man, don't you think it would cost him $50 to $100 an acre to clear these timber-lands?

A. That depends, you know, on how you go at it.

Q. Well, wouldn't that be a fair price?

A. Well, I expect it would. But then, when that is cleared up, probably that land, after it is cleared up, they would charge you $500 or $600 an acre for it.

Q. Well, do you think it would be worth $500 or $600 an acre away up there twelve miles east of Scio?

A. What is the difference? If we have got a railroad out there, we can ship our stuff into the markets just as good as you can out here.

Q. Don't argue, Mr. Clark.

A. Yes.

Q. You haven't got a railroad there yet?

A. Well, we are going to have sometime. We live in hopes.

Q. I understand; but you are comparing that land without a railroad with land here at Fairview, twelve miles east of Portland?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. A city of 275,000 people, aren't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you find that land out here at Fairview, twelve miles east of Portland, in the woods, is worth $400 or $500 an acre, today, and you think that that land twelve miles east of Scio, up there in the mountains, would be worth $400 or $500 an acre some time, or when you get a railroad, after it is cleared?

A. Yes; they are selling the land right close to this area for $150 an acre.

Q. That is already cleared?

A. Yes.

Q. Desirable lands? Not in large quantities, are they?

A. Well, a man had eighty acres, and he refused to take that for the rest of it. Part of it was in brush.

Q. He refused to take $12,000 for eighty acres?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any timber on it?

A. Some of it has a little timber on it.

Whereupon, on re-direct examination, witness testified:

Q. Just one final question, Mr. Clark: In testifying as to the availability of this land for settlement purposes, have you taken into consideration the cost and difficulties of removing the stumps after the timber has been removed?

A. Nothing only that, that I told you about. That is all that I have blasted out. The rest I have grubbed out by hand.

Q. What I mean is this: In your general testimony have you taken into consideration, in testifying that this land would be available to a settler, have you taken into consideration the difficulties and the expense that a settler would have to encounter in removing the stumps?

A. No, I don't know as I could tell you that, because there is some acres, you know, that is much easier cleared than others. Maybe you will strike a patch of ground, suppose there is ten acres, of one acre that might cost as much as all the rest. I don't know how you would estimate it.

Q. Well, upon the general question as to which your testimony will be considered by the court, what have you to say as to whether this land is good land for a settler, considering the condition of the soil, the character of the soil, the climatic conditions, and also the cost of removing the stumps after the timber is removed? Have you considered all of those elements in saying that the land could be used by settlers, and that the land could be settled up?

A. Yes; it could.

Q. That is your best judgment?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon C. S. JACKSON, called as a witness on behalf of complainant being duly sworn testified that he resides at Roseburg, Oregon, and was born and raised in Douglas County forty-five years ago and has lived there ever since, excepting a short time when he was away to college for two or three years. He was in the Leland Stanford University three years and in the University of Denver, Colorado, one year, and is by profession an attorney at law and engaged in active practice at the present time and located at Roseburg. He was born two miles east of Canyonville twenty-seven miles south of Roseburg on a farm. Canyonville is six miles off of the Oregon and California Railroad in township 30 south, range 5 west. His father settled there in 1853 on 160 acres of land he thinks. He was there in time but did not get it under the donation act. He entered the land under a public land law he thinks he took a homestead and then he took in addition adjoining that some pre-emptions also. He owned in all about 500 acres and the land was agricultural, a portion of it was timber land originally. The part of the land that was cleared and reduced to cultivation was the ordinary land there that they called the timber lands. There was about one-third of his father's place plow land. He remembers he helped clear a great deal of it himself during his younger days. The balance of it was clear when his father took it, about two-thirds of it was clear when his father took it, and the balance of it was cleared, and there is a large amount of it yet uncleared that is good agricultural land of the total five hundred acres. The timber there ranged from brush up to six or seven foot stuff. Lots of it was saw timber. His father sawed it and floated it down the river to a mill there was below there. His father made a windlass grubbing machine, they called it, to clear the land. It was a capstan with a large windlass on it, and he used a two-inch rope and span of horses. They could pull out very large trees with that. Some of the logs were sold and some of them they had to burn on account of the mills not being near enough. They had to burn a good deal of the timber. The clearing was done through a period of several years. They were still clearing, he thinks, when he left the farm twenty-three or twenty-four years ago. The soil there was splendid. It is the same as all of the upland soils there in Douglas County. There are two classes of soil there, there is river bottom soil and what they call upland soils, the river bottom soil is the best, the better of the two. The upland soil grows all kinds of crops, all kinds that this zone would produce, that includes fruit, the very finest grows on the uplands. Many acres of orchards there now are put on the uplands. The upland fruit is a little better in flavor, but usually not quite so large in size. The river bottom lands are very productive and are richer than the upland lands in their natural state. River bottom land is better producing land. He has been all over Douglas County, thousands of times almost, he would say hundreds of times, and over adjoining portions of Douglas County, north, south, east and west, and referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 266" and starting in at township 30 south, range 5 west where he used to live, he has been in the mountains practically all over those townships from the head of Wolf Creek and Evans Creek in Josephine and Jackson Counties clear to the Crater Lake country, clear to the summit of the Cascades south of Crater Lake and then north from there, from Crater Lake as far north as Mount Thielsen they call it, it used to be called Diamond Peak, and he has been from there down all the forks of the Umpqua River, from there to the mouth of the Umpqua where it flows into the Pacific Ocean and all over the tributary of Cow Creek to the summit of the Coast Range mountains, and north to the divide between the Willamette and the Umpqua Valley. He has been all over the watershed of the Umpqua. He has not had any farming experience since he left the farm twenty-two or twenty-three years ago, excepting when he went back to the farm during the summer seasons, occasionally he would go back to the farm—not to make it a business. He has not done any farming on his own account since then. His father is still living at Canyonville, he has got too old to live on the place and has moved over into town, he is nearly eighty years old now, he moved into town about ten years ago. The old farm is still producing. His father sold the farm. He thinks there is something like four, three families anyway, now living on it. The land in that locality is all of the same quality of land for several townships around where his father used to live. The character of the land there, a portion of it is similar to the general character of all the land through Douglas County. His father's land runs from the rolling hills down to the river bank, some of it is level and some of it is rolling, being part of the hills there and opened up to the outside range and his father always kept cattle there all the time he had been there, over all those outside ranges, a good many acres of railroad land he had used there for years and years, two townships he thinks laying back of him between that and Myrtle Creek that was always open range, timber and brush, the same as what his father had. He knows in a general way where the railroad lands are situated in Douglas County which are involved in this suit and referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 266" that substantially represents the present holdings of the Railroad Company which the Government claims has been forfeited and he has a map like that which the Company furnished to him, that is, he called it a quadrant with a quadrangle for Douglas County. The even numbered sections which intervene these railroad lands are all settled, practically all settled now. They are either settled on or owned by people who are not living on them, they are practically all taken. The title has all passed and the settlers are all over them everywhere. He would almost say that there is a settler to nearly every even section, there would not be a settler for every quarter section. He knows some of those lands are held in large blocks by timber companies and knows there are a number of large holdings of that kind. The Smith people have lands and two or three other large companies all in that county there have lands. He should have said that the settlers would average more than one settler to every section. The settlers are farming and using the lands the best way they can, farming what they can of it and pasturing what they can of it. He knows that there is railroad land settled on, quite a few settling on railroad lands and have been there for years and years, farming it and using it. He has had clients who have been on railroad lands, who are there yet, the company has tried to oust them, some of them they have ousted and got them under contract with the company, or something of that sort, a good many of them have held their lands and are still holding them, without the consent of the company and they are cultivating the lands. He would say that seventy-five to eighty per cent of these railroad lands in Douglas County with which he is familiar could in his judgment be cultivated successfully, and will be some day. A settler does not have to have 160 acres of plow land in order to maintain himself and his family. He knows people there who are making a good living where they do not have more than three or four acres of plow land cleared and using, four or five acres will produce them hay for their horses and cow and they have their chickens and a few head of stock ranging in the mountains, none of it is fenced there. The Oregon laws do not require them to keep stock on their own lands, and they let them run at large, and everybody gets the benefit of all the outcountry and they all use it.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Well, taking into consideration all of those conditions, and the character of the soil, the uses that can be made of it, the quantity and quality of crops, both agricultural and horticultural, that can be grown on the lands, and taking also into consideration the amount of plow land that a settler has to have in order to maintain himself and his family, I will ask you to state, in your judgment, what percentage of the quarter sections of these railroad lands, if disposed of and properly handled, would support a settler and his family?

A. On account of the general lay of the country, there being hills and valleys everywhere, there is hardly a quarter section but what some portion of it will extend down on to the leveler portions and furnish sufficient level land to build him a home upon and clear up for his own use. Some portions of it has cliffs of rock, for instance, that would prevent its use for most any purpose except the mineral that is found there. Those portions would not be suitable for agriculture nor farming, that is, plowing; but most of those rocky mountains that are found here and there have grass growing on them, and stock range on them, and they furnish a large supply of feed for domestic animals.

Whereupon witness testified that dairying can be profitably carried on in that country and would be a success there and is carried on to some extent. He has been there for forty-five years and knows almost every development that has been carried on in that county and is familiar generally with the industrial resources of that country and the history of the development of those resources down to the present time, and is familiar in a general way with the methods the Railroad Company has used with reference to its granted lands in that county, including the former disposition of them, down to about 1903, and then the withdrawal and withholding of the lands by the railroad company since the latter date and is familiar in a general way with the sale of those lands in large tracts by the railroad company between the years 1894 and 1903. He knew that was their system at that time.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Jackson, whether in your judgment the methods that have been pursued by the railroad company, and the policy that has been observed by it with reference to these lands, has promoted or retarded the industrial development and settlement of that county.

A. It is a very serious handicap to the development of all Southern Oregon; not only Douglas County, but all Southern Oregon.

Q. Has that effect upon development been limited to the odd numbered sections themselves held by the railroad company at the present time, involved in this suit, or has it extended to the even numbered sections?

A. Yes, it has extended to the even numbered sections, and even goes farther than that. The mineral interests are suffering, and the tax question there has become quite prominent. The railroad company this year, I think, paid something like $103,000 on the railroad lands. That must necessarily be charged up to the expense of transportation, and we suffer from excessive rates, or greater rates than we should pay, because that is no part of the carrier's business.

Q. These lands that were sold by the railroad company in large tracts or large areas, between the years 1894 and 1903, state whether those lands are still held in large tracts or not, speaking generally now.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, explain to the court why the holding of these railroad lands in alternate sections by the railroad company, or by its large purchasers has affected the development of that county, not only the odd numbered sections themselves, but the intervening lands.

A. It isolates settlers, and because of their isolation they are denied the social developments that naturally belong to settlers, such as schools and churches and roads and highways. Every alternate section being under the control of the defendants prevents developments there, and many instances where settlers have gone in there, and because of those great drawbacks many of them leave their homes, and people with scrip will take them, or they will remain undeveloped.

Q. I will ask you whether, in your judgment, if those lands should be disposed of in 160-acre tracts to settlers, that is, if they should be offered in 160-acre tracts to settlers, whether that country down there could and would be settled up.

A. I believe that every quarter section would be taken within a few years and developed, made a home for a family.

Q. In making that statement, and in the making of your other statements with reference to these lands and the uses that can be made of them, have you taken into consideration the question of clearing the lands?

A. Yes. Of course, the speed or progress of the settlement would be retarded as the development of the country in general would go forward. Becoming very thickly settled, the demand for homes becoming greater, would cause people, and the price of land increasing, would cause the settlers to take less and less desirable pieces; of course, the first settlers taking the best.

Q. Now, would it be necessary for the settler to find a market for the timber in order to clear the land, or a sufficient part thereof for the purpose of his use?

A. No. He could probably, under the present circumstances, market a portion of what he would take off the lands that he cleared. The remainder of it he would have to burn up. But he would not have to clear his entire holding to enable him to live.

Q. Do you know of instances where settlers are living on lands adjoining these railroad lands, and of the same character, and are maintaining themselves?

A. Many of them.

Q. In addition to what you have already testified to, do you know of any instances where settlers have attempted to buy these lands from the railroad company, and have been refused?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent? Give the court the benefit of your information upon that subject.

A. Well, in the course of my line of business I have had a great many inquiries about the purchase of that where they have been turned down, and wanted to know whether there was any way by which they could secure the lands. A good many of these inquiries have been from men who are now on the lands, and a large number of them have been those who contemplate trying to get the lands; and they have all been refused since 1903, I think. Mr.—what's his name? McAllaster, I believe is their land agent—he usually writes to them,—they bring the letters in—that the lands have been withdrawn and will not be offered; and then since this suit has begun the letters also contain the additional statement that they cannot sell until the suit is disposed of, or words to that effect. There is a great clamor to get hold of these railroad lands by people who want to make homes on them.

Q. Now, is that limited to people who are trying to get them at $2.50 an acre?

A. I have had clients state that they would not necessarily confine the company to their price, that they would be willing even to give more in some instances, but usually they want to pay the $2.50.

Q. Now, did these instances occur, all of them, since this controversy arose, or did you have similar experiences prior to that time?

A. Since 1903, the withdrawal of the lands, the applications have been coming right along, clientage consulting about it right along. Prior to that we conducted a good many sales with the company.

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified that his father's place was two miles from Canyonville, and he thinks that he and his brother acquired that from the United States as a homestead. He settled there in 1853 and then took some cash entries adjoining. He thinks he took his homestead when he went there, shortly after he went there. He and Gazley and Fullerton went in together, and his father took that about 1854 or 1855 when he was only about nineteen or twenty, he went there and squatted on it and took it. Witness would not say that he took that under the homestead act, he does not know that the homestead act was in effect at that time, his father got it under the land laws just the same. He thinks the homestead act came later. The first donation act of 640 acres was in effect and then that was reduced to 320 acres. He does not think the donation act was then passed but he thinks the 640 acre act was disposed of about 1853 and changed to 320 acres. His mind is not clear as to the exact dates of that. The pre-emption act had been in effect, he thinks, for a long time. He thinks the 160 acre homestead act was along about some time in 1860, but the donation act was trimmed down to 320 acres and 160 acres to an unmarried man. He does not know whether his father took the 160 acres as a donation, or just held on there until he got the homestead. He could not say as to that. He is not sure whether his father took it under the donation act or whether he just held it there, it was not hard to hold in those days. The rest of it his father took up about the same time under cash entries, he thinks all of it and had patents to five hundred odd acres, and when his father got his patents to these lands very close to two-thirds of it was clear in its natural state. A good deal of the cleared portion lay on the river, the South Umpqua, and the part that was not cleared was back on the foothills, he cleared some of the bottom lands too. He could not say when his father sold these lands but it must have been ten or more years ago, he could not say about what he got on an average an acre for it, he could not say what he did get. The present owner he thinks paid a few years ago something like $10,000 for about 500 acres, but they are now worth a great deal more. He thinks the lands changed hands a time or two after his father sold them. Canyonville is a little old town on the old stage road and has about two or three hundred people, something like that. There is some mining around there, placer mining and quartz both. There is one quartz mine, it might be called a mine undeveloped, within one hundred yards of the city limits. Canyonville is six miles east of Riddle. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259" there are no railroad lands in the valley around the South Umpqua in the vicinity of Canyonville, most of that land was taken before the right to the grant attached. The lands, the low country there, the Umpqua River does not furnish the only valley, there are little valleys up all those tributaries of the river, and they run from that back on the hills gradually in most instances, in some places they are precipitous. He would say that of these railroad lands with which he is familiar in Douglas County outside of the part that is naturally clear they would consist of brush and timber. He could not say definitely that Douglas County is one of the best saw timber counties in western Oregon, Lane County has a great deal of saw timber, Douglas has a great deal of saw timber but it is splendid land, all good soil. The soil in Douglas County is different from what it is in Jackson county. He would say that there is a great deal of poor timber on these railroad lands in Douglas County. One can find good timber, that is he would call it good, although he is not an expert on timber. There is some good timber.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Now, Mr. Jackson, you say that you have represented a good many applicants to purchase these railroad lands. Do you refer to about five thousand applicants that made application through Mr. Leavengood, in Douglas County, to purchase these lands under the act of April 10, 1869, at $2.50 an acre, that sent out these printed blanks, which were signed by people from all over the United States, and made what they called written tenders, and demanded a convyance from the railroad company? Do you refer to those?

A. No, I never had anything to do with those.

Q. About how many applications have you had for the purchase of these railroad lands that have been transmitted to the company since 1903?

A. Oh, I couldn't say.

Q. Well, has there been as many as a dozen?

A. Oh yes, more. Oh, you mean that have been transmitted?

Q. Yes.

A. Possibly not more than that.

Q. Can you name the list of the persons whose applications you transmitted?

A. No, I could not.

Q. Could you name any of them?

A. Let's see. I wrote to the company for a fellow by the name of Kent I know.

Q. When?

A. He has got some of your railroad land fenced in too, and has had it for twenty years.

Q. When?

A. That must have been a couple of years ago possibly.

Q. Now, name anyone else.

A. I think a fellow by the name of Bolsinger. I wrote in his interest once, I think.

Q. Did you sign your own name as his attorney?

A. I usually did. Sometimes I wrote letters for them.

Q. Did you address them to the San Francisco office?

A. All the correspondence was done through the office there I think.

Q. All the correspondence was done with Mr. McAllaster?

A. Whatever was done was done with the present man, I think.

Q. Mr. McAllaster?

A. That is what you have reference to?

Q. Yes, that is what I mean. Now, can you name any others? You have named two.

A. Well, recently I think there has been one or two.

Q. Can you name them?

A. I am poor at remembering names.

Q. Now, what did these applicants offer to pay, $2.50 an acre

A. That was usually their desire, to pay the government price.

Q. Did they claim under the act of April 10, 1869?

A. Well, they seemed to. Now, the recent applicants seemed to be pretty well advised on this suit, and the price, etc., and they come in with that expectation of getting it.

Q. I mean since 1903 have they all asked under this act that have come through your office—the act of April 10, 1869?

A. You refer to the land grant act?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, they wanted to get it under that act.

Q. All of them since 1903 that you have handled?

A. They wanted to take it, yes. They wanted to take it. I have advised them all the time—some of them have come and asked advice about taking it without consulting the railroad company—in most instances I have advised them to take it under the rules of the company.

Q. Well, to demand the price under the railroad act?

A. Just told them that, yes.

Q. That is under the $2.50 an acre?

A. Under the rules that the company were selling them under.

Q. That is, the ten-year proposition?

A. Yes, or cash either one, whichever they wished to pay.

Q. I understand. And as early as 1908 you knew, didn't you, of this proviso in the act of April 10, 1869, which attempts to amend the act of July 25, 1866, being the land grant act involving these lands and attempting to limit the amount that could be sold to 160 acres, and attempting to name the purchaser as an actual settler? You knew of that?

A. I knew there was an amendment there, but the effect of it I couldn't call to mind right now, because I have not examined it recently.

Q. Well, that is one thing we are trying to find out in this suit, is the effect of it.

A. Yes.

Q. But you knew of that statute? I mean, the lawyers knew of that generally?

A. Yes.

Q. In Southern Oregon, didn't they?

A. Yes, my attention was called to it when I tried to get this wagon road grant, when I was in the legislature in 1907 there.

Q. Well, but long before that, this question of $2.50 an acre to actual settlers was a matter of discussion among lawyers in southern Oregon, particularly in Jackson County, Josephine County and Douglas County, wasn't it?

A. In what respect, Mr. Fenton?

Q. As to the $2.50 an acre proposition, and the sale to actual settlers only, and in quantities not to exceed 160 acres?

A. As to whether that was compulsory or not?

Q. No, as to whether it was known. Didn't lawyers know of it and discuss it?

A. I think the lawyers knew of it; that is, those that had any work along that line knew of it.

Q. Nearly all of the lawyers in southern Oregon that had any practice at all had some knowledge of the public land laws and had some business in that direction?

A. Well, quite a few of them don't yet know about that, because they have been asking me about it.

Q. Well, couldn't they find out from you?

A. I usually gave them my citations, where they could go and find the laws.

Q. Well, Judge Watson, E. B. Watson, former justice of the Supreme Court, raised that question in 1896 in the tax case in Jackson County, didn't he?

A. As to the taxing of railroad land?

Q. Yes.

A. There was a suit down there. I don't know who raised it.

Q. Well, didn't you know that that was discussed by him in one of his briefs in that case?

A. I am not very familiar with the case, although I understood that. I did not see his brief, no.

Q. Well, didn't you know that? You knew of that $2.50 an acre provision as early as 1896, didn't you, or before it?

A. Yes, I knew it was in there myself.

Q. Well, now, the lawyers generally knew of it, didn't they?

A. Well, I couldn't say as to that, Mr. Fenton. I don't think they did generally.

Q. How did you get your knowledge of that?

A. Well, I got pulled into that litigation pretty early.

Q. What litigation do you refer to?

A. I don't call it litigation really, but contentions for these lands. I had occasion to examine it.

Q. You had some business in the local land office, didn't you?

A. I have a little, yes.

Q. Ever since you have been practicing?

A. Yes.

Q. How long since you have been practicing law, Mr. Jackson?

A. Since 1898.

Q. Were you in the county clerk's office for a while?

A. Just a year.

Q. When was that?

A. 1898.

Q. And at that time you knew of this statute?

A. Well, I couldn't say that I did, no.

Q. How soon after you left the clerk's office?

A. It wasn't long after I got into practice when these contentions arose.

Q. Who first brought it to your attention?

A. I couldn't say. The Matthews up there had a contract from the railroad company for 320 acres, and I carried that along for three or four years. I think the company finally deeded it to them. They got a deed to that. The contract was lost. But then it was earlier than that that I got in.

Q. That you knew of this $2.50 an acre provision?

A. Yes, I knew of it earlier than that.

Q. Now, you said, I think, that there was a good deal of clamor about the sale of these lands. When was that clamor—how early?

A. Well, of course it all arose, that is, most of it arose since the withdrawal.

Q. Since 1903?

A. Yes. Before that we had some difficulty on railroad or on mineral lands. I know father tried to purchase some from the company, and he didn't get it. They wanted thirty or forty or fifty dollars an acre—I don't know what it was.

Q. He didn't claim it though under the $2.50 an acre clause?

A. Well, no. He claimed it under that, but he was willing to give more even than that for it.

Q. Your father then knew of this $2.50 an acre clause?

A. Oh, no doubt he did. I guess he did. He did at that time I know.

Q. That was long before 1903?

A. Yes, that was before 1903.

Q. Now, this clamor that you speak of originated after the company, as you say, withdrew the lands from general sale about 1903, as you recollect it?

A. Yes, the talk for the lands, or the applications made for them increased in numbers after that.

Q. About when did timber lands become an object of considerable inquiry and location under the timber and stone act, and under the homestead act, out there in Douglas County, and under scrip—anyway they could get it?

A. Well, do you mean when the greatest rush came for them?

Q. Yes.

A. That was about from 1900 to 1904 or 1905.

Q. It began about 1900?

A. Right along there somewhere, as near as my memory serves me.

He does not think that the railroad was built through Douglas County about 1878. He thinks it ranged from 1881 to 1885 when the line of definite location was established. If the record shows it was 1878 he would be wrong, but he does not think the record shows it. He would not say that for fifteen years after that time these lands had no particular value or that there was no particular inquiry for sale. The inquiries for sales were not as great then, he supposes because of the lack of influx of settlers. There was a demand for timber, but then timber closer to transportation was used first for domestic and ordinary local use, the question of speculation was not as strong then as it was later. He could not say that there was not any speculative investment for timber in 1878, he does not say there was, he could not say he had any knowledge at that time. He does not remember that he ever put in an application to purchase any of these timber lands from the Railroad Company for himself. He filed on a homestead on lands in Douglas County, but he has not proved up yet. He took a squatter's claim off of his father's ranch once, but never proved up on that. That was when he had just about reached his majority, or a little before that. He did not prove up on that because he thought he could do better, and he went off to school. Some one took it afterwards and it is patented now. It was not a great while afterwards that some one took it, and it is taken all over that country now where they used to run cattle. The country is still open, further up the Umpqua and into the mountains, they run stock up into the mountains. He can tell of a settler on these railroad lands living there, Maccabee, with whom counsel for the Company has probably had some correspondence there about his claim. Maccabee is on Day's creek, but witness does not remember how many acres he claims but he and his predecessor have been there, he does not know how long, but they have been there a good many years. He thinks Maccabee was there before the definite line of location, and claims the lands as his own. He knows of railroad lands that are under fence by people who live on deeded land. This that is under fence is probably there under a claim of these people. Some of them claim it is their land under the statute of limitations and others, he thinks, have stayed there where the Railroad Company has gone and got them to lease it from them, under their lease system now. He had clients with whom they have done that. He knew some people who had gone and taken a quarter section of this railroad land, jumped it and are claiming it. Very few of them have stuck. He has forgotten their names, He could not say as to whether these people had applied there through Leavengood and posted notices on these quarter sections generally, he was not advised at all on that. He does not think many of those people settled. He understands that a good many of those people were largely non-residents but he is not advised on that. He does not know Leavengood's system or anything about it, but he understood that he had a system and that he worked it pretty industriously. Personally he never had any litigation with the Company, he has had claim clients and timber claim clients and things like that and had a case against the Company involving the township site of Roseburg, that was the case of Johnson against Wollenborg, he believes that was the case which involved what is claimed to be the south half of the donation land claim of Aaron Rose and wife and covered a part of the town of Roseburg only and upon which part of the depot grounds of the Oregon and California Railroad Company are located, practically part of the grounds and he sued about three or four hundred people there in that suit. That suit went to the Supreme Court, it was a suit in equity for partition. The Supreme Court held that partition was not a proper remedy. There is an ejectment action pending now against the Cobb Real Estate Company he thinks it is called but there was no ejectment yet as to any others. This Courtney Chauncey was a nephew of Mrs. Rose, Mrs. Aaron Rose the donation claimant, this land had not been occupied and claimed by these people who are now in possession, there is a scattering piece here and there, a scattering lot here and there, which has been held for a great many years. This tract has been laid out as a town in more recent years, the town has branched out in that direction, but he does not think that the town has been laid out in there, any on this part of it as long as thirty years.

"Q. Well now you have had some other controversies in which the railroad company was interested, haven't you?

A. Yes.

Q. You were interested in these and a witness in one of these freight rate cases weren't you, down at Salem?

A. No, well I did appear as a witness. I appeared more on behalf of the citizens of Douglas County there in that instance. They put me on the witness stand after I got there.

Q. The citizens of Douglas County used you as a witness?

A. They sent me down there to look after their interests and the commission called me after I got there as a witness.

Q. But you told them you would testify as a witness didn't you?

A. No, they knew what I knew.

Q. I see, and they put you on the witness stand?

A. Yes.

Q. Simply to put it in the record?

A. I suppose so, yes."

He does not remember what that case was but thinks it was a case on class rates south out of Portland, distributive class rates out of Portland, involving merchandise but he is not sure. He thinks that was a case involving the first four classes principally, as he remembers it. He is not a merchant, has never been one, he is not a cruiser and has never been and never bought and sold timber lands as such, never farmed since he left his father's place and went to school excepting at the short intervals that he would come back to help his father until he got through college, university. He has not farmed since he graduated and does not own a farm and is not interested in the farm any more than a citizen would be. He owns some mining land in Jackson County up in Star Valley. The Railroad Company has some mining lands there that they have got to give up one of these days right adjoining his, but he is not interested in that only as an attorney. The Railroad Company got a patent passed on that particular piece that he has in view now and if the Company does not deed it over, or dispose of it in some way to his clients he expects to bring suit to cancel that patent.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Well, all of your interests have been adverse to the company as a professional man, and also as a man interested in mining, haven't they?

A. I have never been fortunate enough, if you mean that, to be attorney for the railroad company, and therefore my position has always been on the opposite side.

Q. Well, if you were attorney for the railroad company you might not have been able to go to the legislature like you did go. Isn't that true?

A. Well, I don't know about that, Mr. Fenton.

Q. When were you in the legislature?

A. I was there, I think it was the 24th legislative assembly, the time the railroad commission bill was passed.

Q. 1907?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, were you a member afterwards?

A. No.

Q. And never before?

A. Never before.

Q. Have you been a candidate for public office?

A. I ran for the nomination for state senator following that, but Mr. Abraham succeeded me by twelve votes.

Q. Albert Abraham?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon witness testified that they were both members of the same party and were running for the nomination. A good deal of that land can be plowed in its natural state where there is no timber. Where there is timber it would have to be cleared, of course, but it could be plowed. One can plow and raise stuff among the trees. One can raise more stuff if one would take all the trees off of it.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Well, if you had a quarter section that cruised ten million feet of saw timber, you wouldn't be able to plow much on that quarter section, would you, without the timber was taken off?

A. Sometimes that amount of timber will be on one fourth of it, and the rest of it will be good.

Q. Well, where is there a forty that has, we will say, two and a half million feet on it of saw timber?

A. Some of it runs as high as twenty million to the 160.

Q. It does in that county?

A. I presume that some of it right on the Coast Range, yes, in Douglas. It might be over in Coos County, but it is very close.

Q. And it is of the same general character?

A. Well, the timber over there is a little better than it is in the interior.

Q. Run as high as twenty million feet to the quarter?

A. Once in a while they have timber there as much as twenty million feet to the quarter.

Q. Well, what would that be worth according to the prices that have obtained in that county?

A. In Douglas?

Q. Yes. What would a quarter section that had twenty million feet of timber on be worth? As an investment, I mean.

A. Well, it is running there now from 25 to 50 cents a thousand, but the land is worth much more than that.

Q. Oh, I suppose the land is worth two or three times as much as the timber, in your judgment?

A. The land will be there forever, Mr. Fenton, but you only get once the timber. That is my view of that idea.

Q. That is the reason you put these values so high on the agricultural portion of it? That is your idea about it?

A. I think the agricultural part outside of the timber is worth very much more than all the timber combined.

Q. Well now, if there was a quarter section of land there that had ten million feet of timber on it, and was tributary to the Umpqua river, where it could be logged so that they could have transportation, that would be worth a dollar a thousand today, wouldn't it?

A. I don't think there is any selling for a dollar a thousand, or very little.

Q. Do you know of that because it is held in strong hands, and they do not want to sell at that price?

A. No, they are trying to buy at less and are buying at less.

Q. And keeping what they have got?

A. The fellows that are able to are, I think.

Q. That would bring a quarter section up to about ten thousand dollars? Don't you know of timber quarters out there that have sold for ten thousand dollars?

A. No, not in Douglas.

Q. How high are the highest you have known of quarters selling?

A. That is governed, Mr. Fenton, by the kind of timber and the location.

Q. I mean the best that you know of that has been sold.

A. Yes. As I say, they are selling now, what are selling are selling from 25 to 50 cents.

Q. Well, there are not very many selling, are there?

A. Once in a while they are picking them up right now, and for the last six months they have been pretty active. But it is largely men that are representing these large timber interests.

Q. They are picking up all they can?

A. They are picking up all they can.

Q. At the best price they can get?

A. Yes. Ranging in price. And that country, all you have got to do is to look at the logged-off country down from the Calapooia gulch there, where your railroad runs, to see that it will all be agricultural land.

Q. Yes, I have been there and have seen that agricultural land that you speak of. Cow Creek canyon is a fine agricultural territory, isn't it?

A. Just after you get up off that steep hill, there is level territory up there.

Q. Nice agricultural country all along the railroad through the Cow Creek canyon?

Whereupon, on re-direct examination, witness testified that Cow Creek Canyon from bluff to bluff, from what is always known as the old George Riddle place through to four miles below Glendale is a gorge. The Railroad Company has followed the stream up through the gorge. The gorge puts right down to the creek almost continuously there for the distance of the Cow Creek Canyon. He does not know just how far it is, something like thirty miles through the Cow Creek Canyon and its width varies. There are a few scattering ranches on the creek along up through there, but when one gets back on to the hills, gets up the first steep place out of the gorge, there are other little creeks coming in cutting through it and the country flattens out and widens out, and it is a good country through there for grazing and a good many homesteaders scattered all through there. He does not believe the gorge would be a mile wide at any place, meaning from the slope of the hill across.

Whereupon the witness was recalled by complainant and on re-direct examination testified:

Q. Mr. Jackson, there has been some testimony in this case, not only with reference to Douglas County, but other counties, to the effect that a great many homesteaders have proven up, received their patents, and sold to large timber companies. I will ask you whether, in your judgment, from your knowledge of the general history of the subject there in your own county, that condition would have taken place if these lands had not been sold in alternate sections covering large areas to timber companies, and the railroad company had not withdrawn its present holdings from sale; would the settler have been driven to that?

A. I know of some complaint involving that situation, and it is causing settlers to become discouraged, and some of them are leaving, selling out, those that have got rights, and others that haven't got rights are abandoning them.

Q. Now, when the settler becomes discouraged in the manner that you have testified, I will ask you whether, with the alternate odd sections there held permanently either by the railroad company or by these large timber holders—whether the settler can find any purchaser except the large timber company which holds the intervening odd numbered sections?

A. It seems that these large timber holders, not only have gathered up a good deal of the public lands there, but before the withdrawal they had secured large tracts from the railroad company, and they not only hold the government sections, but the odd sections too, because of the sale by the railroad company in some instances to them before the withdrawal; and where those conditions prevail the settler is practically up against it, as the fellow says in plain, modern terms, and is almost forced to leave. He is isolated entirely.

Q. Well, what chance has he to sell to anyone except the large timber holder who owns the intervening alternate sections?

A. Our experience there now is that the timber interests are sort of dividing the territory and not competing against themselves for the purchase of the small holder, and he is practically at the mercy of the one man that is operating in that particular territory where the settler might be.

Q. Well now, in your judgment, does the fact that the homesteader under those circumstances is compelled to sell to the large timber holder—does that fact, I say, in your judgment, indicate that the lands could not and would not be settled up if they were all open to settlement?

A. If these unfavorable conditions mentioned were relieved, of course there would be a greater incentive for the settler, and there would be more settling, and the settler would be more liable to remain and develop the country into an agricultural producing country.

Whereupon E. J. MAHAN, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified that he lives at Ashland, Jackson County, Oregon, and has lived in that county for twenty-three years. He was nine years old when he came into the county. His father was living then, but his mother was dead when his father moved to Oregon from California, where he lived about twenty-five years. His father settled in Jackson County, on a piece of unsurveyed land, two miles west of Ashland, from the post office, on a direct line it is not over a mile or mile and a quarter—in section 17, township 39 south, range 1 east, he believes this land was surveyed somewhere along about 1905. He remembers when the surveyors were there doing the work, because they camped at their place and he helped do the cooking, used to cook for them. His father went on that place on Christmas day, 1887, packed up on pack mules, and stayed there and made his home till his death a year ago this fall. He lived here with his father from the fall of 1889. His father went there in 1887, and then went back to California and got witness and his brother in the fall of 1889. His father built two houses on the place, both of which burned down, and he built a third one. He had a barn, which is there now. Witness had the old house remodeled himself last year—built it over, and has been living there since his father's death. He is married and his wife is living there now with their baby. His father settled on 160 acres there. When it was surveyed, the railroad company claimed it, and there was a contest between his father and the company, which was decided in his father's favor in the local land office at Roseburg, and his father said it was a matter of record in the Roseburg land office there. The way he understood it, the railroad company appealed to the Department at Washington while Binger Hermann was in office, and Hermann ruled against his father on 120 acres, and that is the way his father explained it to him; so that his father finally got 40 acres and the railroad company 120 acres of the 160 acres his father settled upon, and the 120 acres is involved in this suit, being the west half of the northwest quarter, and the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 17, township 39 south, range 1 east. It is good land, good soil, and has good timber on it—it is number one land, most all suitable for cultivation when the timber is cut off and it is cleared. His father cleared about 20 acres on the 40 acre tract, and they still retain it. Part of the clearing was on this other land, and some of it he originally had in cultivation, and when he lost it he let it grow up in brush, quite a lot that they had cleared. This photograph shows the land there, and there is the barn his father built, and there is the house that he remodeled. This house is within fifty yards of the line. This 120 acres lost, lays right back of the house there, and part of it is fenced, and part of it is under cultivation too—witness referring to a photograph which he produces, marked "Government's Exhibit 124," which was offered and received in evidence and is hereinafter set out and described in this Statement of the which he produces, marked "Government's Exhibit 124,"

Whereupon witness testified that he had also built a road to that property, his father, himself and brother built a road there that cost three thousand dollars, which cannot be built today for that. The altitude of that house is thirty-four or thirty-five hundred feet, and he would take that to be about an average altitude of the railroad land in that locality, sections 17 and 19, and all the land with which he is familiar there. His father set out an orchard on it and raised garden and berries, and improved it. When he went there it was thick brush and timber, big stumps. On about twenty acres they had taken out all the stamps and cleared it up and improved it, brush that one could not crawl through when they went there. Apples do not grow better anywhere than there, he picked off of trees his father set out there—now they had been neglected while his father was sick and could not attend to them, and had not been sprayed or pruned—and this spring he cultivated the orchard and pruned them, and he got thirty boxes of as nice apples as one ever saw. The fruit inspector was up there, and he asked him to stop and examine the trees, he was on a hunting trip by the place, and saw them, and the inspector claimed that that land some day was bound to be the best apple land in the country, giving his reasons, he said that the codling moths and the insects would not bother, at that altitude as they do in the valley on the lower lands. He is familiar in a general way with the other railroad land in that township, and has been over it, ever since he was a boy, since he was nine years old. Their stock ranged over it, and they used to go out after their horses pretty nearly every day. The railroad land there in sections 19, 21, 25 and 27 is really better than this forty acres that his father got, there is better timber on the railroad land in these sections. This forty acres that his father got was the poorest forty out of the 160. He is familiar with most all of the lands west of Ashland, between Ashland creek and the Applegate, and with considerable of the railroad lands in the Dead Indian country, which is east of Ashland from ten to twenty miles. He could not say how much railroad land over there, is involved in this suit. He knows of some there, one particular piece which they call Railroad Prairie, because it is railroad land, it is nice prairie land, good grazing on it, and lays between what they call Glenwood and Lilyglen. He has been out there hunting with parties. Timber in that section he would not call extra good, the timber in that Dead Indian country, some of it, he would not call very good, there is lots of white fir and a good deal of yellow fir that is punky, but there is lots of land there and it is number one. He has hunted over nearly all the Dead Indian country, this one particular piece which they call the Railroad Prairie was about the only piece of railroad land he could say that he was really very familiar with, in the Dead Indian country. He considers that there would be a quarter section there, or probably more, just going over it hunting. In addition to these specific tracts with which he is acquainted, he is acquainted in a general way with the lands in Jackson County, is familiar with everything, railroad and other lands, except there is a locality out east of Medford in what they call the Butte Creek country, out in there, that he cannot say he is familiar with, but he is familiar with the southwestern part of the county, very familiar with all of that. He has been over it, he could not say how frequently, probably a hundred times, hunting and after stock, ranging over it.

Q. Just step here to the map a moment. This is a map showing by this red line the location of the railroad. There is Medford, here is Jacksonville, here is Ashland, and these sections marked in black are railroad lands. These squares are sections. The squares with the heavier lines are townships. This is section 39-1 east where Ashland is located. And the township west of that, of course, is township 39, 1 west, and so on. I have been referring to Defendants' Exhibit 266. Now, are you familiar in a general way with that part of the county to which I call your attention, and where you find so many lands designated in black as railroad lands?

A. Yes, I am very familiar with all that section.

Whereupon witness testified that he believes that all of those lands are suitable for settlement, a large percentage of them, and in his judgment 160 acres of that land, when it is cleared up, would support a settler and his family. He does not believe there is 160 in that range there but what it can be cleared up and made to support a family, and that is true with reference to the lands he knows over in the Dead Indian country. He helped his father clear this 20 acres that was cleared on his place, he and his brother and his father did the work, cleared it up, it was heavily timbered when they went in there. It was not good saw timber—some of it was, but there was not enough of it to be practical for saw purposes, but it was good for wood-stove wood. He cut the timber, cleared the land and sold the wood—cleared it up, made the timber into stove wood and hauled it to Ashland and sold it, that is the way he made his living while he was clearing the place. He has taken into consideration the expense and work involved in clearing this land, when he testifies that it could be made useful for the purpose of homes and settlement. The soil in there is granite formation, there is good soil and the average—the soil of the granite all through there would average twelve or eighteen inches of leaf mold, which is formed from decayed vegetation, it is light loam soil—granite formation. There have been several homesteads proved up by settlers in that same general country there, where these railroad lands are that he has indicated on the map, and at virtually the same altitude as his land there. There are no settlers back of him, he is the only settler there in that neighborhood. Up the other road, up Widner creek to the Applegate country, there are settlers back that way, but he and his father built this road themselves, there was no road when his father went in there, just a little Indian trail. He believes these lands would be settled at once as fast as they were thrown open, if they should be offered to settlers. Withholding these railroads lands from sale by the company has certainly retarded the settlement and development of that country, there is no doubt about it. He knows who owns some of the even numbered sections intervening these railroad lands in that southwestern part of Jackson County. He knows of two or three places, homesteads, which have been homesteaded but practically the timber is cut off, and not much improvements made on them. Some of them they have improved, some they have not, some that has been sold by the railroad company and the timber is cut off. It was bought for timber and not for settlement, it seems.

Q. After the timber is cut off, and taking that land in the condition in which land always is after it is logged off, with the stumps in the ground and the accumulation of branches and other debris resulting from logging operations, and with the smaller brush still standing, I will ask you if, in your judgment, that land would be attractive to a settler, and a settler could afford to go upon the land and clear it?

A. Yes, sir, the majority of it he could.

Q. Now, these homesteaders that have gone in there and have left there, I will ask you whether in your opinion they would have abandoned their homesteads if the railroad lands had been thrown open to settlement and the country had been settled up, as you have described?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Well now, Mr. Mahan, just explain how the withholding of the railroad company's lands from settlement has interfered with the settlers on the even numbered sections with reference to roads and schools and other conditions of that kind?

A. Well, there is one family that I know of, a man that came there about the time my father did, he bought a man's relinquishment—people of the name of Walter, he bought their relinquishment to a homestead right. That was unsurveyed land. And he moved on it, and built him a house, and made considerable improvements; set out some fruit trees, orchards. He had a big family, he had nine or ten children—I don't know how many. But when the railroad company got this land he moved off, and this particular piece has been sold since to a man named Provost, bought it in the first place from the railroad company, I believe, and the timber has all been slashed off it, and what improvements were there have simply decayed and gone to rack; but it is bought for timber speculation more than anything, I think. It is good land. Now, for instance, if this man that cleared it had been allowed to remain there with his family and improve that, he would probably have been living there yet, and it would be a nice home.

Whereupon witness testified that he has no interest in these lands, no special interest, other than as a citizen.

He did not apply to purchase any of these lands. His father applied to the railroad company for this 120 acres that was originally in his homestead claim, probably eight or nine years ago, something like that, and the company told him it was off of the market, not for sale. He does not know what is the reason the company told him it was off the market, that is what his father told him.

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified that he was thirty-three years old, and his father went on this homestead on Christmas day in 1887. By their road which they built to the property, and by the survey, he has heard his father say that the surveyed road was two miles from the Ashland post office, up on the mountain. The elevation at his house is about thirty-five hundred feet, about fifteen hundred feet higher than the post office at Ashland. They built the road from Ashland out themselves, from Nutley street, where they left Nutley street in the city straight to their place, fully a mile and a half of road. He and his father and brother, who were living there at the time, built this road. It was not a county road, they built it themselves, it is still a private road, they built it at their own expense, for their own use. They have no neighbors back of them. Some land has been held back after it has been cut off for wood, but there is no one living on it. His father had a contest with the railroad company as to the whole of this 160 acres, he understood that his father's final proof was accepted, the land was unsurveyed when he settled there, and he offered final proof after it was surveyed, and it was accepted, but his father claimed that Binger Hermann ruled against him and only allowed him forty acres out of the 160 acres. He could not say that the railroad company got a patent, but it claims that it is railroad land, his father did not get it. His father did not give up possession of it, but has retained possession of it ever since till his death, and witness is still on it himself. His father deeded his rights to witness and his brother on his death, whatever rights he had, and he claims that that 120 acres really belongs to himself and his brother, under the claim which his father made, and has been in possession of it since his father went there, in 1887, about twenty-three or twenty-four years. His father did not fence it all, but had some of it fenced, this 120 acres. He has paid no taxes on this 120 acres. His father cleared up some of it when he had it under claim, he cleared up quite a piece, he could not say how much, but it was a piece around about the house, probably a couple or three acres, something like that. His father cut the timber off of that, and most of it has grown up, some of it is enclosed in chicken yard. He is not cultivating that only a small portion of the 120 acres, just a little corner of it now. He could not say how much of this 120 acres he is cultivating, as he does not know exactly where the line comes, probably there may be half an acre or an acre. The chicken house and buildings and outbuildings are on it. He could not say what this 120 acres is worth today, he has never cruised it, the timber would have to be estimated on it, and the land would have to be estimated, and he really could not put a price on it, there is good timber on it—good wood timber, all of it. He would say that it would cut probably fifteen hundred cord of wood on this 120 acres, wood is worth one dollar a cord stumpage, which would be fifteen hundred dollars for the wood that is on it, and then the land after the timber is cut off, is worth more than the timber, after it is put in cultivation and cleared up, and would be worth at least fifteen hundred dollars more, and he believes that would make that 120 acres worth about three thousand dollars. His improvements are not on this 120 acres. He has no picture of the timber, he has no other picture besides this Government's Exhibit 124, showing the timber that is on this 120 acres, these are just some photographs his wife happened to have when he started. Handing counsel a photograph, witness says that that is another view of the house, taken right back of the house, that is part of that probably. That is practically all, he has no picture of the timber. There is a couple of photographs of a mining tunnel. His father had a mine there, but that is separate land. The railroad company never claimed that forty. The title lays between witness and his brother and the Government on that. He did not pay the railroad company $2.50 an acre for that, the company never claimed that against his father, his father contested the company on that and it never claimed the land, it abandoned it to him and gave it up, it is a quartz mine, one has to dig down into the earth to get it. They have got in one tunnel about four hundred feet altogether, and a shaft about fifty feet, his father has milled sixty ton there from that upper tunnel that netted him $31.43 a ton in gold, and has taken out sixty tons which netted him that, and has taken about $1200 worth of gold out of this mining claim after paying all expenses. They put it all back in the mine in development work and they are still developing it. Witness ran 150 feet of tunnel last winter, that cost him about four dollars a foot, and he did the work himself and one man with him, and furnished the powder. The mine is practically a prospect, they are developing, showing it up, and they cannot put any price on it. They are going ahead all the time developing it.

Q. When sixty tons brings $1200 it is more than a prospect, isn't it?

A. Well, if we get enough of it, yes; if we get enough of it.

Q. That is a mine, isn't it?

A. Well, a mine is a large body of ore in sight, something you go up and put a mill on it. You put a mill up on sixty tons today, and tomorrow you haven't got anything.

Q. You don't think that is a pocket?

A. No, we have a true fissure vein, five feet between the walls, and we have cut it the full length of the vein.

Q. That is considered a good mine, isn't it?

A. That is considered a good prospect to make a mine, yes; but it takes lots of development work to open it up.

Whereupon witness testified that one had to have money to put in a quartz mill, things of that kind. The description of that forty and the exact numbers—it is adjoining this other, section 17, township 39 south, range 1 east. The Ashland Reserve is back of this in the neighborhood of three miles, and there is timber all the way back of him. He does not know how many acres there are in this reserve, but there are several thousand acres. Referring to Government's Exhibit 124, there is fir timber shown to the right in the picture, that lays on their mining claim, that is small timber, which will average about twelve or fifteen inches in diameter, practically second growth. There are some heavy trees in it, that one can see there, some very large timber in it, and there is second growth in the picture that will average about twenty inches. that timber was pretty small when he went there, it has grown certainly since then.

Q. Now, over in the distance, that is, looking over beyond Ashland, over the hills, the bald hills on the east side of the valley, isn't it?

A. Yes, that is looking east.

Q. Looking east?

A. Looking across the valley.

Q. Those are bald hills over on that side mainly?

A. That is Grizzly over there.

Q. That is bald, isn't it, mostly?

A. There is timber on the top there back of Mount Grizzly.

Q. There is some scrub timber, little scrub trees?

A. There is some good timber there too.

Q. After you get over the ridge?

A. Yes, on the top, and over on the other side. On this side there is no heavy timber.

Whereupon witness testified that Provost, whose initials he does not remember, bought some land there, he thinks Provost came out to Ashland some twenty years ago, from Yamhill County, and bought some railroad land, and some other land for timber that was on it, and cut cord wood and stuff of that kind to haul to Ashland, and was in the wood business, and after he cut the timber off he sold the land, he did not cut all the timber off, they are still cutting timber off of it now. He has not sold any of the land that has been entirely cut off that he is familiar with, at least he does not know that he has. Provost has sold it all, has sold the land, and it has changed hands three or four times since then. He believes Provost owned two hundred acres that he bought there. They are not farming it, except a small portion, he does not know how much, but he has been there, but the people that have been living on the corner for the last year or so, are farming some of it, he does not know how much. They have only the work outside, and haul wood to town, but they have really discontinued hauling wood. Another man had a mortgage, he thinks, and he has taken over this land on a mortgage, this little piece of land, this two hundred acres. It was first bought by Provost, who sold it to Phipps, Phipps sold it on terms, and they couldn't make good and gave security and lost it. He took a mortgage some way, and turned the mortgage over to a man by the name of Hodson, and Hodson practically has the land, they did not make good on it. They bought it to pay out on it and they did not pay out on it, they threw it up. He knows something about Railroad Paririe over in the Dead Indian country. There is about a quarter section, more or less, he would judge, it was about twenty-five miles east of Ashland, but he does not know what township and range it is in. He was over there hunting—and was over there once after a cow he bought, he bought a cow and went after her, over the range, to get her, six or seven years ago. There is lots of white fir around that prairie that he does not consider good, and lots of yellow fir that is punky—doty—he does not consider it very good. He does not know who owns that timber now. They call it Railroad Prairie because it belongs to the Railroad Company, and he knows there is lots of good prairie—glades rather—big glades. It is good land, lays nice, this Railroad Prairie. There is one party there in his neighborhood, back of him, by the name of Connor, or Cotton, who homesteaded a piece and put in a saw-mill and cut timber off for saw mill purposes, and sold it since, and the people who have it now are using it for wood recently, they have cleared up some of the land on it. In fact,

Cotton originally cleared up quite a piece, quite a lot of trees, he was killed, a man named Messenger shot him, and his widow disposed of the place, and the place has practically gone to rack since then, practically gone back into the wild since. They logged off the land for sawmill purposes and wood, and then moved away and it has grown up again. He does not know of any homestead people back in there who have sold their claims to timber people for investment, none that he knows anything about. There is no one living back of him, between that and the reserve, that is all in the timber. He has about twenty acres cleared, practically had it all set out to orchard at one time. Last spring he set out one hundred young trees more, and he has a lot of trees ordered to set out this fall, he has trees all over this, scattered all over it like an orchard, he might say there are ten acres in orchard, there would be in the neighborhood of ten acres bearing, he has never surveyed it, he does not mean that he has ten acres of apples that are bearing, he has about fifty or seventy-five trees coming into bearing, they are Newtowns and Ganos and some Ben Davis and some Spitzenbergs. He has about seventy-five trees of these kinds of apples coming into bearing, apples today that are marketable. He picked thirty boxes off of them this fall, and has them in his basement at home for his own use. He does not know what apples are selling for at Ashland this year, apples like those would bring the highest market price because they are free from any blemishes. They were not hurt by hail like all the apples in the valley were, that is, hail damaged most all the apples in the valley this year. They are not bothered with frost as much as they are down below, he had some tomato vines that were green when they were killed in town, the frost seems to miss the high land, and will settle down on the low land, they do not have the fog there, and that is one reason for it, that they have in the valley. He does not know the Burrell or John Olwell orchards at Medford by that name, but he knows a large number of fine orchards between Medford and Phoenix, on the right hand side of the railroad as one goes south, and these lands down there are nearly all in bearing trees. He claims his father's right to this 120 acres of that railroad land, and they are entitled to it, they have spent their life there making it their home, improving it, and built a road to it, and he does not think they would give up possession if they were asked to do so.

Q. Well, your father thought that Binger Hermann had wronged him in favor of the railroad company, didn't he?

A. Well, that seemed to be my father's opinion, yes.

Q. And you are of the same opinion, too?

A. Well, no; but we have made it our home, and we have gone to a great deal of expense to build a road up there.

Q. I understand, and you don't feel very kindly over the action of Mr. Hermann?

A. Well, no; no, I really—I don't know anything about it. I am just in my father's—father said Binger Hermann ruled against him. That is as far as I know anything about it.

Q. But you are going to get that 120 acres if you can?

A. Yes, sir, that is a fact.

Q. Now, I suppose you mean that this land is suitable for agriculture, this railroad land that has timber on it, after the timber is removed?

A. Well, there is lots of it that can be cleared up that it hasn't got much timber on it.

Q. I am speaking now of that that his timber on it.

A. Timber on it?

Q. You would have to take the timber off it before you could plow it?

A. Certainly, it would have to be cleared and grubbed, certainly.

Whereupon, on redirect examination, witness testified that his father set out these fifty or seventy-five trees that are bearing, about six or seven years ago, something like that, but they have had no care, they were set out and stock has run on them, and they have been neglected because his father was sick all that length of time. He was an invalid on the flat of his back, in the hospital most of the time. This spring witness pruned them and plowed them and cultivated them, but did not spray them or anything like that. This is not the first year they have borne fruit, they bore fruit about three years ago. His father got apples off of them when he was up there the last time, but they had been neglected since. Witness took out a lot of them that the gophers had eaten off, they hadn't had care. He took them out and set in new trees—left the best trees. He set out this year in the neighborhood of one hundred trees last spring, and has there something from one hundred and fifty to one hundred and seventy-five trees, more than that all told—he has two hundred trees, good trees, there are more than that, but there are two hundred that are good trees. He set those trees out to grow apples for his own use as well as to ship and sell. He also set out strawberry plants—five thousand strawberry plants last spring—and they are doing well, finest in the country, and he expects to have two or three hundred crates of strawberries next year off of them. He is preparing to set out more this season. They used to have a very fine strawberry patch there, and one summer they sold four hundred crates of strawberries off of those, at $1.50 a crate. They came on theFourth of July, when the others were all gone—there was a big demand for them. A little later they would come on when the market was the best. They all ran out for the lack of care and attention, and he plowed out the patch last year and set it in alfalfa last spring, and set out another patch. Alfalfa grows up there without irrigation, they cut three crops a year. It can be watered, all that land there has mountain springs and streams, there are springs on all of it, there is hardly a quarter section in there but what there is water—by building a small reservoir one can get water on a great deal of it. It is his intention on this place to build a reservoir, in fact, he built the ditch last spring, he has the ditch dug, but he did not have time to build the reservoir. From his experience there and observation of the results, in his judgment, that land up there where he is, would ultimately be as good fruit land as the land in the valley, and for some fruits it is better, for apples it is better, it is a little high for peaches. They had some peaches this year on their trees, but he don't know—their peach trees are young—but he believes it is a little high for peaches, their pear trees are fine, they have a few pear trees and plums, pears and plums never fail to bear.

Whereupon, on recross examination, witness testified that there are some little apple trees shown in the picture there. The main orchard lays down on the other side of the house, that is an apple tree and that is an apple tree—pointing to the picture. Those apple trees were set out about four or five years ago. There is a tree right there, just a few days ago he picked two boxes of apples off that one little tree, which his father set out, he would think, about seven years ago, it is a red apple, he does not know what it is, but it is a nice apple. Some of the trees have died out in the open there, they were set out in rows, but then they have died out, there are little trees which he has set in there that don't show up, the trees died out for lack of care, and the stock beat them down, the stock got in on them. His father was sick and witness was not on the homestead at the time. Down below the barn he has a nice lot of trees, good sized, the barn is on a little lower ground.

Whereupon S. N. WARFIELD, called as a witness on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is forty-three years old, resides at Corvallis, Benton County, Oregon, and has been living at Corvallis ever since December 7, 1910, was born and raised in that county. Before coming to Corvallis he lived in Alsea Valley, was born in that valley in Section 7, Township 14 South, Range 7 West and has lived in Benton County all his life. His father was a farmer and homesteaded 160 acres, and then purchased 69 acres from the railroad company, and first moved on to a piece of railroad land, and after the surveys were made discovered that he was on railroad land, about a quarter of a mile too far on the north from his homestead line, and he then moved to the homestead. Witness was six years old when his father moved on this homestead, and recently after that his father purchased from the railroad company this other 69 acres, after proving up on his homestead, he moved back to where he had first made his improvments and his orchard. His father took up and moved on to his homestead about 36 years ago. His father intended to take a homestead there, but instead of getting the subdivisions that he intended to take, got off the line on to railroad land, and when he discovered the mistake, when the survey was made through there, he moved onto the land he intended to cover in his homestead settlement, and proved up under the homestead law. He does not remember how long it was after that, that his father purchased the railroad land, but he remembers that he made his payments by instalments in ten years, and paid $1.25 per acre for the land. He could not say exactly the date his father bought that railroad land, but he knows it was recently after they moved onto the homestead. He purchased that about that time and began to make his payments about the time they moved on to the homestead, that was when the state school lands were selling at $1.25 an acre in Oregon. The homestead was principally bench land, he would judge there was about six acres in the bottom and the rest of it was what they call bench land, and this up-land, sort of rolling. His father lived on the homestead for some twelve or fifteen years, and his father's family lived there until they moved back on to the piece that had been purchased from the railroad company, and they are still living there, his mother is, in fact, his mother and one of his brothers are still on the place. They had a family of nine children and his father made his living in the farming business right there, all the time, on the place. Witness never left his father's home, his father died when witness was 18 years old, and he was the oldest one of the boys, but had a sister that was older than he was. The rest of the children were all younger, so he lived on the place and ran the ranch until he was married, and then he purchased a forty, right adjoining that, and lived there until he was elected county recorder and moved to Corvallis, lived there all the time. His house was within one hundred yards of his mother's. He managed and was really the head of the family ever since his father's death. That 40 acres that he purchased there was covered with brush and timber, with the exception of about three acres, there was about three acres of cleared land at the time, that was a little burn when he purchased it. He has been engaged in farming his own place and that of his mother. He went to work and slashed that off, and has grubbed and cleared up a good portion of it now, and has cleared about 25 acres of his 40 acre tract. He raised wheat, oats, vetch and some clover on his father's farm and on his own farm. He raised corn, potatoes and all kinds of garden vegetables of all descriptions. Grapes do well, and they raised grapes, apples and pears, and they have a nice orchard now on the place. Referring to the Alsea Valley, he would not hardly be able to say how much it covers, on account of the way the river runs. Really the principal part of the valley lays in three sections on what they call the south side of the river, and then the North Alsea and the South Alsea; but it covers, he should judge, a township and a half or more. Practically using the watershed, there would be two, or three, or four townships there. In referring to the Alsea Valley he does not have reference merely to the bottom lands along the Alsea River, because he thinks there are many people living on the upland there, and he includes the benches and hill land as part of the Alsea Valley. That area taken in a township there, and extends from the river up and includes the benches and hills that were there. The valley practically is only at the widest place, he should judge, not more than a mile and a half wide, something like that. Along the Alsea river there have been settlements there for a number of years. The soil of that bench land is really some of the richest land that they have, the soil is very deep, in fact, that bench land is where the large fern grows. Fern grows there probably eight feet high, lots of them, and where that large fern grows there is really some of the deepest soil that they have. He has cultivated this bench land, and it is productive soil. This bench land, with reference to the bottom land, lies higher. On their homestead, they farmed some 20 acres of bench land on the hill, and it was so steep they couldn't cut it with the binder, they used to cut it with a cradle, his father used to cradle it, and he has bound after him at different times by hand. He used to cut with a cradle, he and his neighbor, Mr. Steeplow, used to cut that with a cradle all right. Bench land and hill land are the same, he thinks it would be what one would consider either bench land or hill land, because what they call the hill is the rolling land, in fact, where it does not rise too high, because otherwise they would call it mountains. There are only two or three places they call mountains there, what they call Prairie Mountain and Grass Mountain, something like that, otherwise they would call it bench land or hill land. When he refers to bench land, he means hill land, the upland off the bottom. He does not mean table or level land, but he means the rolling land on the foothills. There are different people living in different sections that have different definitions for bench lands. It is rolling land, with a little flat on the top here and there. He has been engaged in farming in this country that he has spoken of since he was old enough to farm until he was elected recorder and moved to Corvallis two years ago. He is acquainted with farming conditions in Benton County. Referring to Defendants' Exhibit 259, he notices the town of Alsea marked there, and the other markings thereon, pointing to the North Alsea and South Alsea, state that they are really the Alsea River, as they call it over there, they call one the South Alsea and the other the North Alsea. He is acquainted along Mill Creek, which is in Section 7, Township 14 South, Range 8 West, and right in there is the homestead and then a little further they had 69 acres there, in fact, he is acquainted with all of Township 14 South, Range 8 West, and the south half of Township 13 South, Range 8 West, and all of Township 14 South, Range 7 West, and he is well acquainted with Township 13 South, Range 7 West. His father's homestead is situated in Section 18, Township 14 South, Range 7 West. There is some timber in Township 14 South, Range 7 West, some very good timber, and there is a lot of it that has no timber on it at all, but is covered with some hazel brush, some little fir and there is some vine maple and cherry. He would think that he could tell what areas contain merchantable timber better from the sections. There is a portion of Section 9, and the north half of the north half of Section 11, and Sections 3, 17, 35, some in 25 and some in 19. In fact, there are not very many good sections in that township of timber. With the exception of these sections just mentioned the growth of timber is not heavy there, in any of those sections. The character of the rest of the sections as to timber is that it is more or less scattered, open, and in fact, open bench, what they call open glades there, and there is lots of it that has nothing on it at all, just some little scattering brush. That township is what they call hill land or rolling land, principally rolling land. There are settlers living in that township on the even sections, every even section in that township is taken with the exception of the south half of section 20, and there are three quarters in section 32, he believes that is all but what is taken in that township. The character of the lands that are not taken there is rather rough and pretty steep, and is the poorest land in the township. Section 30 is not taken in that township. These lands were taken by homesteaders. They are living there and have proved up on their places. In fact, none of them have been sold to any companies. There are several sections of railroad lands in these townships there that would be just as good as a lot of that that has been settled heretofore, there is no difference between the odd and even numbered sections, the numbering makes no difference. The unsold lands of the railroad company remain practically intact as shown on this map, except for the few yellow markings and a few blue markings. They are as suitable for settlement purposes as the homesteads that have been taken up there, with the exception of some right along on the Alsea river which were taken in the early days, meaning adjoining the even numbered sections. He is acquainted with the railroad lands in Township 14 South, Range 8 West, and there isn't very much timber in that township, in fact, there is but very little good timber in Township 14 South, Range 8 West, with the exception of Section 32. He does not think there is an even section piece of land in that township but what is taken, except about three-quarters of a section not taken. There are homestead settlers occupying the even sections in that township, sections 22 and 28 in that township are all homesteaded now, except there was one timber claim in section 28, the rest of it is all homesteaded and homesteaders are living there, and that is not as good as sections 23 and 15, which are better sections than those taken, better than the even sections there. Generally speaking the adjoining lands there in that section through that township, are of the same general character and formation,—the even and odd sections. He is acquainted with the south part of Township 13 South, Range 8 West, which is rough, in fact, it is what they would call the roughest land, about the roughest land in that section of the country there, that is further back from the Alsea river, and the ranches up on what they call Grass Mountain, which is, he should judge, about 3,000 feet high. Section 31 in that township has got some good land. There is a good portion of it that is covered with vine maple and cherry and soft maple, in fact, there are homesteads right adjoining that same township, that is underbrush more than timber, there is very little timber on it. There are settlers on the other even numbered sections, but not on all of them. Section 21 is principally all open, in fact, that was grazed two or three hundred head of cattle grazed every summer on that. Section 20 is principally all open land, with the exception of one quarter section, the rest of it is all open land. Section 16 is all open and 22 is very nearly all open, it is in a burn, 22 is pretty badly burned. The north half of 22 has some tolerable fair timber, but the rest is all open. Section 27 is all open with the exception of the southwest quarter, it has some very good timber on it, the rest is all open land, in a burn. Section 36, part of it is farmed at the present time, there is a portion of 35 that is being farmed at the present time, it has been sold. 36 is a school section and 35 is a railroad section. There is not a heavy growth of timber in there generally through that township, except in the places he has mentioned. There are but a few sections of timber there, the south half of section 28 has a good growth of timber, and section 33 has one good quarter of timber. If the timber were removed, on the land he has mentioned, not very much on that up there could be cultivated, but it would be excellent grass land. There would be some of it that would be very steep, which would prevent cultivation there. There is some land in section 31 which could be cultivated, and quite a lot of Section 21 could be cultivated. only it is a little high for crops, about 3,000 feet in altitude. There are settlers residing in some of the even sections there, and also some cultivation of them. In section 6 it is all taken, in that township, there isn't but very little of it up there that is cultivated. The title to a part of these even sections has passed from the Government. The township generally is not very valuable for timber, with the exception of just a portion of it. In the township, he should judge, there would not be more than one-fourth of the south half of it that would be valuable for timber at all, the rest is all open land. He is not much acquainted about the post office or town marked there on the map, Harlan. North there is the wagon road grant, the Yaquina Bay wagon road grant. He does not know just how wide that was, but thinks it was about a ten mile grant, but he is not quite sure of the width of that grant. The grant has been divided into small tracts and is being sold to settlers now, he could not say just how long settlers have been purchasing that land through there, he knows there have been several transfers since he has been in the office there. He has been up over that summit over the wagon road and also on the railroad, there are settlements all the way across on the road. They raise grain, vetch and dairying, goats, cattle and sheep up there, it is similar land to the land in the grant over south there. He is acquainted with a portion of Township 14 South, Range 6 West, not so well acquainted with that as he is further west, because his trading point is on the road to Corvallis and also to Monroe, and across over the county road running from Alsea to Monroe, and also to Corvallis. He is not very much acquainted in Township 13 South, Range 6 West. The lands he is acquainted with in Township 14 South, Range 6 West, are about the same as the lands in Township 14 South, Range 7 West, that is getting closer to the Willamette Valley. There is some good land right on the divide between Glenbrook and the south fork of the Alsea, there is a rich dividing ridge between them. He is acquainted with some of the specific sections in Township 14 South, Range 7 West, and is practically acquainted with most all of them, it is open land, and can be cultivated after any timber or growth that is on it is removed. In Section 19, Township 14 South, Range 7 West, there is a portion that can be cultivated. The county road runs right through it. There is some good land, what they call bench or rolling land there, in fact, it is not steep at all, it could be easily cleared, and there is lots of it that has nothing on it only now and then an old snag, or a little hazel brush, or something like that. In Section 21 there is some good land, the northwest quarter of Section 21 has some good land, and it is practically level, the north half of Section 15 is all open land, there is no timber on it. The south three-quarters of Section 11 is all open land. Section 23 is principally open, and a portion of 27, though 27 is considered pretty rough, it rises up on the mountain. Section 19 has some good bottom land on it, in fact, his brother cultivated one forty there for six or eight years, or a portion of one forty. That is railroad land. He tried to buy it and the company would not sell it, so he continued to cultivate it, he fenced it for the company and cultivated it, that was in Section 19. Section 31 has some good land. Principally 31 and 37, and the north half of five, and portions of 33, are more adapted to stock raising than for agricultural purposes, there is a portion which would be good for agriculture. By agriculture he means tillage, plowing and sowing of grain. He has mentioned some sections which had timber on them, and thinks that that which has timber on it would be just as good as the other for agriculture after the timber was removed and the land cleared. Section 19, where it has some of the best timber is some of the best land there is there. There is one hundred acres in one body there that is practically level, just a big level bench there, which is pretty well covered with timber. This 40 acre tract his brother tried to buy from the company, applied to purchase seven or eight years ago, and the company told him at that time that it had not placed a valuation on it and that when it placed a valuation, it probably would talk business with him, and before the company placed a valuation on it, it was taken off the market. His brother has applied to purchase it since then, within the last four years, and the company replied it was not selling the land, and that it was not for sale. In Section 5, Township 14 South, Range 7 West, there is probably 100 acres that is what is called Austin Howell flat, a big flat there, which is practically level. One can drive a wagon and team over all of it, and with very little work that could all be put in cultivation. In Section 23, Township 14 South, Range 7 West, there is what they call the railroad flat of 60 acres, that is practically as level as this floor. It is all just now and then scattering timber up on the benches, and could be cultivated, in fact, the land right by the side of it, is being cultivated up above. There is a ranch of 160 acres right by the side of it, and it was taken up three years ago, and was sold a short time ago for $3,500, right adjoining, the same kind of land. This 160 acres adjoining this Section 23 was sold this spring. Section 21 is good land, there is a lot of bottom land in Section 21 that is covered with cherry and vine maple, there has been an application made for that. A fellow went to work and built a house on it, but finally abandoned it on account of not being able to purchase that. This was within the last six or eight years. He does not know what reply was received to the application. This man did a little slashing and built a house on that, and the railroad company refused to sell. This tract was on the bottom, there was vine maple and cherry on it, there could be 25 or 30 acres rendered tillable easy enough, it is right on the river, on what they call the Salmonberry stream. In Section 29 there is some good land, a man by the name of Roland improved some of that in there and built a house, but on account of not being able to secure title to it he had to abandon it, this was within the last seven years. Roland tried to get 80 acres of this railroad land. He probably could have gotten 15 or 20 acres of tillable land by clearing, out of that 80, on the little creek there. There is Section 17, Township 14 South, Range 7 West, which has been sold by the railroad company. Section 7, Township 14 South, Range 8 West, has a lot of open land. The west half of the west half of Section 7, Township 14 South, Range 8 West, is practically all bottom land. The railroad company sold that a few years ago to a man by the name of Chastine, who made a couple of payments and was not able to complete his payments and let it go back to the company and forfeited his contract. He could have cultivated and made tillable at least half of that land. It lays right on the Alsea river bottom, right along the river, this man agreed to pay three dollars an acre for it, this must have been about 13 or 14 years ago that he entered into that contract. Section 15 has very little timber on it. Section 15, Township 14 South, Range 8 West is what they call principally rolling bench land, these open glades and benches, quite a portion of that could be cultivated, also Section 11 has a lot of land that can be cultivated, that is all in Township 14 South, Range 8 West. In Section 5 there is very little land which he would consider tillable land, some of it is a little steep, it is principally open, but a little steep. The soil is very good soil, but it is more adapted for grazing than for agriculture. They cultivate some of that steep land there, they cradled land adjoining this Section 5. In 14-5 there is a man by the name of Strake who bought 40 acres out of that section and has a nice orchard there, he and his family are living there on that place and he has cultivated land so steep that he had to mow it and then he was not able to put his team on it to haul that off, so he fixed it up and shoved it down the hill with a pitch fork, down to the road, where he could get it into his wagon. But he grows vetch there as high as a mans' head on that hill. He can slide his crop over his land, but he cannot drive over with his team, that is, with a wagon, they manage to plow that land, but it is pretty steep plowing, he had to plow it down hill, he can use a plow on it, but could not run a wagon or two-wheeled vehicle, he could not plow but one way either, he had to plow around those knolls. Some of them have reversible plows, hillside plows, and they will plow through and reverse and go back again, reversing the mold board on it. A portion of Section 3 has some good land, the north half of the north half of 3 is not very good, in fact it is too steep, the greater portion of it would be too steep. There is some little timber on it, but there is some good land right in on the bottom, on what they call Schoolhouse creek, that has some good land on it. A man made an application on that a few years ago by the name of Taylor, and he failed to make his payments and it reverted back. He could not say what he did agree to pay for it at that time, because it has been some 15 years ago, most of it at that time was about $2.50 an acre, that is about 15 years ago since he made application for the land, he could not say when that land was forfeited. Section 31, Township 13 South, Range 7 West, has a lot of open land on it. There is a very little open land in Section 13-7, with the exception—that is, that would be suitable for tillable land, the northeast of the northeast part of the township would be more adapted to grazing than it would be for tillage, that is in Township 13 South, Range 7 West, there was a heavy burn there a few years ago. There are some settlers in there. Recently, this last fall, settlers have moved in there, they have applied to the county to build them a county road in there and the county has already sent the county surveyor to survey it. There is a great demand, he thinks, for lands for settlement purposes and there has been a number of people in the office inquiring for land that they could get, as much as ten or fifteen acres which they could use for cultivation. Practically this land that these settlers went in on in that northwestern portion of the township there, had no value except for farming, agricultural and grazing purposes, there is no timber value there. That is not nearly as good land as some of the land that he has mentioned, and it is not so handy, accessible to get to, there is no road to it. There is no road running through there, but those sections he has mentioned, there is a county road right past them, or running through them. He does not know but what he has pretty well gone over a good portion of the townships, or sections there, that he is acquainted with, there might be some, but it would be scattering, so far as he knows now, that would be all of it.

"Q. Mr. Warfield, what has been the effect of the railroad company's failure to fulfill the conditions of this grant and sell this land to actual settlers in tracts of 160 acres, on the community there in which you are acquainted?

A. Why, I think it has retarded the country a good deal, on account of settling up by settlers, because there would have been many that would have been able to have gone on to this land and made homes there, for there are people making homes at the present time on land no better, and some not as good as a great portion of this land that is idle at the present time."

Whereupon witness testified that this hill land as compared with the valley land is the best fruit land that they have, and the reason for that is, that it is considered self-drained land, and not only that, but where this large fern is, the soil is more porous, and is more adapted for fruit raising than what it is on the lower clay or sandy soil, it is the best fruit land that they have. The trees are not infected as much with disease and pests in the hills as they are in the valleys, in fact, they are not affected in the Alsea valley anything like they are in the Willamette Valley, but very few pests in that section of the country. The farmers there in that section of the country that he is acquainted with have lots of goats. He has never raised any goats, but his brother has been in the goat business for a number of years, and is at the present time, he has something like 100 head and has run as many as 250 head. Goats are a productive animal from a financial standpoint, in this particular, on this tract he mentioned awhile ago, his brother homesteaded 160 acres adjoining that, and the river being not far from his house there, and he had a large foot log across the river, and he would put the nannies on one side of the river and the wethers on the other, and the last winter that he had goats in on that place, the wethers were never fed a bite from the time he sheared them. He said he salted them a time or two, but he made no provision for winter feeding. The climate is not severe in that country. The country is adapted to goat raising, they do well there, goats are palatable as a food, and besides they get the increase and the wool, and he considers a goat just as good as a sheep. Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified that his father and mother were married in the Alsea valley, and settled and made a home there about 45 years ago. There were a few settlers in the Alsea country at that time. The Alsea River empties into the Pacific Ocean and gets to be quite a stream by the time it reaches the coast, it has two prongs near the post office at Alsea, one the North Alsea and the other the South Alsea, and that heads in the Coast Range Mountains. These homes about which he has been speaking are all of them on the west slope of the Coast Range. There is a portion of this cleared land where there has been a big burn, which was there 50 or 60 years ago according to the traditions of the community. The town of Alsea, he would judge, has some 25 or 30 houses, three stores and a post office. There is no saw mill at the village there, but there is a saw mill in the valley, there is one not far away. He should judge that the Alsea Valley is from a mile to a mile and a half in the widest places. It does not widen out into tide land as it gets towards the ocean, not from the Alsea Valley. From the Alsea Valley down to the head of tide water it is narrow, and one might say, one farm after another along down the river. It is not wide down there. There is no tide land until one gets down on the Alsea Bay, there is not much tide land around the Alsea Bay, but very little. Alsea has had 25 or 30 houses within the last year or two. The Alsea Valley has not been isolated and cut off by itself there over the Coast Range, away from Corvallis and the valley before the last ten years, more than now, only within the last three or four years they have made more improvements in the roads. They do not raise the amount of grain in the Alsea Valley that they did twenty years ago. They turn it to stock raising and dairying. It is a clear stock and dairy country. These settlers that he says have gone in there on these hill lands have gone in there within the last 15 years, he should judge, with the exception of a few right down on the foothills adjoining the valley, what they would call probably along the river. Most of these railroad lands that he knew of having been sold, with which he is acquainted, in these various townships that he has described, were sold for about $2.50 an acre. These people who have applied to purchase in the last seven or eight years, have just applied for their prices, there are some of them who have made offers higher than $2.50 an acre for the lands. There were a number of these people living in the valley there who were bona fide applicants, but they were not attempting to get this land for $2.50 an acre under this Act of Congress. There is one man in beyond, by the name of Spencer, who has been living on a place there for 25 years before it was surveyed, and when it came to be surveyed, the railroad company got part of his house and a good portion of his orchard, and he made application to them, and then they would not sell to him, they have not put him out of his house, and he was living there, it was a homestead.

Q. You don't speak of that for the purpose of raising a prejudice against the railroad company?

A. Certainly not, not at all.

Q. You speak of that as an incident?

A. Just an incident.

Q. I don't refer to that kind of applicant. I refer to these people that are going out, applying for this railroad land, offering to pay $2.50 an acre for quarter sections of timber that range from eight to ten million feet to the quarter.

A. Yes.

Q. That is worth from $5000 to $10,000 today?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You haven't any of that class of people over there that are making these applications, have you?

A. Very few of them.

The even sections, or parts of the even sections, are all taken, and title has passed from the United States to them. The principal part of these settlers residing in Township 14 South, Ranges 7 and 8 West, reside on the lands, and in the south half of township 13 South, Range 8 West, there are some who do not reside on these lands. There are not any homesteads applied for, or proved up on, or commuted, in the timbered part of these sections, the even sections, where they do not now live on the land. There were a number of homesteads filed there in Township 13 South, Range 7 West, but they changed from that before they made their proof, and took it under the Timber and Stone Act, in Township 13 South, Range 7 West, where it was suitable for timber. The Timber and Stone Act was passed in 1878. Twenty years ago, of course, there was not the demand for these railroad lands that there is at the present time. At that time $1.25 to $2.50 an acre for these railroad lands would have been considered dear, of course, land values then were less than they are now. There were not the applications at that time, not like there are at the present time. In fact, there was not the demand for that railroad land at that time.

Q. Twenty years ago they could have got that land from the railroad company at probably $1.50 to $2 an acre, and it would have been dear at that, wouldn't it, looking at it at that time as it then appeared?

A. At that time it would have been considered, of course, land values then were less than they are now, yes.

Q. I understand, but at that time people didn't want to buy that land hardly at any price twenty years ago.

A. There were not the applications, no, at that time, not like there are at the present time.

Q. Just put yourself now in the position of the railroad company, and assume that the railroad company could only sell to actual settlers, in quantities not to exceed 160 acres, at a price not exceeding $2.50 an acre, isn't it true, to your knowledge, that from 1860, well, 1870, we will say, up to 1890 there was substantially no demand for that land except a few preferred quarters close to settlements?

A. Well, in fact there was not the demand for it at that time, and I presume there were not as many applications sent in on that at that time so much.

Q. In other words if the company would have been sitting around waiting for the actual settler to come, for about twenty years he would not be coming, would he, even at any price, from 1870 now down to 1890?

A. Of course, I don't know the conditions so much at that time, because that was really before I was at an age to take much interest in land values.

Q. I know, but your knowledge is based upon what has happened since?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you know that up to 1890 there wasn't any demand for this railroad land of consequence?

A. Not so much as there has been in the last eighteen—sixteen or eighteen years.

Q. Yes, and most of that demand has been in the last eight or ten years? The bulk of the demand for these lands has arisen in the last eight or ten years? That is true, isn't it?

A. More so in the last fifteen years, yes.

Q. Prior to that time though there wasn't much demand for that land?

A. Not so much, no, because the condition of the roads then at that time was not good there.

Q. Well, don't you know, Mr. Warfield, as a resident of Oregon, that the lands in the mountains or in the timber or in the foothills from 1870 up to 1890 were practically unsought for any purpose, excepting along the streams and in the old settled parts, like your father's place over there on the Alsea? Now, isn't that historically true?

A. Well, to a great extent it is, yes.

RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.

Q. Now, Mr. Warfield, these people that have applied for land that you are acquainted with, over there in 14 south 7 and 8 west, they were people who sought the lands for purposes of settlement and agriculture, as I understand from your testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. People who resided in that country?

A. Yes. There were a great many that I know of throughout the valley there that made applications for land there.

Q. They were not any timber speculators or people desirous only of procuring timber that might be on the land?

A. Not adjoining what we call the Alsea valley, or tributary near there. Of course, there has been applications on some of the timbered land through there. It has been filed.

Q. What have been the prices asked over there, do you know, in the last ten years on that land by that railroad company?

Mr. Fenton: By the railroad company?

Mr. Rabb: Yes, prior to the time that it was withdrawn from sale.

A. Before it was withdrawn from sale there was, for instance, Mr. Banton, Mr. Wrenn and Mr. Peak and Mr. Sapp a number of them that had settled on some land there before it was surveyed, and the railroad company asked them $7.50 an acre for this land. That was before it was withdrawn from sale. And so they carried this up—that has been going on now for, I should judge, about sixteen years. They won out here a few years ago."

Whereupon witness testified, that there were settlers on that land prior to the original survey, the man that the line ran through his house and orchard was D. R. Spencer, who attempted to purchase it from the railroad company, and the company would not sell it to him, that was some 15 or 16 years ago, recently after it was surveyed, when the patent was issued or the survey was made. The survey was made about some 18 or 19 years ago. He was a farmer, engaged in farming that land, and is living there at the present time. The settlements in this country were first made along the roads, which generally followed the rivers, and since that time these settlements have drifted back to what they call the bench lands, the upper land, gone up from the bottom lands on to the hills. He is not acquainted with the demand which was made of the railroad company between 1870 and 1890, not so much owing to the demand, because he has never himself made any application for the land, being situated as he was, and not able to go on the land. The only demand that he knew about was such as he would hear of neighbors applying to purchase the lands. In fact he knows that his brother has tried to buy that land adjoining him there, and also a younger brother tried to buy land in Section 23, Township 14 South, Range 8 West, and the company refused to sell that. They wanted that land for agricultural purposes. His brother, as he has stated, cultivated a portion of that forty and improved it. He has testified that one brother applied for the land adjoining his homestead, that was after he had taken his homestead. His brother applied to purchase that land within the last six years. This is farming land, and is the tract he spoke of awhile ago, in what they call the Railroad Flat, it is practically level, just now and then a scattering tree on that, it is what they would call farming land, because it can all be farmed, every bit of it. Whereupon on recross examination, witness testified, that every thing is called a farm over there, every 160 acres that is taken that may some day be cleared, in a way, some of them would call a very small tract, one might say, their farm, because they use that for raising their feed for dairying. It is a great dairy country. If a man had 160 acres, and there were three acres that were cleared, he would say he had a farm, generally like he was speaking awhile ago of the bench land. Whereupon on redirect examination witness testified, that Corvallis is one of the greatest dairying centers in Oregon, one of the largest creameries in the state, outside of Portland, is at Corvallis. The celebrated Corvallis butter is made at Corvallis, and they have a creamery in the Alsea Valley. Township 14 South, Ranges 7 and 8 West, is more or less used for dairying, they have a creamery in there, they have a stock company and there are 100 stockholders in that creamery. They have a creamery right there and they ship their butter to Portland. They have wagons going out and collecting the cream. This land that he has testified about is generally well adapted for dairying purposes. In fact, the clover grows right on the highest lands there. They raise some of the best clover there is in the valley on that land. The altitude of none of this land is too high for dairying purposes, excepting what he was speaking of in the south half of Township 13 South, Range 8 West, up there in Sections 20 and 21, there was a man drove his dairy cows up there this last summer, and dairied all summer there, but in the winter time the snow gets a little too deep for it to be practical. If he had hay there he could winter his stock there, if he had feed there. These homesteaders up there in the even sections are all making a living on their lands, all that have been in there any time, long enough to get any improvements made so as they can raise feed for their stock.

Whereupon, I. B. SPIKER, a witness called on behalf of complainant, being duly sworn, testified, that he is twenty-eight years old, and the majority of his time he has made his home at Glendale, Douglas county, Oregon, where his folks live. He has lived in Douglas county ten years, and it was ten years ago when he came to Oregon with his father. His father bought a ranch at Oakland, Oregon, of four hundred and eighty acres, when he came here, it had been an old improved ranch. They cultivated part of it, but used it principally for a stock ranch. It was on the mountain side, on the slope of the mountain side, and they practically used it for stock ranch. They did not aim to farm to any extent on it, only just raise what hay and like of that they wanted for farming purposes. That land was rough, what they call rolling land, it was just kind of on the hillsides, might be on the slope. It was on the slope of the mountain side and it was rolling, and there were draws running through it. There was some timber, what one might call timber or brush on it. Nearly all that country in there, not all of it, but on this place in particular there was young growth fir from four to ten or twelve inches in diameter. His father cultivated about seventy-five acres, raised hay, but did not thresh any, they cut it all for hay for the stock they kept on the place, it was oat hay and vetch. They raised wheat hay, wheat and barley. They raised all the vegetables that they needed, and raised fruits on that land—all kinds of fruits there, apples, pears, peaches, plums and grapes. He does not know how long that land had been occupied for farming purposes exactly, but it had been taken up quite a while ago. There were three homesteads there and his father bought the three of them, and like old Oregonians, they had done practically nothing, only lived there on what was coming in easy, and that was all there was ever done on it. There is railroad land on the north and south of this place, but he could not say as to the sections because he was never very familiar with the sections. One piece of that railroad land adjoining the farming land that is on his father's place is just like the rest of the land there. It is good black soil, suitable for farming purposes, could be plowed just the same as the rest of it is there alongside of it. There are eighty acres in that piece of railroad land on the one side there, and on the other side he believes there are a hundred and twenty acres, but would not be sure. That is in township 24, he believes, range 6, but could not be sure, he does not know the sections. His father's place is about eight miles from Oakland northwest, and Isadora is north of Copeland five miles by sections, in township 24, range 5 west. He thought it was about a mile and a half west from Isadora, it was on an even section, was homesteaded. The first four or five years they were near Oakland, they lived on the farm there all the time. The map shows some railroad land there that has been deeded. There is some deeded land adjoining the ranch there, railroad land, in section 13 and in several of the other sections there are smaller parcels. In township 24 south, range 5 west, the railroad company has, in section 3, eighty acres, in 29, twenty-eight and forty-one hundredths acres, in 31, two hundred thirty-six and seventy-three hundredths acres, and in 35, eighty acres, that is all the railroad land in that township unsold, as shown by the map. He has been engaged in the farming business and is acquainted with the farming conditions in Douglas County, in his experience there on the farm. Referring to "Defendants' Exhibit 259," the country right in there at Isadora, where his father lived, he has been over, he has hunted sheep and cattle and the like of that all through that country. Of course, all these corners and sections, he never took any particular interest in them, because that was not interesting to him. But so far as this country is concerned in township 24 south, range 6 west, he has been all over this land and country in that township, he would not say over all the township either, because there might be some of it he had not been over, but take it in general, he has been all through there down to the Umpqua river. The Umpqua river is a pretty crooked river, pointing to the land indicating township, 24 south, range 6 west. He has been over that land sufficiently to acquaint himself with the general formation and character of the soil, referring to the lands just described in township 24 south, range 6 west, and extending into range 7 west, to the Umpqua river as shown on "Defendants' Exhibit 259." He has been over that land a good deal, knows the lay of the land to a certain extent, and what is on it, and what they do in there. He would judge that from 50 to 75 per cent, somewhere in that neighborhood, of that land could be rendered suitable for cultivation, in his opinion, after any timber or any other growths that may be on the land are removed and the land cleared, it is rolling land, it is not level land. That country is not level by any means, but then the majority of people use that land who have it in shape to use. That land as compared with his father's place is practically just the same. It is all rolling land and the country is practically the same all the way through there, there are hills and canyons. There are settlers on nearly all those even sections in there that are not deeded. There is some of that land which has been deeded, sometimes when some of that land was taken for timber, they entered it under the Timber and Stone Act, and the Timber and Stone entries were deeded. The settlers there have stock, and raise stock and turkeys, and things like that. Sheep and goats are what they principally make their living off of. They cultivate the lands for their own use. Wherever they want lands they need to cultivate, sufficient to get what produce they want from it, for their stock and the like of that, they cultivate the lands and raise hay on them for their stock that they have there, and their garden stuff, and such like that, and have little orchards. They raise any kind of grain that they have a mind to sow—wheat, oats, barley and rye, and have all kinds of fruit—apples, pears, peaches, plums, cherries. That is not a heavily timbered country, it is not what one would call heavy timber, there is a lot of underbrush and young growth which has timber in it, but it is not an unbroken forest, it is not what one would call a solid belt of timber, anything like that, it is spotted, some places there are large trees, and some places there are small ones. In township 32 south, range 7 west, and township 33 south, range 6 west, shown on this map of the lands covered with the green markings, he is acquainted with that. He has lived at Glendale for the past seven or eight years, that is, his folks have lived there, and he has been there the majority of the time—and he has been around in that country and knows it in general. He does not know it as to any particular sections, to point the sections out, he does not know just how the sections lay. He became acquainted with that country by driving around over the country there, on the wagon roads. He used to drive a livery team there, and drove around that country and got acquainted with it in that manner. He has been around in there some and has a general acquaintance with the lands in those townships. On the creeks, there are lots of level bottom lands, but when one gets off those creeks he will find land that is rolling, and probably little flat places on top of ridges, or benches—he does not know which one would call it—but kind of flat places. One could probably go up a hill a ways, and then would strike a flat or something like that, and on those places, as a rule, there is lots of good soil. One will find little spots in there, probably from an acre to three or four acres, which have very good grass on and the like of that. Then in the burns, where the brush happens to be burned off or something like that, they grow good grass. Around in there, if the brush and timber were removed in that country upon any of this land, he believes 50 per cent would be tillable land if it were cleared up so a man could work it. It is not so rough but what it can be worked. He is acquainted with the lands in township 25 south, range 7 west, north and west of Stephens, along the railroad track, and he has been along the railroad track several times over a wagon road. A good many times he has traveled over that. A good deal of that land, he notices, has been taken up and was lost to the grant by reason of prior entries, indicated by the yellow markings on this map, "Defendants' Exhibit 259." He is acquainted with these tracts near the railroad that are marked in green, south of Oakland, which is on a hill. There is a divide about two miles and a half above Isadora, which is north. The tract that he is speaking of is south. That country in there has young growth trees, from eight to ten inches through. There is some of that land there which is deeded land, upon which they have cut cordwood and piling and stuff like that. But as to that one piece in particular, he never was on it to his knowledge but then that is what that is, but it is young growth timber, what they call second growth. That has yellow land there in all that township except that tract, showing that the railroad company lost it by reason of prior entry. Now, in township 32 south, range 7 west, there are settlers there, that country is all settled up in there. It seems as though every place that that land is not deeded in that country, there are settlers on it, it seems as though people want to get hold of land all the time. There is no land in that neighborhood that anyone seems to know of that is government land, or anything else that can be gotten now excepting what is in the Reserve. There is some government land, some in the Reserve there, quite a lot of it, there is no vacant land at all, there might possibly be an eighty or something like that once in a while, but they are very scare. If these lands were divided into one hundred and sixty acre tracts, in his opinion that average would hold good generally as to those hundred and sixty acre tracts.

Q. In your opinion, Mr. Spiker, in these communities that you are acquainted with, what has been the effect of the railroad company's failure to fulfill the conditions of this grant and sell the land to actual settlers at $2.50 an acre—the effect upon the community?

A. The way the majority of the people seem to think, the way the land is and everything like that, I don't think it would be any doubt but what it wouldn't be but a short time till the large majority of that land would be occupied by people.

Whereupon witness testified that there would be people who wanted to have homes and make a living off of it, and would be willing to settle on this railroad land. At the present time, it is nearly impossible for a man to get hold of a piece of land at a moderate price, one can buy all the land he wants, if he has plenty of money and wants to pay the big prices that land is worth. He believes that it was in 1907 that he made an application to get some railroad land in the Kellogg district on the Umpqua—not on the river. He has forgotten the price of it because he did not get any reply to his inquiry, he couldn't get it. That was in 1907, he believes it was, and he has forgotten all about it. He knows the character of that land and was on it.

It is rolling land and there was some of it that had this young growth fir on, and some had large trees on—trees among it—and then there were some open spots. He thought at the time he was on it that if he had it cleared up, there would be a hundred acres that could be farmed on it. The young growth of fir, grows pretty thick on it. Of course, it is small but it is thick, and to start in with, a person gets that timber cut down and the ground seeded for about five dollars an acre, and it then makes good grazing land, and afterwards the stumps come out easy. It is not good merchantable timber, that young, and take it in that country, the young growth timber is considered worthless on the ground at the present time, of course, there will be a time when it will be worth money, he expects, but at the present time it is a detriment to the country, because there is no pasture land on it, and it is just standing there, and one could not pay his taxes on it if one would leave it standing there, unless one would wait and consider the growth of the timber on it. The increase in the value of the lands would pay the cost of keeping it all right enough, if a man wanted to keep it and had it so he could keep it. There will be a time when it will be worth something all right. He was intending to use that land for a kind of home, and a stock country, it seems like as though everybody figures on stock, there is really more money in stock. Take lots of this bottom land, a man can make more out of it by running stock on it than he can by farming it. He made an application through a lawyer in Roseburg, and paid him a fee—thinks he paid him five dollars but would not be certain, he thinks it was five dollars he paid him for making his application. There were several of them who wanted to get hold of some land in that country where they would be in there, together.

Whereupon, upon cross examination, witness testified, that the lawyers he applied to were Orcutt and Fullerton, living at Roseburg. He knew how to select the quarter section because they were in there on the land. About that time they were told about this country being opened in there, and they thought they could get some homesteads in there or buy that land, and he and another man went in there and looked it over. The other man was not a cruiser but was a man who wanted to get some land in there too, and they both went in there together. He would judge that this land was about forty or fifty miles, something in that neighborhood, from Roseburg, on the Umpqua. The Umpqua runs together in there, they fork down the other side of Roseburg, and they both empty in together. It was west of the forks of the Umpqua. Kellogg is west from Roseburg. He might have said that it was east of Roseburg, but that was mistaken if he did say so. It was not over on the headwaters of the Smith River, it was in the Coast Range.

Q. It was in about the best belt of timber there is in western Douglas County, wasn't it?

A. Well no, I hardly think so.

Q. Well, it was good timber land, wasn't it?

A. Well, some of it has good timber, yes. There are some large trees.

Q. How much timber was there, saw timber, on this quarter section that you picked out, in your judgment?

A. Well, I am no judge of timber, that is, to estimate or anything like that.

Q. Did you have an estimate?

A. No.

Q. Did you think about the timber at all when you were going out there to find this quarter?

A. Well, not any more than anybody else. I didn't know what we were going to find when we went in there.

Q. Well, most anybody else would have been looking for timber, wouldn't they, about that time?

A. Why, there were lots of people that was taking timber wherever they could get it.

Q. There was a timber rush, as some of the witnesses have said, about that time, wasn't there?

A. Yes, that is about the time there was lots of timber taken.

Q. And they thought they could get these railroad lands for $2.50 an acre for that purpose among the rest, didn't they?

A. Well, that might have been some people's ideas, all right enough.

Q. Well now, just be square, Mr. Spiker, and tell the real fact. Weren't there several thousand applications worked up there in Douglas County, by Leavengood and Orcutt and the rest of the people out there, and you went in at five dollars a head, and sent your application after you had gone out and found where you wanted to locate? Now, isn't that the fact about it?

A. Well, I don't know as to the facts of the other people; but after this other man and I went in there and looked the country over, why that country is just practically—they talked about very good timber; of course I am no cruiser or anything like that; all I can tell I can tell when I see sticks on the ground, but as far as knowing how much is in them I don't know anything about that.

Q. You can tell when you see a tree that is 150 feet high and 6 feet at the butt, can't you?

A. Oh yes, I know one of those from a small one all right enough.

Q. You recognize one of those from young growth that is six inches at the butt and 25 feet high, couldn't you?

A. Oh yes, I could tell that much.

Q. Don't you think as a simple layman that you could give a pretty good guess whether a quarter section was good for timber or whether it was good for farming, to plow without the timber? Couldn't you tell that?

A. Well, that was owing to how much they would value this timber at.

Q. Well, you wouldn't have to be a blind man to tell the difference between a piece of land that was chiefly valuable for timber and a piece of land that in its present state was chiefly valuable for agriculture, would you?

A. Well, not at the way it would stand, a person could easily tell that.

Q. Did you make a written statement to the government inspector of what your testimony would be in this case—sign a written statement?

A. Yes.

Whereupon witness testified, that he forgets the name of the inspector, and he has not the statement he made with him. He does not remember the description of the quarter section that he applied to purchase at two dollars and a half an acre through his attorneys, but referring to the copy of the affidavit furnished to counsel by counsel for the Government, it was in township 24 south, range 7 west, Willamette Meridian, to the best of his knowledge. He offered to pay the Railroad Company two dollars and a half an acre under this Act of Congress which he had heard about. He does not know that there was any particular value put on that land that he applied to purchase. It was worth enough, in his judgment, so that if a man wanted to make a home, he could make a home in there. It was not worth—it would not be worth in his judgment, at that time, three thousand dollars or five thousand dollars. One could buy pretty good timber at that time for less than three thousand dollars. He does not know if it was worth two thousand dollars, if he could have gotten title to it. It might have been, if he could have found somebody who would have bought it, it possibly would have been.

Q. I know, it might have been worth $10,000, depending upon the amount of timber?

A. Yes.

Q. But what was it worth in your judgment?

A. Well, I don't know hardly how to answer a question like that.

Q. It was clearly worth $400, what you offered to pay for it, wasn't it?

A. Yes, it was worth that much, or a person wouldn't probably have wanted it.

Q. It was probably worth $1000. You were safe in figuring it worth $1000, weren't you?

A. Why, I should think it would be worth $1000. It might be worth more, as far as that is concerned.

Q. Didn't that quarter section have three million feet of saw timber on it?

A. Well, now, I don't know as to that. I couldn't say that, because I don't know.

Q. You couldn't' say whether it did or not?

A. No.

Whereupon witness testified, that the young growth was second growth fir, and was thick and stood practically thick on the ground so that there was nothing else that would grow in under them, the young growth shades the ground. He does not think the second growth trees, on an average, would be as high as 100 feet, but would be something in the neighborhood of 50 to 75, and from six inches up to eighteen inches at the butt. He has followed farming as a rule the majority of the time, but he is not in that business now and is not on any farm now. He was in the butcher business at the time he was in Glendale riding around on the roads there, and when he was on his father's farm there about a mile and a half west of Isadora, he was just working on the ranch. His father did not take up that land as a homestead, but bought it from a fellow by the name of Sam Whittaker. His father had 480 acres, and he thinks he paid in the neighborhood of about twenty-one or twenty-two hundred dollars at that time, but would not be certain. That land is now worth probably four thousand dollars. There is about seventy or seventy-five acres in cultivation on the farm, and when his father bought it there was just about the same. Those from whom he bought had never cultivated it, but his father had cleared up some of it, cleared up part of it. He would judge they had cleared up fifteen acres on the place since they bought it, which would make from seventy to seventy-five acres in all cleared. He could not say whether that was an old settled place, he does not think it was a donation land claim, because there were three different people who owned that land as homesteads. He thinks there were three different homesteads filed on it, but does not know when these homesteads were taken.

Q. It was in the early settlement of the country, wasn't it?

A. If it had been very early, they would have put a donation claim on it instead of taking single claims, would they not?

Q. Not necessarily. The homestead act was passed in 1862.

A. Yes.

Q. About six years before this land grant took effect out there in that section.

A. Well, it might have been settled there for quite a while.

Q. If it was 1862, that would be fifty years ago, wouldn't it?

A. Yes. I have heard them say—I have heard people say in that country that they rode over that country there when this young growth stuff that is growing up all over the country now was all prairies.

Q. Yes, in other words, this young fir has grown up within the knowledge of the white settlers, for the reason that before that time the Indians burned the grass and kept it down?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And wherever the timber has been allowed to grow, within the memory of white men, in that section of the country, this young fir has grown from nothing up to twenty inches at the butt, hasn't it?

A. Yes, I guess it has.

Q. Within the memory of white men now living?

A. Yes, that is the way I understand it.

Q. Are you one of the interveners in this suit, represented by Mr. Leavengood or any other attorneys?

A. No.

Q. You haven't brought any suit to enforce your application to purchase this railroad quarter?

A. No.

Q. Now, did you ever take a homestead?

A. Why, I filed on a homestead, yes.

Q. Where was that homestead that you filed on, in what section, township and range?

A. It was in township 32, range 11 west.

Q. Is that in a timbered belt?

A. Yes, there is timber in that country in places, like everywhere.

Q. Was this piece of land that you filed on an open farm, cleared land, or was it a timbered quarter?

A. No, there was timber on part of it and part of it was burned off.

Q. Did you ever live on it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you living on it now?

A. No, sir.

Q. When did you file on it?

A. I believe it was in 1906 when I filed on it.

Q. Did you make final proof?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you let it go?

A. Why, they returned my filing. The railroad company returned my filing. It was on railroad land.

Q. You mean you applied to purchase a railroad quarter?

A. No, it was not to purchase—I filed on it.

Q. How do you mean you filed on it? How could you file on it?

A. Well, I don't know as to that, but they accepted my money, and kept my money for about two or three years, and then returned it to me.

Q. And you kept the money?

A. Well, when they returned it to me, why shouldn't I?

Q. Do you still claim the land?

A. No, sir.

Q. So the trade was off?

A. Yes, certainly.

Q. Did you offer them $2.50 an acre, when you made this filing, as you say?

A. No, it was supposed to be filed on there at that time. There was no offer made at all for it. It was filed on.

Q. How do you mean filing? What did you do to file on a piece of railroad land?

A. Well, there was I and there was a couple more boys; it was unsurveyed land when we first located it.

Q. Unsurveyed?

A. Unsurveyed land; and we went in there and we settled in there.

Q. What do you mean by settled?

A. We went in and made our homes and improvements in there.

Q. That is you took along some coffee and provisions and bacon, and you stayed all night?

A. Well, the necessary stuff for a man to live on in there.

Q. Yes, for a day or two?

A. Well, I guess it was more. I put in the majority of my time for two years in there.

Q. Settling on this piece of land?

A. Settling on that piece of land, which I thought was mine.

Q. I see. Well, what did you do now on this quarter section? Just tell us?

A. Well, I had my house built there on it.

Q. How big a house and what was it out of?

A. It was a house about 14 feet square—12 by 14.

Q. Built out of shakes?

A. Built out of logs.

Q. Built out of shakes that were made there?

A. No, sir, it was made out of logs?

Q. Well, you covered it with shakes, didn't you?

A. Yes, I covered it with shakes.

Q. Made right off the ground?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you furnish it?

A. Yes, sir, we had our stove and our beds.

Q. Did you have your wife with you?

A. No, sir, I am not married yet.

Q. Oh. Well then, what did you do while you were out there? What kind of work did you do on the place?

A. Why, I worked around there trying to fix things up to make something out of it, and make a home there. While we were in there we was working there all the time on our land.

Q. How much did you clear of this 160 acres and put in cultivation.

A. Why, I didn't—I had about two acres right there where my house was, and there was in the neighborhood of sixty acres of a burn on it.

Q. Did you sow that sixty acres to something?

A. No, sir, it was all—been wild grass growed right there.

Q. Did you have some stock in there?

A. Yes, I had my horses in there was all.

Q. You didn't turn your horses loose in the country, did you, and let them go in there?

A. Yes.

Q. Let them range in there. Were you raising stock horses?

A. No.

Q. You just had a team, you mean?

A. Just had saddle horses in there.

Q. You just pastured your saddle horses? Did you stake them out?

A. No, sir.

Q. You just let them go out in the woods?

A. Yes, sir, turned them out there on that grass. They wasn't very apt to leave it.

Q. You didn't have any cattle, did you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any hogs?

A. No.

Q. Some chickens?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you raise any potatoes?

A. Yes.

Q. How many bushels of potatoes did you raise?

A. Oh, I don't know. I raised five sacks in there one year on a little patch.

Q. And finally you gave up these extensive improvements and left that farm and went back to Glendale?

A. Why, when my filing was returned to me, there was no use for me to stay there when I had no chance to get it.

Q. Well, that is what you did—you went back to Glendale?

A. Yes.

Q. And your associates that went out there, they went back to Glendale, or went somewhere else?

A. Wherever they—I don't know just where they went to.

Q. Now, what in your judgment, Mr. Spiker, is this unsold land that you are acquainted with in Douglas County belonging to the railroad company, in these townships that you have been over—what in your judgment is it worth an acre today, or have you any judgment on that subject?

A. No, I haven't, because I never made any estimate of land. In fact, I know a very little bit about the value of land.

Q. You don't know much about land anyway, do you?

A. Well, as far as the prices are concerned, why, I don't. But I think that, to know a piece of land when I see it, I consider I know that much about it.

Q. But you wouldn't know what price to put on these unsold railroad lands from the knowledge that you have of it?

A. No, I wouldn't. I wouldn't know the real value of it.

Whereupon, upon redirect examination, witness testified, that he does not know how long this piece of land that his father had, these three homesteads, four hundred and eighty acres, had been settled. This homestead that he took or attempted to take, to file on, he went out there and settled on unsurveyed land and made a filing in the local United States land office at Roseburg, and when the land was surveyed it was discovered that instead of being government land it was part of this grant and his filing was, therefore refused, that is the way that he understands it. He was uncertain at all times as to whether he could maintain his title to the land. There was an uncertainty because it seemed at that time the majority of the people seemed to think, outside of the twenty mile railroad limit, if he understood it right, they didn't seem to know whether the railroad company really had good title to the other extension of the limit or not, that is the indemnity limit. At that time, the majority of the people seemed to have their doubts but what maybe a person could file on that land and get it, and he was just outside of the railroad limit. He and his associates wanted that land, they considered that they were going to make a stock ranch out of it, and of course it had to be agricultural land. It has to be agricultural land before one can make a stock ranch out of it. He did not attempt to buy it merely to obtain the timber that was on it for speculation, that was not the idea at all.

Whereupon W. B. SHERMAN, called as a witness on behalf of complainant being duly sworn testified that he is forty-eight years old and resides in Josephine County, Oregon and has so resided about ten years. Prior to that time he lived in Michigan and was born in that State. He has engaged in the land business since he came to Oregon in Josephine and Jackson Counties, very little in Douglas County and he is familiar to quite an extent with the lands in Josephine County. He is acquainted quite extensively in that county, has bought and sold a good deal of land. With the exception of that part of the County which is included within the Forest Reserve, he is acquainted in a general way with the lands in Josephine County and has spent ten years nearly all the time on these lands, and that applies largely to the northwestern part of Jackson County. Speaking geographically he has been in all of the townships of Josephine County, with the exception of the Forest Reserve and has made a study of the soil and climatic conditions in that county and that also applies with reference to this tract in the northwestern part of Jackson County. He is more familiar in five townships in the northwestern part of Jackson County, township 33, Ranges 2, 3 and 4 west and township 34, Ranges 3 and 4 west. He is well acquainted with all of these townships and in a general way with the townships adjoining them. His purpose in going out over these lands in Josephine County was because he was in the land business, inspecting lands and showing them to purchasers and buying and selling lands. He made his way through the county spending most of his time on lands with a compass, that is, a portion of it, and part of it on the wagon roads and trails using automobiles, horses and buggies in making his trips through the County, the different usual ways of traveling. About seventy-five percent of his time during these ten years has been occupied in that general way out in the field. He has interested himself in the development of that country, has promoted the fruit business, and the poultry business more especially, the grape business and orchard business and has been connected with commercial clubs. He organized first the Grants Pass Mining Association, second, the Grants Pass Athletic Club, third, the Grants Pass Commercial Club, fourth, the Grants Pass Poultry Association, the Josephine County Poultry Association, fifth, the Josephine County Good Roads Association and the Southern Oregon Development League, he was alone in the Tokay Grape Association. These various bodies, with the exception of the Athletic Club have been engaged in demonstrating, developing and promoting the development of the resources of that country. He is familiar with the character of the soil, the lay of the land and the other climatic conditions belonging generally in this area that he has described and is familiar in a general way with the history of the development of the resources of that district since he took up his residence at Grants Pass and with the manner in which the Railroad Company has disposed of or held these railroad lands in that district. There are three different classes of soil, alluvial soil, red soil and brown soil, or commonly known as granite soil. The brown soil is commonly known as granite soil, sometimes called decomposed granite and porphyry. He thinks the proportion is about one-third of each. The alluvial soil is principally along the river bottoms, not always, but practically speaking. One finds the red soil on the first bench and part of the hill lands and the granite soil on the first bench and part of the hill lands. The red soil is intermingled with the granite or brown soil in places. In a general way, that district, speaking generally, is rolling although they have a great deal of level lands, he is speaking of lands outside of the Forest Reserve. By level lands are meant comparatively level lands, there is no real prairie in that country. He is speaking of Jackson and Josephine counties. He would consider that fifty percent of the land with which he is acquainted in these two counties is comparatively speaking, level, these lands that are rolling and which he does not include as comparatively level, can be subjected to cultivation. There are some lands there which are too rough to be cultivated. He would say that in that general district about thirty to thirty five percent are so rough that they cannot be cultivated, or there are other obstacles to the cultivation of the lands so that they cannot be cultivated either on account of their roughness or barrenness, or their general conditions which cannot be overcome. Speaking of that country from a matter of townships, the rolling land and the level land and rough land that cannot be cultivated, are intermingled. Most of these lands, other than the thirty or thirty five percent that he had described as being too rough or otherwise unsuited for cultivation, are in his judgment productive lands and can be subjected to profitable cultivation. The altitudes in that district vary from 1,000 feet above sea level to 2,500 feet above sea level and a few points run to 4,000 feet above sea level. These various types of land, taking up first the alluvial soil, can be used for all kinds of fruit, vegetables, hays and grasses and general farming purposes and they raise some grain, although these lands are more valuable for other purposes than they are for grain. The red soil on the benches and rolling lands are very valuable for fruit and vegetables. For some crops, that land is more valuable than the lands with the alluvial soil and some not so valuable, but speaking in a general way, they are about the same value and about the same can be produced from them in the way of profit. The brown soil, or decomposed granite soil, can be used for fruit and vegetables, grasses, alfalfa and kale and that soil can be used successfully without irrigation, nearly all of those hill lands are sub-irrigated, by that he means, that the brown soil or decomposed granite and porphyry and nearly the entire district has water under it—from six to eighteen feet is as deep as one would have to go to get water. A man on a small tract, can dig wells and irrigate five or ten acres and make good money out of it without getting water from any other locality. Irrigation is not necessary or indispensable in order to make profitable use of that land for agricultural and horticultural purposes, they can raise one crop of garden stuff on any of that soil the same as they do in other localities, but to raise three or four crops on one piece of ground the same year, it is necessary to have water on some of it and he believes that is generally true all over the western country, as far as his knowledge and information extend, excepting that in other localities, a great many other localities, they cannot raise the second or third crop, as he understands it, even with water. In going over the district he found nine miles out of Grants Pass, a vineyard of about forty acres. After keeping track of that for a term of years he decided that the grape business was a very profitable one for the district and so he decided to form a grape industry. He started in by buying lands that were favorably situated and located for the purpose, cleared them, plowed them and planted them and induced other people to do the same. He found that these grapes growing in the forty acre vineyard of which he speaks were on the south hill slope, red soil, and he bought and cleared and set out grapes on red soil, south hill slope largely, adjoining the city limits, that is, the tract adjoins the city limits of Grants Pass. He has a vineyard there of twelve acres, set out three years ago, it will be four years in the spring of 1913. These grapes are bearing, they commenced to bear some grapes the second year and got a commercial crop the third year and will increase after the third year until probably ten or fifteen years. Pruned in the proper way, it has never been demonstrated as to how long grape vines will live. The first grapes that were pruned to a stump, as they call it, grew up about twenty four inches and headed there. The first grapevines, as he understands, were pruned that way about three hundred years ago and they are still producing a good crop, but he does not mean that this occurred in Josephine County. He has demonstrated that tokays, and malagas will grow on these lands. The Concord does as well or better on the north hill slope. The product of the tokay grape compared with tokay grapes grown elsewhere is of a very much better quality in their district than in any other part of the United States. There are two districts in the United States where tokay grapes have been grown successfully, the Grants Pass District and portions of California. The tokay grapes grown in Josephine County are superior to the California tokay grapes in color and keeping and shipping qualities, they are a very much firmer grape and will stand shipment better. In packing them, they put fifty to sixty pounds weight in pressing the tops of the crates down before they nail them. If the same thing were done with the California grape, it would ruin the entire package and it would have to be thrown away. The grapes produced in the Josephine County country have come in competition with California tokays in the Portland markets and they get a higher price for their grapes than is paid for the California grapes. He has seen places where they sell them retail, in Portland at five cents a pound more. They get from twenty five to fifty cents a crate more for them selling at wholesale. The 40 acre vineyard in Josephine County is thirty two years old but these other vineyards are three years old. About ten or fifteen people planted commercial vineyards in Josephine County three years ago. This was their first year's crop harvested this year and marketed locally and in Portland. The experiment of growing these grapes on the brown or granite soil, has been made in the district within his personal knowledge and he has observed that the result was good. It is just as good as the red soil, if any difference better. The brown soil produces fruit and vegetables of higher grade than the red soil or the river bottom soil. The flavor is better and the keeping quality is better and the color is better. Grapes, fruit and vegetables grown on the hillsides are better than similar products grown in lower altitudes. He does not know the scientific reason or explanation of that result, but does know that that condition exists all over the country. As a rule the hill lands produce better fruit, better quality than the river bottom lands. He understands the same is true of oranges and lemons and nearly all classes of fruits. Nearly all districts have first developed the river bottom lands and then later on, the hill lands. Atmospheric conditions in the hill lands, in the higher altitudes, preclude certain blights that are found in the lower altitudes, in the bottom lands, including what they describe as sap souring. They also have more moisture higher up than they have on the lower lands, which has something to do with it, meaning moisture from sub-irrigation and rainfall both. The cultivation of the roots of the grape vines, brings the moisture up but artificial irrigation is not essential to the growing of grapes. Their grapes are better without artificial irrigaton, that is the trouble with California, that is the difference between the Oregon tokay and the California tokay. They irrigate the California tokay which makes them an inferior grape to the non-irrigated grape. The California tokay when cut with a sharp knife, the juice runs out, the Oregon tokay one can slice off into thin wafers and handle these wafers with a knife like a piece of beef, the tissue of the Oregon grape is much firmer than the tissue of the California grape, owing to that particular point, as he understands it. The flavor of the Oregon grape is good, it is as good as the California grape. The malaga grape has not been experimented with or grown as extensively as the tokay in that district, but wherever there is a malaga growing, it is doing well and they get splendid fruit from it, splendid results and no other districts in the United States grow malagas, as he understands it. They are just starting in to grow malagas there, until this year there was but a small amount of malagas in that locality, and now they have several different men who have a few acres each. All of the three year old stuff is bearing and he has seen the fruit himself, they had them this year. He started in about four years ago exploiting the growing of tokay grapes in Josephine County, and spent most of his time and energy with the home people getting them into the industry. He took various ways of doing it. One thing he did, he gave the school children throughout the county a grape vine each, rooted vine, and a red stake to stick up by it, and then he gave prizes for the pupils who would raise the most vines the first year, the most length of vines. He gave out over 7,000 vines. They were not all given to school children, but after putting them in the schools, all over the county, he had two men on the streets giving them to everyone that came along that would take them and plant them, wrapping them up one or a dozen or two dozen, just as many as they would take. He gave away thousands of them. He had men for a week during planting season that did nothing but give away grape vines, and they are now being grown all over the county. He has personally seen the results from these vines he gave out, in this manner and has kept pretty good track of them. This was about four years ago. He does not know of any general failure on the part of those grapes that he gave out in that way. Wherever he found a red stake sticking since, there has been a vine growing. Of course the object of the stakes was to mark the place and to continually advertise to the people passing by it, that where the red stake was, there was a grape vine, and everybody has taken pride in watching the development. They were so well pleased with the results when they came to pick this year's crop, they had their first annual Tokay Grape Festival last month at Grants Pass. There were over fifty automobiles in the parade decorated with grape vines and the fruit itself. Nearly all of the business places were decorated both with fruit and vines inside and outside. He could not say how many grapes were produced in Josephine County this year (1912). He could give an estimate in a general way of what will be the production next year on the lands that are set out to grape vines. They have somewhere, he thinks, between 200 to 300 acres there now. There are 535 vines planted per acre. They would get at least a crate per vine next year. He believes there are 1200 crates in a car. He thinks they would have 100 or 125 carloads shipped from there next year and the product would be worth $1.25 to $1.75 per crate and that would be something like $1500.00 or $1600.00 a car and he thinks there would be next year from 100 to 125 cars. They raised grapes from a commercial standpoint this year, sold them and shipped them. They were shipped all over the United States in single crates and in quantities to Portland. At their Tokay Grape Festival, there were lots of grapes sold to people and shipped throughout the United States to friends and that is one of the reasons why it is hard for him to estimate the amount of this year's crop. Another reason is that he did not keep in close touch with that feature this year. If his estimate of next year's crop is borne out by the actual results there should be crops there yielding $150,000, in grapes alone next year, and the cultivation of the grape, specially the tokay grape, has proceeded to a point in Josephine County where he is convinced as a practical man, that it can be successfully conducted in that county, beyond a shadow of doubt. He knows, in a general way, where these railroad lands are located in Josephine County and a great deal of them contain lands of this same general condition which would be suitable for the growing of grapes.

Their folks have just learned that the poultry business there in the hill lands is very valuable. They can grow kale on those lands, and if a family has five or ten acres of land, they can cultivate, they can raise 1000 or 1500 hens, and it has been thoroughly demonstrated that they can make a profit of at least one dollar per hen per year. The reason that this community or district is peculiarly adapted to the poultry business is on account of the fact that they have so little rain and so much sunshine during the year. They have about twenty five inches of rain compared with fifty or sixty in the Willamette valley. They do not have the excessive heat in the summer that they do in the Petaluma district, the best poultry district in the United States. In Petaluma, near San Francisco, California, they make from $1.00 to $1.50 per hen annual profit, at the same time they have to pay from $25. to $35. a ton for green kale and green alfalfa, where they in Josephine County, can raise there on their hill lands without irrigation from twenty to forty ton of kale per acre annually. They can pick their kale 365 days in the year. He means that they can raise on their hill land there without irrigation from twenty to forty tons of kale per acre annually and they can pick their kale 365 days in the year. That is what makes poultry so profitable in that district. He organized this Josephine County Poultry Association referred to, to promote that business. That matter has actually been demonstrated there. There are a great many more days of fog on the lower lands than there are on the higher lands, the higher lands would be more valuable on that account. Referring to the poultry, they have no diseases down there, as they do in other localities. The roup and such diseases are nearly unknown in that district, which makes it a very valuable point in their favor. Such portions of quarter sections as could not be used for the purposes he has indicated, such as for growing grapes, fruit, vegetables, other agricultural and horticultural crops and the raising of poultry could be used for grazing purposes. The higher lands are better than the lower lands for grazing. A settler, if he had 160 acres of that land could handle cows and pigs and poultry and fruit and vegetables. Apples are very productive in that locality, they are high grade, good quality. The Rogue River Valley, he believes it is conceded, excels the world in the growth of pears and their hill land is very good pear land. The pears grown on their hill lands have better keeping qualities than the pears grown down in the Rogue River Valley proper and they are a better flavored pear and they have a higher color and are of a superior quality and fully as productive. The trees will come into bearing at about the same time as in the valley. The pears do not have the pear blight in that district as they do in other districts, very little pear blight in the district and when they do have a pear blight, if there are signs of it, it is easily disposed of.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Well now, reverting to the general question I asked you a few moments ago, Mr. Sherman, taking into consideration these various opportunities that a settler would have to use the land profitably which you have mentioned, are there very many quarter sections in Josephine county, and particularly in that part of the county where these railroad lands are situated, which would not support a settler and his family?

A. There are some.

Q. About what percentage of all of the quarter sections?

A. That would not support a family?

Q. Yes.

A. Possibly 25 per cent.

Q. In your judgment then would 75 per cent of all those quarter sections, if put into the hands of settlers—would they support a settler and his family?

A. 75 per cent, did you say?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, sir, I believe they would.

Q. Now, do you mean that he could just make a bare livelihood, or do you mean that the settler could thrive under those conditions?

A. He should be prosperous; if he is industrious, he would be prosperous.

Q. Mr. Sherman, you say that you are familiar with the general policies that have been pursued by the railroad company with reference to the disposition of its railroad lands there, and the withholding of them from sale since early in 1903. I will ask you whether, in your judgment, that policy has retarded or promoted the settlement and development of that country.

A. It has retarded development to a great extent.

Q. Now, is that a theory of yours, or have you seen it demonstrated?

A. It has been to me a very expensive demonstration that I have made.

Q. Explain what you mean.

A. I mean that I have spent thousands of dollars to get people to come to our district to locate—tens of thousands of dollars; and I mean that the biggest drawback that I have had was the fact that nearly one-half of the district was not available for settlement, on account of the Southern Pacific owning it and would not sell it at any price.

Mr. Fenton: You mean the Oregon & California Railroad Company owning it.

A. Pardon me. I believe that is right—the Oregon & California.

Q. Well now, what experience did you have with these prospective settlers in that respect?

A. Well, when we would take them out to sell them lands, we would take them in our automobiles or in our vehicles, and start out to show them a piece of land, and possibly one to ten miles from the railroad, and there was so much brush land, they would ask: "Well, what is this piece of land? Why isn't this cutlivated?" "Well, that belongs to the railroad company." "Well, aren't they going to sell it?" "No, it is not in the market at any price." And the prospective settler would say, "Well, if I buy this piece over here that you have showed me, will I have to pass through this brush country? Won't I have any neighbors on this land on either side of me? Won't there be anyone here to help build churches and schools and better roads and society, or am I to be here with brush on all sides of me?" And of course I had but one answer to tell them—that I didn't know when the railroad company would put their lands on the market. And that one thing alone has made it very hard to settle people there.

Q. Then I will ask you whether, in your judgment, the effect of the policy pursued by the railroad company in retarding settlement and development there, has been limited to the odd numbered sections held by the railroad company, or has it also extended to the even numbered sections intervening the railroad lands?

A. As I explained, it has made it hard for us to get settlers on the even numbers, because the odd numbers would be uncultivated. It has made it very hard to settle even the even numbered sections.

Q. Well now, to what extent have prospective settlers come into that country during the time that you have been working upon this subject?

A. Well, we have had thousands of people visit our locality. There was for a year or two that our hotels were filled full and running over. They would have to take people out to private houses almost every night in the year for a couple of years there, while we were doing a good deal of advertising and exploiting getting them in there—of course, the little amount that I spent was only a drop in the bucket compared with that spent by commercial organizations and other men in the same line as myself—and the railroad company, the Southern Pacific, have been very good about working with us in regard to that point; they have, as a rule, been ready to do their part of advertising, etc.

Q. Now, I will ask you whether, in your judgment, if these railroad lands should be offered to settlers, that district there would be settled up and converted into homes of settlers supporting and maintaining themselves by the cultivation of their homesteads?

A. If those railroad lands were put on the market, in my opinion, that is, put on the market at a reasonable figure, at a reasonable price, we would have hundreds of people come there and buy those lands, and the district would be developed, which would induce more railroads and the general development of the locality. It has been bad for us in so many different ways, not being able to develop; by holding back the agricultural and horicultural possibilities, it has held out so many other things which would have been for the best interests of the locality.

Q. Mr. Sherman, describe more in detail the extent to which the poultry business is being developed in this district, and what has been done with reference to the transferring of some of the poultry business from this district in California that you refer to to Josephine county?

A. We have had two or three poultrymen come in there in the last two years. One was a Dr. Wilcoxson from some place in the East, and there was a Mr. Steinbach from Alaska, and there was a Mr. Wise from St. Louis—Charles Wise. And they were all three men very well posted in the poultry business, and they found that the hens—

Mr. Fenton: I think I will have to object to this as hearsay if it came from these other gentlemen to the witness.

A. They found that the poultry in that district, that is, the poultry that was what we call the barn lot hens, their plumage and their condition was much better than in any other—than the same class, of course, in any other district. So they went into the poultry business there. We started about a year ago, a little over a year ago—my office started exploiting the proposition; and we had a poultry show on the first of the year, and we got a great many people to go into the business. And there could not be chickens hatched in the district fast enough to supply the demand, so our people sent down to Petaluma and bought the day old chicks by the thousands, and had them shipped up there, and we now have about twenty or thirty people in the poultry business in a commercial way.

Q. Explain what you mean by shipping day old chicks, and how it is done.

A. Well, the day old chicks, they are called day old; however, they are taken as soon as they are hatched, they are taken and put into crates, and shipped the same as eggs. The chick can be shipped—they can be in transit 24 hours. The yelk of the egg when the chicken is hatched is in its stomach, and it furnishes itself food for 48 hours. Their little bills are sealed, as I understand it, and cannot be opened until the expiration of the 48 hours, so that they will stand the transit. And in taking advantage of that, our people have, in order to get a start this spring, bought a great many thousand birds from Petaluma. There is one man got 6000 birds now. Others have from 100 to 1000.

Q. What if anything has been demonstrated there with reference to the production of loganberries and strawberries?

A. Well, strawberries, we can raise two crops a year on this granite soil. We grow the best berries on the granite soil of any soil that we have there. The loganberry, it has been thoroughly demonstrated that we can raise from $300 to $700 per acre worth of berries from the granite soil.

Q. Now, does this granite soil absorb the rainfall readily?

A. Yes, sir, it holds the moisture well. With dry farming process, the granite is the best soil we have in that district. It is better than in the river bottom. It holds moisture better with cultivation, with dry farming, than the river bottom or the red soil.

Q. At the same time, how is it with reference to being muddy, speaking now as to its usefulness in the poultry business? Does it get muddy?

A. No, it don't get muddy and sour like the heavier soil would, which makes it better for the poultry business. You take the birds in the Petaluma district, for several months in the year they have to wash all their eggs—they are dirty. The hens are dirty, all their flower feathers and their wings, and so on, is muddy all the time. They have not any fit place, any fit grounds to keep them on. And that is another point that the Petaluma people claim that we are far ahead of them on, that is, we don't have to wash the eggs; the eggs are always clean. Another thing with the kale, in feeding them, our kale is always picked fresh, and theirs is shipped in.

Q. Have you had any individual interest yourself with reference to orchard lands there, and if so what?

A. Well, I am interested in one tract of 3040 acres.

Whereupon witness testified that this orchard land in which he is interested, to which he refers, is north of Grants Pass between Grants Pass and Merlin, adjoining the City limits of Merlin and reaching from there to within about a mile and three quarters from the City limits of Grants Pass and parallels the Southern Pacific, or the Southern Pacific runs through it about three miles. They have cleared, plowed and planted about 800 acres to orchard. They have had it two years and so far they have cleared and planted about 800 acres and are still clearing and planting. Railroad lands involved in this suit are all around them. They started in to get a 5,000 acre tract, but the railroad lands would be intermingled so that they could not handle it practically and they had to cut it down to 3,000 acres. These railroad lands which intervene their lands are not of a different type of soil but are the same thing. They are selling these lands for orchard purposes at from $300. to $500. an acre, land that is being planted and the $550. and $600. price is planted and cared for for five years. He believed he had better refresh his memory a little further here, for they have some land that they have sold at $200 per acre. They plant 530 vines of grapes per acre, that would be nine feet apart. They produce from one crate to five crates per vine and they figure at least a crate per vine, that is very conservative. They got this year on three year old vines, in a great many of them, wherever they had good care, a crate per vine on the three year old stuff this year and they figure $1.00 profit per vine, practically speaking $500.00 per acre. Any of those who are in the business who have harvested their crop this year from three year old stuff believe that is a very conservative figure. They have the United States for a market for those tokay grapes. They could ship them to the old countries, they will stand shipment to the old countries. If all of the lands in Josephine county of the type he has described should be used for the growing of these grapes, the market would get better than it is now. The trees grown on the granite soil, the fiber of the wood is very much stronger than the fiber of the wood grown on the river bottom soil. The tree will carry more fruit with less danger of breaking the limbs. They do not have to look after the propping of the limbs nearly as close or the pruning and the thinning on these granite and hill lands as one does on the river bottom lands. There seems to be as much difference between the fiber of the wood, the strength of the wood, of a tree grown on the hill lands comparing that with hickory, comparing the tree grown on the river bottom with maple.

There have been several efforts made by the local people to induce or interest capital to come there and build railroads, but so far, it has failed in every case. One of the principal obstacles is the fact that only one, practically one-half of the district, is subject to entry or development, or he means to say, location or cultivation. He does not mean that half of it is subject to cultivation by reason of the character of the soil, but that people cannot buy it, it is not available, cannot be bought, it is not on the market, it belongs to the Oregon and California Railroad Company or the Southern Pacific Company, meaning the lands involved in this suit. He has worked with others, in several different cases, trying to interest capital in building a railroad out from Grants Pass, which occupies the natural strategic position there with reference to the country southwest of it. There is a natural opportunity for the construction of a railroad line southwesterly from Grants Pass through this district he has been describing and on to Eureka in California. There is a route now, he does not know as to Eureka, but to Crescent City, it is all the same, it is right on the Coast. He has not been over the route from Crescent City to Eureka, but across to Crescent City there is a route that engineers report on as being very feasible, and another one down the Rogue River across to Port Orford and Bandon. The route to Crescent City goes in a southerly direction through Josephine County from Grants Pass and goes through this district which he has been describing, including these railroad lands. The fact that virtually one half of the lands tributary to the proposed line of railroad is in the hands of a competing line of railroad, the Southern Pacific Company, has proved an obstacle in his efforts to induce the investment of capital for the construction of a railroad extending from Grants Pass to Crescent City. They have not been assisted by the Southern Pacific in their efforts to secure the construction of this proposed railroad, but have been obstructed on account of the lands. A company coming in there with a view of building a road would investigate the resources of the country, and when it found the thousands of acres of land both timber, mining, agricultural and horticultural, that would not pay tribute at this time and would not know when these lands ever would pay tribute to the railroad, that point blocked it to a large extent. A railroad through that country is necessary for the final development of the real industrial resources of that country. They have mines and timber and fruit lands. There is a smelter sixty miles back from the railroad on the route from Grants Pass to Crescent City for which they have to haul the coke—that is either forty or sixty miles back from the railroad, forty miles he thinks instead of sixty miles—they have to haul the coke to the smelter and haul the matter out, besides all the freighting of all their supplies and things of that kind and it makes it prohibitive to the operation of large bodies of copper ore in that district. If they had transportation close to them, they would be developed and the mines would develop the other resources of the district. He is familiar with the timber resources of Josephine County, in a general way and there is much saw timber there. It is pretty well scattered over the county however, some of the heaviest timber they have is in the northeast corner of the county. He is not familiar with that part in the Forest Reserve because his business never called him there, but excluding that, his answer is correct. He is well acquainted with Elmer Shank and Mr. W. R. Whipple and their testimony that eighty five per cent of these railroad lands situated in Josephine County involved in this suit are waste lands and unfit for any agricultural or horticultural use is not correct. He would judge that about sixty five percent of these lands could be reduced to cultivation for the different purposes he has mentioned, that is of the total acreage. It is not correct as testified to by Mr. Shank that none of that land could be used successfully for agricultural or horticultural purposes without irrigation. They have been raising fruits on all those kinds of lands and they have not had irrigation on any of them up to this time, excepting he guesses the last year or two there have been one or two tracts there, there has been a little water pumped on them from the river. These different commercial bodies he has mentioned have distributed literature containing the same general information as that contained in his testimony. This literature has been published and distributed by the Grants Pass Commercial Club in co-operation with the Southern Pacific advertising department. The Southern Pacific Company joined with the Grants Pass Commercial Club in the expense, each paying half of the expense of publishing this pamphlet referred to by the witness. It was published by the Sunset Magazine and handed to the witness by counsel for complainant and referred to by him and hereinafter identified as "Government's Exhibit 125." He could not say if this pamphlet has been distributed extensively, they have been getting out these pamphlets right along every year and to the best of his knowledge it has been distributed extensively. The emblem on page 45 reading as follows: "This booklet issued under the co-operative community plan of the Southern Pacific lines in Oregon. Wm. McMurray, General Passenger Agent. Planned and executed by Sunset Magazine Homeseekers' Bureau, Portland, Oregon," is in all of these pamphlets of that kind that are published under this joint management referred to by him. He has not had any conference with any of the Southern Pacific people as to this, perhaps not as to this one particular pamphlet, but he has in regard to the general advertising campaign that he and his associates carried on for several years. He conferred with Wm. McMurray, the General Passenger Agent for the Southern Pacific Company, lines in Oregon. At that time the Southern Pacific Company usually sent a man down in that district and he, together with their Commercial Clubs, and other men who were interested, shaped up the literature, and he always participated in that work. The lands referred to in that pamphlet as being of "most excellent quality for the growing of fruit, grapes, poultry, vegetables and other agricultural and horticultural use," are of the same character as the railroad lands involved in this suit.

Whereupon complainant offered in evidence as "Government's Exhibit 125" this pamphlet, which was received subject to the objection that this pamphlet consisted of unsworn hearsay declarations, of the nature of such literature generally put out by promotion companies, societies, commercial organizations and immigration bodies, in any country at any time, and everywhere, and is therefore incompetent. Which exhibit was received in evidence and is hereinafter set out and described and made a part of this Statment of Evidence and identified as "Government's Exhibit 125."

Whereupon witness testified that during his operations down in that country, he had found so many places that the railroad lands were in the way and blocked development and promotion in so many different directions and entirely different ways that he went to investigating the matter to see if there was not some way whereby they could get the lands put on the market so they could go ahead and develop the district and he had the Congressional reports looked up by his friends and got the language of the grant of these lands to the Railroad Company and counseled with some attorneys about it and they told him that they believed that the lands were being withheld contrary to the language of the grant. The Secretary of the Commercial Club of Portland put him on a program at the State Fair where the Oregon Development League was having a three days session and gave him the subject "Mining in Southern Oregon" and he thought that would be a good chance to bring up the point of the railroad's ownership of the land and their withholding it from the market and he did so in a speech there. He thinks that was at the State Fair six years ago, either five or six years ago, either in 1906 or 1907, it was in the fall at the State Fair in September. He never had seen, never had heard, of any public agitation upon the subject, and never had seen a word in print in regard to it prior to that time. He gave the language at that time in his speech, he gave the language of the grant, as near as he could get it, and he showed the condition that it was putting the country in, and what the outcome would be if they continued for a term of years and they would be held back and so on. The State papers took it up, the Portland papers took it up and published his speech in full. He believes the Oregonian had it in full on the front page and the other papers had it and since that, right after that, it went to the State papers through other states, and he got copies of his speech sent to him from almost every state in the Union, he guesses, in the next few months. In that speech he took up all branches, how it affected all branches.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. There has been some testimony here by Mr. Eberlein, who was formerly land agent or acting land agent of the railroad company, to the effect that the agitation with reference to this provision of the grant relating to the manner in which the granted lands should be sold originated at the instigation of timber men for the purpose of forcing the railroad company to dispose of more timber lands to timber companies. Now, had you heard of any such agitation at the time that you made your speech at Salem?

A. No, sir, there never had—not to my knowledge had there been any agitation of any kind prior to that time.

Q. And was the import of your speech, or its purpose, to force the railroad company to dispose of timber lands in large blocks to timber companies and speculators?

A. No, sir.

Whereupon, on cross-examination, witness testified:

Q. Mr. Sherman, prior to the time of this alleged withdrawal of these lands from the market by the railroad company in 1903, as assumed by counsel for the government, was there any objection, to your knowledge, to the manner in which the lands of the company were being offered for sale in Southern Oregon, and particularly in Josephine county, and as to the liberal terms upon which these lands could be purchased for at least twenty years before that period?

A. I was not familiar with conditions before that.

Q. Well, you know, do you not, that there was general satisfaction with the way and manner in which those lands were sold for a period of twenty years prior to 1903?

A. You see, I came here at that time.

Q. I know, but you knew from investigation, did you not, that if the company would recur or go back to the methods of handling the land as they did prior to 1903, the people would generally be satisfied?

A. I don't remember of any discussion on the point.

Q. Well, you know, do you not, historically, that prior to 1903 the company offered these lands for a period of more than twenty years to anyone who would care to buy, in tracts of 160 acres or less, on liberal terms, at low prices and on long installments, and that the lands remained unsold practically up to the time you came to Grants Pass? Do you not know that to be a fact historically?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you not also know, Mr. Sherman, that for a number of years preceding 1903 any land that was claimed to be mineral in character that had been patented to the company, and had nothing in it or on it other than a mineral possibility, and was not valuable for timber or for agricultural purposes—that such lands were sold to the first applicant or occupant at a flat rate of $2.50 an acre under quitclaim deeds uniformly by the company?

A. Why, of course, I was not here in those days, but I learned you are speaking of history?

Q. Yes.

A. I learned through the people there that if the railroad company found there was any mineral or anything of that kind, they withdrew them and did not sell them to the applicant. That is the general impression that I have got.

Q. From the people who wanted to get them?

A. Yes, handed down.

Q. Well, haven't you got that impression since this alleged withdrawal of 1903?

A. Well, of course, I learned but very little of the details of the proposition until I came to the coast.

Q. When was that?

A. That was about that time, sir.

Q. About 1903?

A. Yes, a little before that. But I started to looking around and getting ready to buy something. I came here to buy railroad lands, and about the time that I came here they were withdrawn from the market.

Q. Well now then, suppose that the railroad company would now place these unsold lands upon the market, to be sold at private sale, upon reasonable and easy installments for deferred payments, at a reasonably low rate of interest, to whomsoever would buy, and particularly to people who might desire to buy tracts of 160 acres or less, and the price should be placed at what the lands are today actually worth in the market, do you think those lands would be sold under those circumstances and generally purchased?

A. I do.

Q. If that were done, do you not think also that it would meet with the approval of your people, and the people of your county and Jackson county?

A. I believe the people of our county would be very glad to have those lands put on the market at a reasonable price, because it would not only mean immediate settlement of the lands, but it would mean the settlement of the other lands and the raising of the valuation of the other lands adjoining it.

Q. You mean that it would mean the immediate settlement of such lands as were suitable for that purpose?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It would not mean the immediate settlement of that 35 per cent of these lands that you thought were of no particular value?

A. No; but the larger portion of the lands would be settled in a very short term of years.

Q. That is to say, they would either be settled or purchased?

A. Yes. Well, settled and purchased.

Q. You would say purchased rather than settled, wouldn't you?

A. Purchased and settled too.

Q. I know, there would be some people that would settle.

A. Yes.

Q. But a great many people would buy and would not settle, but would improve in one way or another?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, isn't it true, Mr. Sherman, that one of the sources of irritation in 1906 was the inability of mining prospectors to secure title to these railroad lands where it was believed there were good mineral prospects, and didn't that interfere with the business of locating mining men on these lands, and was not that a source of public irritation in Grants Pass and Medford and other sections of southern Oregon?

A. The only agitation there was on account of its holding the country back in its entirety, not in mining particularly, or timber particularly, nor horticulture nor agriculture, but the whole country was being held back.

Q. I know, but don't you know as a fact that there were quite a number of people who desired forties and twenties where they thought there was a mineral prospect, but had located it on what they found to be railroad land, and they could not make any purchase of that land, and they were compelled either to contest the company's title, it being patented and, as they claimed, not belonging to the grant, as the mineral lands were excepted from the grant, and that that was the source of a good deal of irritation and public discussion in 1906, and particularly in the election in 1906?

A. I never knew of any discussion in regard to the matter.

Q. Don't you know that that was the discussion in the canvass in Jackson county at the election in June in 1906, when Evan Reames was running for representative?

A. Well, I didn't know very much about Jackson county at that time. I had not got into Jackson county so much, and it was about that time that I commenced mixing up with the commercial organizations.

Q. You didn't figure yourself in politics at all?

A. No.

Q. You were a promoter rather than a politician?

A. I was not a politician.

Q. You were engaged in the promotion of your enterprises?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have been ever since you have been in Josephine county?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I call your attention to the first page of Government's Exhibit 125, which shows two large trees which I take to be sugar pine, and will ask you if that is the first industry or the first asset in a state of nature in Josephine county—timber of that character?

A. Well, the first that was made any use of was not timber.

Q. What is that?

A. The first that was made any use of was not timber. Agriculture and horticulture was the first.

Q. I am not asking you that, because Josephine county was settled more than fifty years ago.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Rogue River valley through Josephine county has been taken largely under the donation act?

A. Yes.

Q. And orchards and grain and stock were produced there in the fifties. I am not referring to that.

A. Oh yes.

Q. But I am referring now to the chief asset of Josephine county in a state of nature as being timber. Now, isn't that true?

A. Not in my opinion. I think, Judge, I could convince you that a man could make more money in ten years off ten acres of grapes on a south hillslope than he could out of a thousand acres of timber. I think I could convince you of that.

Q. Do you know that Mr. James J. Hill, said to be the greatest living actual railroad builder in the world today, states that an acre of timber is the best basis of tonnage of a railroad that there is today in western Oregon?

A. Well, an acre of timber in western Oregon would mean at the minimum 25,000 feet of lumber—twenty to 25,000, or a carload. Now, we can produce a carload of grapes every year off two and a quarter acres of grapes. Now, the timber is one crop for all of our lifetime, just as for generations it takes to grow that carload, that one crop of timber; but on two and a half acres of grapes in one year we can produce a carload of freight, and do it every year right along.

Q. I call your attention to the fact that your literature, put out by your commercial club at Grants Pass, advertises Josephine county as containing nine billion feet of standing unsawed commercial timber. Is that true?

A. Well, I think that is a little low.

Q. A little low?

A. Yes. I went over it here in the last two months, and I think there is more timber than that.

Q. More commercial timber?

A. Yes.

Q. I refer, not to the timber which the government has reserved in its reserve in Josephine county, but I refer to commercial timber that is owned by private parties.

A. Well, my answer was to all the timber in the county in regard to the nine billions,—a little over nine billions of feet.

Q. You know there is such an advertisement, or was last year, sent out by your commercial club to that effect, was there not?

A. Yes, it has been put out. It has been handled for two or three years.

Q. I would like to ask you where this mature orchard near Grants Pass showing careful culture, on page seven of Government's Exhibit 125, is located, and whose orchard that is, and on what land is it, what donation land claim, if you know?

A. Why, this is five acres of Spitzenberg orchard —I cannot read it there; but that looks to me—I took the picture—

Q. You were the photographer that took it, or you supervised it?

A. I supervised it. I made the pose for the picture. This is one Spitzenberg orchard belonging to Mr. Hull, then belonging to Mr. Anderson.

Q. Where is it? On what land?

A. Well, now, by referring to my map I could tell the section.

Q. Yes, just refer to your map and give us the section, township and range that that orchard is on.

A. Yes, that is the orchard. I sold that property a couple of times now. I ought to know the description of it, but I don't. (Witness refers to map.) I believe that is in section 15, township 36 south, range 6 west.

Whereupon witness testified that the property last referred to is about three miles from Grants Pass, but he could not say upon whose donation land claim it is. It is a half mile from Rogue River in the valley and he would suppose that it has been settled for forty or fifty years, the orchard is twelve or fifteen years old, he does not know as to how long it has been settled, but it is one of the early places. Referring to page 12 of "Government's Exhibit 125," which purports to show "Well drained hillsides of Rogue River valley," and which shows a vineyard, that is Carson's vineyard. It is hard to tell what section, township and range that is in. Tokay Heights is the property of witness. The tract referred to at page 12 of "Government's Exhibit 125" is Carson's vineyard, which is twelve miles from Grants Pass on the Applegate, it was a forty-acre vineyard, it is now sixty acres. That is the old vineyard that is over on the Applegate about twelve miles south of Grants Pass. The Applegate is one of the oldest settled portions of Jackson County. This land was not taken up under the donation land law, most of the valley land was taken under the donation land law. This land is on the foothills just up above the bottom. Thirty-two years ago Carson planted the upper part up here of this vineyard. Carson has grubbed a large portion of this vineyard lately because it was not of a commercial variety. Carson has never shipped a carload lot because he has never had a car of tokays. Mr. Carson's half acre was all they had to start with four years ago, now they have large tracts of it, he would say something between two and three hundred acres now scattered around over the different sections in favorable places. Referring to these "Mammoth pumpkins bearing witness to the fertility of the soil near Grants Pass," on page 13 of this pamphlet, this is on the Rogue River at the mouth of the Applegate, the junction, twelve miles below Grants Pass, in the old settled part of that country, settled probably forty or fifty years ago. Referring to the words "Second growth of alfalfa. Yield averages seven tons a year," page 14 of "Government's Exhibit 125" this is about twelve miles from Grants Pass in the Rogue River valley on the low lands or the level lands and is on an old settled donation land claim, he could not tell the man's name, he could pick out the section of land it is on, but could not tell the name of the owner, he knows him well by reputation and sight. Looking at page 15 of "Government's Exhibit 125" which gives a photograph of a "Herd of Jersey cows which returned an income of $110 each for 1910," this is the Williams Creek bunch. Williams Creek is a tributary of the Applegate, he believes, but is not sure, not positive, that would be a part of the Applegate country and is an old settled part of Jackson County, probably a donation land claim in the valley, but he does not know as to that. Referring to page 16 of "Government's Exhibit 125" "Orchard of mature Spitzenbergs, near Grants Pass," this is the same orchard identified by him before, but is a different view. The orchard shown on page 17 of "Government's Exhibit 125" is not another view of this same orchard. He is trying to see who the man in the photograph is, he had most of these pictures taken, he can tell by the man as to whose orchard it is, it is in the Rogue River valley, he would suppose on the bottom there because of the size of the trees, not exactly that, in one sense that would answer that because their people did not know until just lately that the hill lands were as valuable as they are.

"Q. As a promoter you have been trying to teach them that fact, haven't you?

A. I have done it, judge."

He cannot identify the orchard shown on page 18 of "Government's Exhibit 125" but it is in Grants Pass, but he cannot identify it. Grants Pass is situated on the level land there on the Rogue River and has been settled a great many years. The orchard on page 19 of "Government's Exhibit 125" entitled "Eight year old pear trees in a highly profitable orchard" is Scoville's orchard up on the hill about three and a half miles north of Grants Pass and between 1600 or 1700 feet contour and is one of those orchards up in the cove, up on the hill and has been an orchard about eight or nine years he thinks. It is on the right between Merlin and Grants Pass, is not in one of those little coves between Merlin and Grants Pass, it is not on that road, it is to the right of that road, it is on what they know as the Granite Hill road. This is red land, that is the red soil. This land was timbered, there was oak and laurel, cedar, fir andpine on it and some saw timber he thinks but that was before his time, but the other land adjoining it, he knows the conditions there all around it and there is scattered saw timber. This is about three and a half miles north of Grants Pass. He has different kinds of pears, principally Bartletts. The vineyard described as "Vineyard of Tokay and Malaga grapes containing 65 acres," shown on page 20 of "Government's Exhibit 125" is another view of Carson's vineyard over on the Applegate, that is the Carson vineyard referred to by him awhile ago as having been there a great many years. They started to plant it thirty-two years ago. They put in a half acre of tokays and now they are grubbing up everything else and putting in tokays on the entire place. The "Young orchard containing an inter-tree crop of corn" shown on page 21 of "Government's Exhibit 125" he cannot recognize any of the mountains shown on that photograph or that orchard, all small orchards look alike and he would have to pick out something in the background or so on, so he could tell one from the other, and he cannot tell whether that is in the place that is indicated or not. He sees these large mountains there in the distance but cannot recognize them. He sees some telegraph poles, there is one close to the tree, but does not see any more, and the distance between the trees, there should be if it was a post, he cannot locate that. "Panoramic view of the Rogue River valley, showing especially Josephine County and the location of Grants Pass relative to the tributary country," shown on pages 24 and 25 of "Government's Exhibit 125" is not a photograph, that is made, evidently from a cast of some kind by the artist, it is not a photograph, it does not do justice to the locality and he thinks the maker was a mighty poor artist. It does not show much of anything except the line of the railroad and the stations and it shows Ashland, Medford, Central Point, Wilderville, and so on, and it shows Grants Pass as the center of the picture. The Oregon Caves are about forty miles from Grants Pass. The picture does not purport to be a birds eye view of that country. The picture of the forest "In the depths of the Forest in Josephine County," on page 27 of "Government's Exhibit 125" is a very ordinary picture of a very ordinary piece of timber land. If the trees stood as thick as that, from the size they appear to be that would be pretty heavy timber, and would be good. There are so many conditions in determining what a timber quarter like that would be worth. They are paying from $1.00 to $1.50 and $2.00 a thousand stumpage for timber with reasonable convenience for transportation where it could be logged in the present or immediate future. He does not recognize the tree or the location of a "Three year old peach tree filler in apple orchard, Grants Pass" shown on page 34 of "Government's Exhibit 125," he does not recognize the location, the tree takes the whole picture and he cannot see anything of the location, one tree looks like another. The picture "Winesap apple tree on orchard producing $1000 per acre," shown at page 35 of "Government's Exhibit 125" is on the Eischman orchard on the Rogue River, south of town. He cannot agree with counsel for defendant that that is an exaggerated statement of some famous tree in the old alluvial portion of the Rogue River valley used as a sample of exploitation, as he has kept track of the orchard. This does not state that these trees are eight years old and he knows the ranch to be eighteen years old from hearsay. He believes that orchard did produce a thousand dollars an acre two years in succession and land that would produce $1,000 an acre ought to be worth $4,000 an acre, but he does not know of any selling for that sum and never heard of any selling at that price. He was speaking of what it ought to be worth, what it would pay twenty-five per cent interest on, it ought to be worth that much money. Referring to "Flame Tokays—Mediterranean grapes returning $350 per acre," shown at page 43 of "Government's Exhibit 125" he could not answer whether these are grapes shown in the ground or are fixed, to put in the picture to be taken after they have been gathered, he could only answer from the appearance. He had nothing to do with the taking of the picture and he does not know where this picture was taken. He would not say that the grapes were fixed to put in the picture to be taken after they had been gathered. He had seen tokays that were just as heavily loaded as that and he does not think that that has been arranged and thinks that that might be taken showing an actual vineyard in a state of nature. He has seen grape vines just as heavily loaded as that. There is a box at the foot of the picture there that has been picked, but the others have all the appearance of being on the vines and it looks very natural. He could not tell whether these are from Mr. Carson's orchard or not. There is only the vine of grapes and the man to recognize, so he could not tell. He does not recognize the man and he had nothing to do with taking the picture. Tokay grapes were not shipped this year by the carload. They shipped them by freight and express, none by carloads this year. He does not know how many pounds of grapes have been shipped or how many crates have been shipped this year. There were a great many shipped by friends to friends elsewhere in single crates, a great many used in the district and a great many shipped. This year being the first year that all those bunch of fellows raised any grapes, they did not understand the proposition and they did not put dry sulphur in the bloom of the vines when it was in bloom, and if they don't—that is the only thing they have to do to grapes, the only doctoring they have to do, they mildew as a result of not putting the sulphur in the bloom, the grapes mildew, the only thing that has to be done to grapes. The grape is the most simple fruit to raise of any, but it has a mildew. A tokay grape has its pest and sulphur must be put in any time within a week or two or three, or else it will mildew.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. That is what I mean. Now, you spoke about the development of copper mines being retarded. Do you not know that for forty miles almost in length in Siskiyou County, and certainly within a radius of forty miles, the great copper plants at Kennett, along the line of railroad between Sisson and Redding have desolated the country so that there is hardly a living tree or a living thing growing; and that it has been enjoined as destructive of all other industries?

A. I understand that the Kennett people—that is one thing that our people have been working on; that is why we are so anxious to have a railroad run through to the coast, and run out on one of these points, and put their smelters on the point, so the ocean breeze will carry those fumes of the smelter to the ocean, and we can get a market for the copper.

Q. If you do that, the prevailing winds are from the ocean, are they not—not from the land?

A. That depends on the locality. Now, there are two localities that the prevailing winds are all off shore.

Q. You would have to get it right over on the coast, then, wouldn't you, your smelter?

A. Yes, sir, it would be over on the coast.

Whereupon witness testified that they would have to have another railroad, they could not handle this ore without other railroads. They would have to transport the ore from the mines to the smelter as it is always done. There is no complaint of the smelter at Waldo. There is quite a settlement there, a small settlement, it has been a mining country for fifty years at Waldo. W. J. Wimer operated a store there for twenty years. They still extract a good deal of gold there in pockets and quartz around Waldo. He does not remember what the 3040 acres of orchard lands cost them now, they bought of a great many different parties and one 200-acre tract at $12,000, paid $4,000 for 80 acres, $5,000 for 160 acres and $40 an acre for 80 acres. He remembers the high priced ones and some of the low priced ones. He has put out 800 acres of that into orchard and the trees are one and two years old, and they are proposing to sell these now on a five year contract, care for them in parcels of five and ten acres or whatever anybody desires. Some of the people are moving on to the grounds and they attend to them just the same. It was their idea when they started in, to sell mainly to non-residents, but there are a good many people moving onto the tracts. There was one set of buildings built there by one party costing $10,000, close to the railroad, as one goes down from Merlin, right on the edge of Merlin. Part of that is bench land, part of it is hill land. The pictures in their pamphlet (witness produces a pamphlet) are rather general of the district, their pamphlet is descriptive of the district. Their orchards were young when this pamphlet was gotten out, referring to this pamphlet which was gotten out before they planted any orchards, or about the time they had started to plant but they did have one or two little orchards. He does not know but what their pictures might be in there. $200 and $300 an acre was land that they were selling just as the land stood and when they put the trees in and gave a five years' contract, they asked $550 and $600 an acre, with interest on deferred payments at six per cent per annum. This pamphlet was published when they first started in. He did not know but what there might be one or two little orchards there on the tracts there in this pamphlet, but he does not find any. The railroad of the Oregon and California Railroad runs right through, it is twelve miles from Merlin to Grants Pass. Their tract is five miles long, he believes. The Southern Pacific Company has land between them and Merlin. The Country Club Orchard tracts is the same as Laurelhurst, and it belongs to the Rogue River Orchard Company, a corporation, of which he is one of the owners. W. T. Reed and F. E. Reed of Kansas City and F. F. Williams of Portland and S. D. Williams originally of Portland but now superintendent of the works and living at their Club House, are interested with him in this property, the five own the property. They have built a $10,000 club house on these lands and he supposes they have put into this proposition from $150,000 to $175,000. They have spent very little advertising, comparatively speaking. They have done most of their work on the grounds. This is one pamphlet they put out and they put out a poultry pamphlet.

Q. Well, it is pretty well advertised because of this fine country club as the railroad goes by, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With its green roof and beautiful pergola porch, and everything of that kind?

A. Yes, sir. We feature the fact that the Shasta Limited passes through our holdings.

Q. Don't you feature the fact that the other trains also pass through there in daylight, some of them?

A. Well, we speak of the Shasta Limited.

Q. I understand; but the other trains do pass through there in daylight?

A. Oh yes, sir, they do pass through, but we don't advertise it as a special feature.

Q. We common people have to travel on the other trains—we can't travel on the Shasta.

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon defendants offered in evidence the reduced map of this Country Club district and environments as a part of the testimony of witness, marked "Defendants' Exhibit 372," which was received in evidence and is hereinafter set out and described and made a part of this Statement of the Evidence and marked "Defendants' Exhibit 372."

Whereupon witness testified that these "day old chicks" do not start before they have broken the egg shell but when they are hatched, when they are out of the shell, that is he means to say as soon as they come out of the shell in incubators, the chicken comes out of the shell in the incubator and they take the youngster as soon as he comes out of the shell and put him in crates and ship him, that is, if he was born this evening and he kicks the shell off, the next morning he starts on his journey and is shipped in a crate from Petaluma, California, near San Francisco, to Grants Pass, over the Southern Pacific, which is a pretty careful road. They appreciate what the road has done for them, the company sent special wires and kept track of these shipments and posted them and the Company was very nice about it and they appreciate it too. One has to raise the feed for these chickens, their green feed and have to have good soil for them on account of raising their feed, otherwise it is very expensive.

"Q. If you had a little bottom land, you could raise the feed and haul it to them, couldn't you, just as they do at Petaluma?

A. They do that in Petaluma.

Q. They could do that here?

A. Yes, not and make as much money as we do, but it could be done."

The number of acres necessary in the way of feed, to successfully operate a chicken ranch on one of these foothill tracts, would depend largely on the number of chickens that one handled in the year, and also would depend upon whether one produces his own young chickens, whether he has kept his chickens over. For the general utility bird, utility ranch, where one buys his chickens and does not keep a hen until she is past two years old, it is very much less than it would be if one did all the work, if one specialized on it. Vetch is not particularly good for chickens, but two or three acres of country kale, this thousand headed kale that they can grow twenty or thirty or forty tons per acre, that will keep a lot of hens. Two acres of kale is a nice little patch. They are just starting into the chicken business in Josephine County in the last year or two.

Q. Now, this granite soil has degrees—some of it is so nearly complete granite and porphyry that it would not sprout a white bean? Isn't that true?

A. No, that is not true.

Q. Well, there is always some soil, some earth, besides the granite in this granite soil, isn't there?

A. I understand, and I see from observation by being along the Southern Pacific Railroad that the granite that they blast out of the granite pit up a mile and a half or two miles above Grants Pass, and ship it all along for ballast—I learn from observation that stuff grows in that, and they have to keep weeding it out?

Q. That is to say these station yards, where we use this granite for walks, would be good to raise fruit and crops, do you think?

A. That soil would raise stuff of that kind.

Q. When you get water on it, why, it will grow anyway?

A. Yes, sir. That stuff is not in place. But you take our granite, which is in place, and by dry farming you can produce almost anything on it. But that stuff of course is not in place, and if it is not too thick, too deep so but what this moisture can work up through it.

Q. Don't you know, Mr. Sherman, that a good deal of this hill land around Grants Pass there has scrubby pine on it, and chaparral and stuff of that kind, where this granite land is, and that it would hardly support a goat in a state of nature.

A. Judge, that has been the opinion of a great many people, but they are learning that that is not true. They find that that soil is getting to be the best known, the best soil that we have. People are getting so they would rather have that than the river bottom soil. For me, I would rather have it—much rather.

Q. And your opinion of the value of these lands and of their utilization is based upon that impression which you have of this granite soil and other soil?

A. From observation and from experiment—experimenting with it.

Q. Now, what in your judgment is the value on an average of all of these unsold lands in Josephine County, and those in Jackson County about which you have testified? What would you say was a fair average price, if the railroad company was called upon as an owner, now, in good faith to put a price on these lands in 160-acre parcels; averaging it all over the unsold lands that you have testified about, particularly in Josephine County, what, in your judgment, would be that fair average price or market value?

A. Why, Judge, I couldn't answer that question right off, but I can point you to a great many different sections and quarter sections and forty acres that I know the values of them, that is, comparing with other lands adjoining.

Q. What would they be worth, the best price now? Take some of the best, what would it be worth an acre in quarter sections?

A. Well, your company have lands there that are worth from $100 to $200 and $300 per acre.

Whereupon witness testified that he would not put any value on this thirty-five per cent of the lands which he says would be of no value for any particular purpose, except for grazing, it is good for grazing, it would have some value for grazing, although it is rocky, steep and precipitous and too rough for tillage. That land for grazing purposes now, there would be other features to come in there, in fixing the price, in his judgment. If a man owned other land near it so he could use that for grass, and then have another piece to raise stuff for his stock and so on, it would be more valuable than it would be otherwise but if he went to pick it out he would have to take the good with the bad, and if one had 160 acres of that land and could not pasture his stock outside, and let it roam up into the mountains, he would have to consider that when he came to pasture them. A good deal of the land up there is pastured now by ranchers and farmers outside, but this is not one of the chief elements or sources of their living, that is stock raising, it should be, but it is not. Some of these people who are up in the foothills and mountains away from the railroad, away from transportation, away from Grants Pass, are stock men back in there.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. There are not many of those fellows up there raising Tokay grapes, and getting $500 an acre, are there?

A. No, sir, those fellows up there are not. Those fellows up there are mainly stock men.

Q. People experimenting in grapes and intending to go into the business are down next to the railroad, near the towns where they can get market?

A. The grape don't make so much difference about shipping as an apple or some of the other fruits.

Q. I understand, but as far as your knowledge goes, the experiments are being conducted along close to the line of railroad?

A. Yes, all the way from one to twelve miles from the railroad.

Q. The twelve miles is over as far as this old orchard of Mr. Carson's?

A. Yes, Mr. Carson's orchard is twelve miles.

Q. You refer to the twelve mile orchard as that one?

A. Yes, sir.

Whereupon, on re-direct examination, witness testified that these railroad lands in there were patented at different times. There were a great many of them contested for mineral and those patents were held for a considerable time and there was some of that land which was not surveyed and it was not patented until after being surveyed, and all that kind of thing. It was patented at different times as he understands it. He thinks that most of the patents have issued just of late, in the last few years. He believes that the Company has sold on contract, that is his understanding.

Whereupon, on re-cross examination, witness testified that he has a copy of his address made in September, 1906 or 1907, at the State Fair pasted in his scrap book and he thinks it was printed in the Oregonian. He knows there was one or two of the Portland papers which printed it in full. They asked for his likeness and he gave it to one or two of them and one of them he did not give it to. He did not have his address printed in pamphlet form, he had nothing to do with it whatever and was very much surprised when he found that it got the attention that it did. It was printed in the Oregonian or Telegram, in two of the daily papers in Portland. He thinks the Oregonian was one and he thinks it was printed as his speech all the way through.

Whereupon, on re-direct examination, witness testified:

Q. Now, Mr. Sherman, your attention was called to the Hull orchard in this picture. That is, a photograph of which is in this pamphlet, which is located on section 15, township 36 south, range 6 west. Now, the bill of complaint in this case shows that in that same township there are railroad lands in section 9, which corners on 15, 480 acres; section 11, which also corners on 15, 200 acres; section 23, which also corners on section 15, 400 acres; section 21, which also corners on 15, 277 acres; and a large amount of land in the other odd numbered sections in that township. Do you know whether these railroad lands that I have referred to, and particularly in sections 9, 11, 21 and 23, which corner on 15, are of a different character from the lands which are included in the so-called Hull orchard?

A. Yes, they are, part of them—pardon me for looking at my map.

Q. I direct your attention to the other odd numbered sections in that township, and particularly sections 9, 11, 21 and 23.

A. Yes, sir, they are all of a different nature than the soil in section 15.

Q. What is the character of the soil in these other lands?

A. Well, there is some of two of those sections about the same soil, but as a whole, they are part of them red soil, and part of them is the brown soil; a small portion of them is river bottom soil, the same as the other.

Q. This in 15, is it all river bottom soil?

A. Nearly all. Well, there is a portion of that runs up.

Q. Well, where the orchard is, is that all alluvial soil?

A. Yes, sir. That is where he had 38 boxes of Spitzenbergs from one tree.

Q. Now, counsel for defendants has asked you with reference to the various orchards illustrated in this pamphlet, Government's Exhibit 125, if they are not all on the alluvial bottom lands and on old donation claims and old settled parts of the county. I will ask you whether it is a fact that all of the orchards and vineyards there are on lands of that character?

A. No, sir.

Q. About what proportion of them are on different kinds of soil, and what is the general history of the development of the fruit and grape culture there in that general district concerning which you have testified?

A. Why, that district, like all other districts, the first planting they did was on the river bottom lands.

That is characteristic, as I understand by studying the history of all districts that I have looked up. They first go on to the river bottom lands and plant their orchards and vineyards and so on, and then they go on the hill lands. Now, we have gone to our river bottom, and we are going to the hill lands. We commenced several years ago.

Whereupon witness testified that there are producing orchards on the hill lands. The river bottom lands have frost down there in that country and they have to smudge. The hill lands do not have the trouble with the frost, they have to smudge, in any apple growing district, good apple growing districts they have frosts. It takes a frosty district to produce a good apple, that is the history of the apple business in the United States and all over the world, as far as that is concerned. Wherever one has an apple orchard district, one has frost to contend with. The river bottom lands are very much worse than the hill lands. Frost is like boiling water, as long as one keeps it stirring and moving, it don't settle, but as soon as one stops it on flat lands, in a pocket, then it settles and the frost gets the fruits. This pear orchard of Scoville's is on red hill land. There are railroad lands in that vicinity, and there are railroad lands of the same character as the Scoville lands and he does not know of any reason why the railroad lands could not be used for the same purpose as the Scoville lands. This mildew on grapes of which he spoke is not peculiar to the Grants Pass district, but is general all over the world, any grape should have the use of dry sulphur, and it is not peculiar to the tokay grape, that is one of the processes that has been developed by experience to prevent mildew in grapes. It is the one pest, the only thing they have to contend with in rgard to grapes, and they have that same thing to contend with elsewhere. He is not very much familiar with the copper industry in Montana.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Do you not know that the mines at Butte, a very large percentage of the ore is shipped by the Amalgamated Copper Company to Anaconda, a distance of some 24 or 25 miles to be smelted, and about as large a proportion shipped from Butte clear to Great Falls, a distance of over 200 miles, to be smelted?

A. Isn't it a fact that the ore, smelting ore, in order to get the proper flux has to be shipped in from a great many different mines, and isn't it a fact that hardly a smelter in the United States is on the ore body itself, and isn't it a fact that it all has to be shipped?

Q. I want you to answer that. Is that your understanding?

A. That is my understanding of it.

Whereupon witness testified that he has heard of the large smelters of Great Falls, Montana, operated by the Amalgamated Copper Company and knows that it had for a great many years the largest copper smelter in the world.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. And Great Falls is the quotation grade of copper the world over today—quoted abroad as "Great Falls or better?" You know that, don't you?

A. I knew that that was used as a standard. This proposed line, they would take right through our copper belt, from Grants Pass to Crescent City.

Whereupon witness testifed, that he knows of instances where these unsold railroad lands are worth from $100 and $200 to $300 per acre for use for agriculture and horticulture and that has no reference to their value for timber or mining or anything other than agriculture and horticulture. These lands join the city limits of Grants Pass on two sides. The railroad lands adjoining Merlin, are more valuable and the Company has lands back a few miles from the railroad that would be worth $100 an acre, $50 an acre, $40 an acre. The lands that are closer to the railroad are worth more than those farther back. The difference is on account of transportation, and there is no other difference, so that if transportation facilities should be provided, that difference would be to that extent wiped out. He knows of a great many tracts of railroad land worth from $25.00 up, a great many tracts up to $50 per acre for agricultural and horticultural purposes and that could be sold for that if offered. He does not refer to their value for timber, he is speaking of horticulture, and agriculture exclusively. They are worth more for that than for timber, timber would not be worth that much. This thirty-five per cent of land that he says has no particular value except for grazing purposes in connection with other lands is scattering, it is the points and ridges, the tops of ridges along the high lands. There are quarter sections of that character of land, as to entire sections there would be a long strip, perhaps, up the ridge, something of that kind, but it would not include any one whole section, it would be a section in acreage or area, a whiplash proposition, a long strip of land.

Whereupon witness testified:

Q. Now, you are more familiar with this general subject than I am, Mr. Sherman. I don't want to detain you any longer unless you have in mind something to explain with reference to questions that have been asked you, either by Mr. Fenton or by myself, that would throw any light upon these general questions that have been put to you.

A. I see, a great many questions Judge Fenton asked in regard to cultivated lands or donation lands—I don't know that the lands that he referred to are all donation lands. There was very little clearing and developing done in that district after the construction of the railroad for a term of years. The way I would explain that would be from the fact—

Mr. Fenton: How do you know this, Mr. Sherman?

A. Well, from the conditions of the clearing and from the length of time that the lands have been cleared.

Mr. Fenton: You get that as a matter of general history, not from personal knowledge?

A. The age of trees planted, and the age of buildings, and what the people tell me.

Q. Well, Mr. Sherman, your information on that subject is just as accurate when I question you about it as when Judge Fenton questions you, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Fenton: I am not questioning that. I just want to know how he obtains it, whether from personal knowledge or whether it is derived from his general historical knowledge.

Q. Well, now, what you were about to say is in explanation of the testimony you gave in answer to the questions asked you by Judge Fenton, is it?

A. Well, I am kind of talking the thing over here with you folks here, to bring out the points and the truth of the matter. That is the way I am doing.

Q. Well, proceed, Mr. Sherman.

A. The point that I was going to make was in regard to the length of time that it appeared elapsed without any development in the district, which Judge Fenton bordered on. Now, at the time of the construction and before the construction of the railroad, the settlers and people who came in there saw that there would be sale for a great deal of products during construction days; and they cleared and plowed and planted and harvested crops to feed the people that were coming in at that time, the people that were working on the roads, and so on. Well, after the road was built, in a few years things laxed a little, and there was a period of a good many years that there was very little clearing, if any. I guess there was fifteen years that there was, practically speaking, very little development done in the district. And then it came a time when the people commenced coming into that district, and they started clearing again. That first clearing was all done on the river bottom lands, and the later clearing has all been done on the hill lands.

Q. Are they clearing now on the hill lands even in preference to the bottom lands?

A. The development these days is on the hill lands.

Mr. Fenton: The bottom lands are all cleared, aren't they?

A. Largely—largely all; not all; they are largely all cleared. There is a great deal of bottom land—quite a good deal of bottom land uncleared; but you see they are going to the hills for the fruit. Many of them are talking now that we should take out the trees from the river bottom lands, and put in hay and grasses and so on, and plant the orchards on the hills altogether. They feel that way about it; they commence to see, just as they have in all other districts, that the hill lands are more valuable for fruit than the river bottom lands.

STIPULATION.

Mr. Townsend: It is stipulated that E. J. GROVER, if called as a witness on behalf of the Government, would testify substantially the same as the witness Charles A. Edmondson concerning substantially the same area of lands, and that his testimony would be substantially the same both upon direct and cross-examination, and redirect examination, and that his testimony shall be considered as having been offered and received, subject to the same objections that were urged to the testimony of the witness Edmondson.

I think I should qualify the foregoing offer by saying that Mr. Grover did not live in that vicinity as long as the witness Edmondson, and that there would be a difference in their testimony in that respect. Mr. Grover lived there during a period of eight or ten years, while the witness Edmondson lived there a much longer period.

Mr. Fenton: You cannot tell between what dates?

Mr. Townsend: I am willing for the record to show that he lived there between 1902 and 1911. He has been away from there about a year.

Mr. Fenton: Where does he reside now?

Mr. Townsend: He now resides in Portland.

STIPULATION.

It is stipulated that M. F. McCOWN, a witness on behalf of the Government, if called, would testify upon direct examination substantially as follows:

I have lived in Jackson County, Oregon, since July, 1900, and in Oregon all my life, having been born at Oregon City, said State. I have been cruising timber since 1891, and have been cruising and surveying, mostly in Jackson and Josephine Counties, Oregon, since July, 1900. In 1906 and 1907, or 1907 and 1908, I spent about a year cruising lands for the Southern Pacific Ry. Co. to take the place of data lost by them during the San Francisco, California, fire. While so cruising for said company, Messrs. King and Cavell were associated with me part of the time, we three working from the same camp. In cruising the lands, we made special note of the timber, and also noted the agricultural and grazing lands, afterwards making maps and notes for the company showing these various features. Either while in the employ of said company or while at work for private parties, I have cruised over most of the lands in Jackson and Josephine Counties, and am very familiar with the railroad lands therein.

I have had about two years of experience in farming work, and have lived in small towns and agricultural communities all my life.

Of all the railroad lands in Jackson and Josephine Counties, Oregon, I estimate that about 75 out of each 100 quarter sections are suitable for settlement purposes; by that I mean that each of said 75 would support a family. I base this opinion on the fact that 75 percent of the quarter sections will average 25 to 30 acres of plow land to the quarter section, and most of the remainder of each such quarter section would be suitable for grazing purposes. This estimate of the amount of plow land to the quarter section I consider is very conservative.

A large proportion of the lands I have classed as suitable for settlement purposes is good fruit land. It is stipulated that upon cross examination said witness would testify substantially as other like witnesses called by the Government have testified, on the general question of the suitability of these lands for settlement, the agricultural character thereof, the grazing character thereof, the timber character thereof, and the utilization for settlement purposes of these lands with which the witness was familiar, as disclosed by his direct examination.

This testimony to be received subject to the same objections made by either party to similar testimony.

STIPULATION.

It is stipulated that CHARLES M. COLLIER, a witness on behalf of the Government, if called, would testify upon direct examination substantially as follows:

I am a citizen of the United States, 54 years of age, and by profession a civil engineer, and my post office address is Eugene, Oregon. Since 1884, and during that time, have followed my profession as civil engineer, and most of my work being surveying, being County Surveyor for Lane County since 1886, and for a considerable part of said time have also held the office of City Surveyor for Eugene, and have also been Deputy U. S. Mineral Surveyor. I am familiar with and have surveyed over practically all of Lane County, northern part of Douglas, and have surveyed more or less in Benton County. And during my work since 1886, have made Government surveys of nine or ten townships in Lane and northern Douglas Counties.

Based upon my knowledge of the topography of the country, character of the land, soil and so forth, I would say that, taking Lane County from its north and south boundaries and within the limits of the Grant limits of lands granted by Congress to the Oregon and California Railroad Company, and also as to that part of Douglas County north of the south line of township 20 South and within the limits of said grant, that approximately seventy-five per cent of the lands are suitable for settlement, that 50 per cent of said area is agricultural in character, and 50 per cent thereof grazing. A considerable portion of the area above described is timber or brush land, which covering would have to be removed before the agricultural lands can be utilized for agricultural purposes.

It is stipulated that upon cross examination said witness would testify substantially as other like witnesses called by the Government have testified, on the general question of the suitability of these lands for settlement, the agricultural character thereof, the grazing character thereof, the timber character thereof, and the utilization for settlement purposes of these lands, with which the witness was familiar, as disclosed by his direct examination.

This testimony to be received subject to the same objections made by either party to similar testimony.

STIPULATION.

Mr. Townsend: It is hereby stipulated that CHARLES V. GALLOWAY, if called and sworn as a witness on behalf of the Government in this cause, would testify in substance as follows:

I am, and for more than three years last past have been, Chairman of the Board of State Tax Commissioners, for the State of Oregon. As such officer I have become acquainted with the method of assessing real property in the several counties of the State of Oregon, including the classification of lands. I am also familiar with the methods by which the lands are classified in some counties as tillable and non-tillable lands. In eight counties of the State the assessors have made no classification of this kind. Those counties are Douglas, Klamath, Lane, Lincoln, Marion, Multnomah, Polk and Umatilla. Because of the fact that the assessment rolls for those counties do not distinguish tillable lands from non-tillable lands, all of the assessable lands in those counties are included as tillable lands in the statement of the summaries of the assessment rolls of the several counties of the State of Oregon, as equalized by the County Boards of Equalization, and compiled by the Board of State Tax Commissioners, as shown in Defendants' Exhibit 324, which covers the year 1911. In those counties where the local assessors do distinguish tillable lands from non-tillable lands, the county assessment rolls show this classification, and the lands are divided into the two classes of tillable and non-tillable lands. In those counties where this classification is made, the practice has been to classify as tillable lands only lands that are actually under cultivation, and all other lands are classified as non-tillable lands. This practice was developed at the annual convention of the County Assessors held three years ago, and I caused inquiries to be made of all of the county assessors in the State, and thus became familiar with the foregoing facts. There may have been some slight variation as to this practice in some of the counties, but in none of them did it vary substantially from the statement made above. It has been the practice down to the present time for the county assessor of each county to file with the County Board of Equalization his original assessment roll of the county. Thereafter a duly certified copy of this assessment roll in each county, as equalized by the County Board of Equalization, is filed in the office of the Secretary of State, and the annual statements by the Board of State Tax Commissioners (for example, Defendants' Exhibits 324 and 325) are compiled from these certified copies on file in the office of the Secretary of State.

It is further stipulated that the foregoing shall have the same force and effect as if Mr. Galloway had been called and sworn as a witness and testified as herein above set forth, subject to such objections as the defendants, or either of them, may now desire to interpose.

Mr. Townsend: It is further stipulated that, in connection with the foregoing evidence of Mr. Galloway, the court shall take judicial notice of the provisions of the statutes of the State of Oregon relating to the matter of assessments, and the county Boards of Equalization, and the Board of State Tax Commissioners, including all repeals, amendments and new enactments which were in effect at any time during the assessment of any of the lands involved in suit.

STIPULATION.

Mr. Townsend: It is further stipulated that JOHN W. KELLY, if called and sworn as a witness on behalf of the Government, would testify as follows:

That on September 2, 1907, he was a reporter for the Evening Telegram, a newspaper of general circulation published at Portland, Oregon, and that on said day E. H. Harriman, who was then President of the Oregon and California Railroad Company, visited Portland, and Mr. Kelly called upon him for an interview. The interview was had, and Mr. Kelly will swear that the statements made by Mr. Harriman to him at that time, including the interrogations by Mr. Kelly and the substance of the answers by Mr. Harriman, were in substance as follows:

"What can I do for you? Ask all the questions you like," was Harriman's salutation.

"Well, what do you think of Oregon since your trip?

"I know as much about Oregon as any man in Portland. I knew it before the trip, for I have had reports. I was not even surprised at the number of settlers, for I had reports on them. What impressed me more than anything else in Oregon is the climate.

It is the greatest climate for August I have ever found anywhere. There is nothing to beat it."

"What conditions did you find in the interior?"

"Sparsely settled regions. You go miles and miles before you see a face, or a habitation. I traveled vast stretches and saw nothing but chipmunks. The country is undeveloped. Oregon needs more people. I passed forest reserves and timber-land granted to military wagon road companies. The reserves and the military road companies control too much land. This should be remedied. The reserve policy requires changing and the military road companies should be made to dispose of holdings."

He includes the S. P.

"Then, Mr. Harriman, your contention is that Oregon cannot be properly nor speedily developed until the corporations which have vast holdings are forced to open the country, to dispose of the lands?"

"Yes."

"And does this include the lands granted to the Southern Pacific?"

Mr. Harriman permitted a smile to flit across his countenance. He wore eyeglasses, but took another pair from his pocket and polished them before making reply.

"Yes," said he, "the Southern Pacific, too, but the Southern Pacific hasn't much land. You see, before we came into the Southern Pacific, the company was pressed for money and was disposing of lands and giving options to syndicates and speculators, and we didn't know how much land we had, so we stopped until options expired, to ascertain just what we had in land. The Southern Pacific will sell land to settlers, but not to speculators. We can tell a speculator from a settler as well as anyone. The agricultural land we will sell, but the timber-land we will retain, because we must have ties and bridge timbers, and we must retain our timber land for future supply. The Southern Pacific has an insufficient amount of timber now, and we have had to buy large tracts, looking to the future supply of ties and material. Yes, we will sell to settlers, but speculators will get none.

"One has to travel now long distances before coming to a cultivated district, and then travel another long distance before coming to another. Between these points there is nothing. The trouble with a railroad is that when it has been built you have to keep operating it, whether it is self-supporting or not. You can't pull up the track, put it in your pocket and take it to a more fruitful section."

This observation of Mr. Harriman is the only clew as to his intentions in Central Oregon. It might be construed that he does not believe the time ripe to project a line through that section, inasmuch as he found it weakly settled, but well developed where the settlers were.

"Of course," resumed the railroad magnate, "the isolated spots under cultivation will gradually enlarge and spread, eventually reducing the unoccupied stretches between, but it takes time and is retarded by the reserves and the holdings of the military wagon road companies."

Mr. Fenton: Defendants object to this testimony offered, on the ground that the same is incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant, and particularly upon the ground that it is hearsay, and that if the statements were thus made by Mr. Harriman, he was without authority or power to make an admission or statement binding upon the defendants, or any of them, as the act or deed or admission of any of the defendants.

Whereupon complainant offered and there was received in evidence a deed dated August 7, 1886, from the Northern Pacific Railway Company to the City of Portland, for a right of way over certain lands and which the complainant contends is the deed referred to in Section 5 of the Forfeiture Act of September 29, 1890, which exhibit was received in evidence and marked "Government's Exhibit 128" and is hereinafter set out and described and made a part of this Statement of the Evidence and identified as "Government's Exhibit 128."

Mr. FENTON: Mr. Townsend desires to make a statement under oath, and the defendants consent that he may make this statement in his own way, without any questions, direct or cross, being propounded to him.

B. D. TOWNSEND, being called as a witness on behalf of the government, and being first duly sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, testified as follows.

MR. TOWNSEND: There are three subjects which I find myself compelled to explain into the record. Of course I asked permission to testify in the case reluctantly, but find myself under obligation to do so because of the facts as I will detail them.

When I first was employed by the government in connection with the Oregon and California land grants I was Assistant United States Attorney for the District of North Dakota, and received a telegram from Attorney-General Bonaparte in May, 1908, asking me if my time and other engagements would permit me to go to Oregon to prepare a bill in equity for the government. I did not know at that time to what the subject of the telegram related, or what kind of a suit was to be instituted. I went to Oregon, arriving there in June, 1907, and found that no preparation had been made for the institution of the suit. I then set about investigating this entire general subject and collected all of the information that I could concerning these grants for the purpose of submitting it to the attorney-general. At that time I understood that I would not be employed in the suit when instituted, and at the time that my work would simply consist of an investigation of the subject with a report to the attorney-general and to Congress so that they might take such action as they desired. It thus transpired as I was seeking information I would call before me certain men whom I understood had such information, and I interview them and put their interviews in the indirect form as statements by myself of the facts that these different persons had stated to me. In that way the statement of Mr. Elliott, which was referred to in his cross-examination, was made. However, those statements were carefully prepared in the presence of the various persons making the statements and were revised by them, not only as I dictated the statements, but also after they had been transcribed on the typewriter. It is not a fact, as stated by Mr. Elliott, that at any time during my interview with him I indicated to him that I thought that he was adverse to the railroad company and would therefore give me information. The truth is, that with Mr. Elliott, as with several other persons who had formerly been employed by the railroad company, I exercised all the caution I could to see that no colored information was conveyed to me, and I expressly stated, I remember, to Mr. Elliott that I did not want any information based upon prejudice, but was seeking a correct statement of the facts to be presented to the attorney-general. I did not take those statements at that time with the idea of using them as evidence. At that time I did not know that the attorney-general would institute the suits. If I had known that the statements would ever be used as evidence, I, of course, would have had some one else take them so that my testimony would never be necessary to verify them. It was my actual endeavor at that time to see that the information which I reported to the attorney-general and Congress was accurate, and in this connection, it is right and fair that I acknowledge that the railroad company gave me access to all of their records and such documents as I asked for, and I spent approximately sixty days abstracting their minute books and getting records of the company. I did this work in one of the offices of the company which they kindly furnished me for that purpose.

The next subject that I desire to cover by my statement relates to correspondence which took place in the year 1872, relating to the construction by the Secretary of the Interior of the provisions of the Act of April 10, 1869, which the company contends annexed to the grant and condition restricting the manner in which the grant of lands might be sold. This correspondence has been introduced in evidence as Government's Exhibit 109, and is also covered in part by some of the exhibits that have been introduced by the defendants. This correspondence was discovered in the files of the interior department by Mr. Griffith, and others acting with him, in making a search of those files. As soon as this correspondence was called to my attention I went to the Department of Justice to secure access to all the old files of the department. I made a search of those files myself instead of entrusting it to others, for the reason that I was very anxious to find anything that might be on file in the Department of Justice relating to the subject. The chief of the files and mails division of the Department of Justice explained to me thoroughly the old filing system of the department and turned the old files over to me. They were all separated in the basement and I was able to pursue my search without interruption. During the years 1860 to 1875 there was a correspondence register or docket kept by the Department of Justice and in this book was recorded the letters received by the department and also letters written by the department. These correspondence registers or dockets were consecutive so that I could see that they were complete. I made a careful search of those dockets and could find no letter recorded there with reference to the correspondence which appears in Government's Exhibit No. 109. In making the search of these correspondence registers, I did not confine myself to any particular name, but actually ran through the dockets completely during the period covered by this correspondence, and as stated above, found no record of any correspondence upon the subject. The letters referred to in Government's Exhibit 109, written by George H. Williams, and addressed to him, were nowhere of record in the Department of Justice. In addition to searching these correspondence registers, I actually searched all the old files themselves and to assure myself that my search was complete I actually searched all of the files covering that period. I did not limit myself to any particular file where documents on a given subject were filed. The filing system at that time was by states. The correspondence received from Oregon, for instance, being kept separately in one file, and the same as to all of the other states. I think during the latter part of that time that that system was in vogue, that where there was more than one judicial district in a state, the correspondence was kept by judicial districts, but I did not confine myself to the files relating to the State of Oregon. I included California, because some of this correspondence originated in California. I included New York because Mr. Holladay lived there and I made every effort to locate any correspondence that might be of record in the department upon that subject, and I feel that I am justified in saying as the result of my search that correspondence never was made a part of the official files or records of the Department of Justice.

MR. FENTON: Let me at this point note an objection. Defendants object to the conclusion of the witness just stated, and as immaterial, and to the whole of the witness' testimony on this subject as immaterial.

MR. TOWNSEND: (Continuing) I wish to add upon that subject that I spent no less than two weeks making this search, and had with me at all times one or more persons assisting me, particularly Mr. A. P. Fulkerson, who, as a special employe of the Department of Justice, was assigned to assist me in the cases over which I have charge.

I also participated to a considerable extent in the search made by Mr. Griffith and Mr. Casey of the records of the General Land Office and in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, but my search there was not complete, and I relied in part upon the search made by Mr. Griffith and Mr. Casey. The search of the records in the Department of Justice was complete on my part. Any assistance that I received from others was supervised by myself, and all of the documents were actually examined by myself as they got them from the files for me.

I wish to state in addition to the foregoing that during my search of the records in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, I found the pamphlet, a copy of which has been introduced in evidence as Government's Exhibit No. 105. This pamphlet bore the filing mark of the office, and it was filed as of some time in January, 1869, and accompanying those documents relating to the Act of April 10, 1869, as I remember it, was the committee report, although I am not positive as to that. This copy of the pamphlet, which was a printed pamphlet, I took from the files for the purpose of introducing it in evidence in this case, but in some way it has become lost and I have made a very careful search for it and am satisfied that it has been lost and that I cannot produce it. The pamphlet was the same as Government's Exhibit No. 105 with the exception of the filing mark which it bore, as I have stated above.

Mr. Fenton asked Mr. Griffith if he was sure it was Government's Exhibit No. 105 instead of Government's Exhibit No. 106. I am prepared to assure Mr. Fenton that there is no possibility of a mistake on that point because I was so familiar with those pamphlets and the documents, that I could not be mistaken. I do not think that the pamphlet issued by the west side company, Government's Exhibit No. 106, was in the files. In fact, I am positive that it was not, because if it had been I would have taken that to be introduced in evidence, the same as Government's Exhibit No. 105. I do not recollect that there was anything else in connection with the filing of that pamphlet in the Secretarys' office that would throw any additional light upon the subject other than what I have stated.

Referring again to Government's Exhibit No. 109, it will be observed on examining this correspondence, that the letter from the commissioner of the General Land Office, dated July 16, 1872, addressed to George H. Williams, as attorney-general, acknowledges the receipt of a letter dated June 27, 1872. We have never been able to find that letter or any copy of it. This is true, not only as to the Department of Justice, but also as to the Department of the Interior.

Mr. Griffith made a special search for that letter at my request, and when he testified yesterday that this was all the correspondence, he included that in his answer and that that letter could not be found. I am satisfied that it is true that the letter has either been mislaid or lost. The jacket in which this correspondence was filed in the General Land Office noted the fact of the receipt of this letter of June 27, 1872, but the letter itself was not within the jacket, although the other correspondence which has been identified as Government's Exhibit No. 109 was in that jacket. I think that is all I have to state.

TESTIMONY OF DEFENDANTS IN REBUTTAL

Whereupon FRED H. McCLURE, recalled by defendants in rebuttal, having been duly sworn testified on direct examination as follows:

Q. Mr. McClure, I show you photographs Numbers 91 and 92, purporting to have been taken by you October 4, 1908, of the cabin of D. McLafferty, which is a part of Defendants' Exhibit 270. Mr. McLafferty has testified that he and his wife were present at the time those photographs were taken, and that they wanted to be in the picture, and that you told them that they could not be in the picture, that your instructions were from the company not to allow any of these settlers to be shown in the photographs. Now, state what the fact is, as you recollect it.

A. I do not recall any instructions of that sort. I merely did that on my own responsibility. We photographers sometimes have to scheme around and take things in our own hands to get the pictures that we want, to overcome things that seem to be in the way. I did not think the people should be in it.

Q. Did you have any instructions of any kind from the company that these settlers should not be taken by you in the pictures?

A. No, sir, not that I recall.

Whereupon, on cross examination, witness testified:

Q. You do not mean to dispute Mr. McLafferty, then, as to whether you did refuse to let them be in the picture?

A. Oh, no. I may have told them. I probably told him I did not want him in the picture, on my own responsibility.

Whereupon, on re-direct examination, witness testified:

Q. You wanted the pictures to show the cabin and the improvements as nearly as they could?

A. Yes.

S. gold coin and after due consideration of the prayer of said petitioners: Therefore, be and it is hereby Ordered by the County Court of said County, in and at its session for the month of March, 1868, and upon the fourth day of said month, as follows:

Section 1st. That for the purpose of securing gravel, stone, brick, clay, lumber and timber, for the construction and repair of the County buildings of Washington County, and the transportation of persons and property, as provided in Section Six of this Order, and for the other purposes as hereinafter provided, the Corporation known as the "Oregon Central Railroad Company of Portland, Oregon," be and is hereby authorized to issue Fifty Bonds of the sum of one thousand dollars each, bearing interest at the rate of seven per cent per annum, commencing on the first day of October, 1868, and payable on the first days of April and October thereafter semi-annually for the term of twenty years; said Bonds having thereto attached forty interest coupons to each Bond, each coupon representing the half yearly interest of its respective Bond; said coupons to be signed by the Secretary of said Company and countersigned by the County Judge and County Clerk of said County as hereinafter provided, and to be made payable in U. S. gold coin at the County Treasury of said County.

Section 2. That in order to carry out the provisions of the first paragraph of section one of this Order, there shall be levied and collected in the year 1868, in the same manner as the other County Revenue is or may be collected, a tax of three and one half mills on the dollar, of all the taxable property of said County in addition to the other taxes, the same to be paid in the gold or silver coin of the United States, and the moneys to be derived from such tax, shall be and is hereby appropriated and set aside to constitute a separate "Fund" to be known as the "Railroad Fund," out of which "Fund" the said interest coupons payable April 1st 1869 and October 1st, 1869, on said Fifty Bonds hereinafter described, shall be paid as they may fall due and be presented for payment at said County Treasury, and if there shall not be in the said "Fund" sufficient money to pay the said coupons payable April 1st 1869 and October 1st 1869, or if there shall be a surplus after paying said coupons payable on that date, the County Court shall make such arrangements in this respect as is provided in Section three of this Order.

Section 3. That in order to further carry out the provisions of the first paragraph of section one of this Order, there shall be and is hereby levied to be collected in the year 1869 and annually thereafter for the period of eighteen years, in the same manner as the other County revenue is or may be collected, a tax of three mills on the dollar, of all the taxable property of said County, in addition to the other taxes; provided however that the County Court may at any time reduce the rate of this tax in proportion to the increase of taxable property within said County, so that the revenue so collected by said tax shall not be less than three thousand five hundred dollars per annum; the said tax to be paid in the gold and silver coin of the United States, and the moneys to be derived from such tax shall be and is hereby appropriated and set aside to constitute a separate "Fund" to be known as the "Railroad Fund," out of which "Fund" the said coupons for interest on said Fifty bonds hereinbefore described shall be paid as they may fall due and be presented for payment at said County Treasury from time to time for the period of nineteen years, and on payment thereof by the County Treasury said interest coupons shall be canceled and destroyed; and if at any time there shall not be a sufficient sum of money in said "Railroad Fund" to pay said interest when due, then an amount sufficient to make up such deficiency shall be taken from the "General County Fund" for that purpose, or the County Court shall make such other contracts and arrangements as may be necessary to make up such deficiency; and whenever on the first day of October of any year, there shall remain a surplus in said "Railroad Fund," after the payment of the interest on said Bonds payable on that date, such surplus shall be paid into the "General County Fund"; provided always, and said Coupons shall so express, that said County shall never be liable to pay the principal of said Bonds.

Section 4. That in order to ensure the performance of the conditions and considerations on the part of said Company, hereinafter expressed, and in order to avail themselves of the provisions of this Order, the said Railroad Co. shall survey and locate the line of their Railroad through said County and commence the work of constructing said Railroad upon said line within said County, on or before the 15th day of June 1868, and complete the work of constructing said Railroad sufficient to run cars thereon from Portland to a point opposite the town of Hillsboro on or before the first day of September, 1869; and if the said Company shall fail to survey and locate its line of Railroad or fail to commence work thereon, or fail to complete the road to Hillsboro on or before the 1st day of September, 1869, as herein provided, then this Order as to said Company shall become totally void, and they shall forfeit all rights thereto, and be liable to repay to said County all sums of interest paid on said Coupons prior to the date of such forfeiture.

Section 5. That in order further to carry out the provisions of the first paragraph of this Order, it shall be the duty of the County Judge and County Clerk of said County whenever, after the execution of the Contract hereinafter provided for, said Company shall present to them, the said County Judge and Clerk, the said "Fifty Bonds" described in Section One of this Order, to countersign with their official signatures, each and all of the said interest coupons attached to said "Fifty Bonds," which signing shall bind the County to pay the same according to their tenor as aforesaid; and after said coupons shall have been so signed, by said County Judge and Clerk, they shall deliver the whole of said Bonds, together with the said coupons attached, to William E. Smith, of Washington County, Oregon, who shall act as Trustee between said County and said Company, for the purposes hereinafter named, and shall give such security for the faithful discharge of this trust as may be hereafter required by said County Court; and it shall be the duty of said Trustee to receive and safely keep said Bonds and coupons, and as often as required by said Company, he shall examine the work performed by said Company in the construction of their said Railroad making such investigation of their Books, Engineer's estimates, &c as may be necessary to properly inform him of the amount of work performed by said Company in said County from time to time; and whenever said Company shall have commenced work on twenty miles of their said railroad, and shall have expended five thousand dollars on the construction of said Railroad within said County, it shall be the duty of said Trustee to deliver five of said Bonds with their coupons attached, so as aforesaid executed and countersigned, to said Company, and so whenever from time to time, said Company shall have expended five thousand dollars additional to the work of constructing said Railroad, in said County, said Trustee shall deliver to said Company five additional of said Bonds with their coupons attached, until the entire fifty shall have been so delivered, and if any of said Bonds shall remain in the hands of said Trustee, at the completion of said Road to Hillsboro as aforesaid, such remainder shall be then surrendered by said Trustee to said Company, and the compensation of said Trustee for his services herein shall be a reasonable compensation for such service, to be estimated by said County Court, and to be paid by said Railroad Company; and the route of said Railroad shall run from the City of Portland through the Central portion of said County to the northern end of "Wapatoo Lake" passing within three-fourths of one mile of the Court House of said County.

Section 6. That the provisions of the preceding section of this Order, and the agreement of this County to pay the interest referred to in said sections, is made upon the express condition and consideration, that said Oregon Central Railroad Company does contract and agree, by the filing of its agreement hereinafter referred, at and all times for the period of twenty years from the 1st day of September 1869, to transport and convey over their railroad all public messengers required to travel at the expense of said County, and all County officers required to travel at the expense of said County, free of charge, and also transport, carry and convey over their Railroad, to or from any point on their line as may be required, free of charge or other compensation for transportation than is provided in this Order, all stone, gravel, earth, lumber, and timber, or other materials which said County may need to be transported over said Railroad for its county buildings, and all furniture and stationery required in the County offices for the use of the County, and all articles and animals with their necessary attendants on their way to the annual fairs of the Washington County Agricultural Society, and to the Fairs of the State Agricultural Society, intended for exhibition for premiums at such Fairs; and such Company shall further contract to not charge a higher rate for freight or passage of the products and citizens of said County from points in said County to or from the City of Portland than they charge for like freight or passage upon similar and equal distances upon any other portion of the line of their said Railroad.

Section 7. That in order to avail themselves of the provisions of this Order, said Railroad Company, at a meeting of its Directors shall accept the propositions contained in this Order, and by a resolution spread upon their journal, direct their President and Secretary to enter into and sign an agreement in writing, attaching thereto the provisions and certified copy of this Order, and file a copy of the said Agreement, duly executed in Duplicate, with the Clerk of said County, which agreement and duplicate shall be signed by the President and Secretary of said Company, and sealed with their Corporate seal, binding said Company to faithfully perform all the conditions and considerations on the part of said Company specified in this Order; and the County Judge of said County is hereby authorized, on behalf of said County, to sign the said Agreement and Duplicate, which signing by said Judge shall be attested by the signature of the Clerk of said County, and the County seal thereof, which signing, sealing and attestation, by said County Judge and County Clerk, shall bind the County of Washington, faithfully to levy and collect the said tax, and pay the said interest coupons as they may fall due for the period of twenty years, as is herein provided."

On motion of Director Ainsworth, it was unanimously resolved that the Resolution adopted by the Board of Directors at the meeting of the same held Feb. 13th, 1868, fixing the route of the Company's Railroad through Washington County via Cornell Pass, be and the same is hereby rescinded.

FIRST ANNUAL REPORT OF THE OREGON CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY.

To the Stockholders of the Oregon Central Railroad Company: The By-Laws of your Corporation require that I shall make a report of the operations of the Company for the past year. My report must necessarily be meagre, inasmuch as the company has but recently got to the work intended by its incorporation—the construction of a railroad. But a brief review of the preliminary work of a corporation of the character of which this is intended to be, cannot be devoid of interest now, and will certainly form an interesting chapter in its history after success shall have crowned your efforts to build a great railroad intended not only as a blessing to the State, but as a highway for the nation.

Your first Board of Directors were elected on the 24th of May, 1867. None of them had any adequate idea of the difficulties to overcome in an undertaking of this character, even under favorable circumstances; but when we consider that the enterprise was launched in a new State whose people were unfamiliar with the great benefits railroads confer, where the capital available for anything out of the ordinary business transactions of the country was very limited and reluctant of investment in a new enterprise, where a 'railroad spirit' had to be created by your Directors, before anybody could be induced to favor your enterprise, and last of all where bitter opposition was met at the very threshhold in the shape of a rival corporation, boldly claiming your Corporate name and franchises—when we consider all this, the prospect one year ago was gloomy enough, and it is not surprising that two of your Board resigned their positions in despair of accomplishing any permanent good. Under these circumstances it was not to be wondered at that the mass of the people, who are now active friends and supporters of your Company, had then but little confidence in the prospect of success. But labor conquers all things, and three members of your Board determined to give the enterprise their determined and persevering labors for one year. Under the circumstances, it was not known whether the Company would be recognized by the Secretary of the Interior at Washington City, as entitled to the land granted to aid in the construction of the road, or whether a contest would arise in his office, between the rival companies. After executing and forwarding the papers to the Secretary as required by law, it was deemed prudent to await his action. No reply was received from him until about the 1st day of September, when I received letters from the Secretary fully recognizing our rights to the land grant; and I may here add that within the last week I have received other communications from the Secretary, already given to the public through the press, conclusively showing that no other company than yours has set up any claim in a legal way, or has any right whatever to the land granted by Congress.

From May to September, nothing was done to forward the enterprise further than to hold some public meetings, get the people to talk the matter among themselves, and arouse an interest in the construction of railroads generally.

After receiving the foregoing recognition of the company's rights, a canvass for subscriptions to the capital stock of the Company, and donations of land and other property in aid of the enterprise, was commenced in Washington and Yamhill Counties, which was subsequently extended to the city of Portland.

In February last, the City Council of the city of Portland resolved to extend aid to the company to the extent of interest on its bonds in the sum of $250,000. About this time Col. Cornelius of Washington County, and Capt. J. C. Ainsworth, of Portland, were invited to fill the two vacant places in the Board of Directors, which they accepted, and have since labored energetically to promote the interests of the company. The prospects of the Company now rapidly improved, and the overhanging clouds of distrust gave away to generous confidence with material support from all quarters where we had a right to expect it. In March the authorities of Washington county entered into a contract to pay the interest on fifty thousand dollars of the Company's bonds. About the same time a subscription paper was started in Portland, which has been filled up with twenty-five thousand dollars cash, all the leading capitalists and business men aiding it more or less. Recently the necessary steps have been taken to secure the aid of Yamhill county in the way of interest upon seventy-five thousand dollars of the Company's bonds, with every reason to hope for success. Canvassing for subscriptions of land and cash is still being prosecuted in Multnomah, Washington and Yamhill counties with encouraging success, and the plan hitherto pursued will be prosecuted in every county along the line. In this connection I take pleasure in stating that the Company has recently secured the services of Gen. Coffin in this business, who has volunteered to leave his own business for a season to push the interests of your Company with all the energy which characterizes him.

Negotiations have been commenced to secure a portion of the iron and rolling stock for the first twenty miles in San Francisco. The company has secured fifteen acres of land with ample wharf privileges at the upper end of the city of Portland, for the purposes of a depot, besides several adjoining blocks, making their lands in the city of great value.

The assets of the Company at present are as follows:

Portland aid Bonds	$250,000
Washington County Bonds	50,000
Estimated value of land subscribed and donated in Washington, Yamhill and Multnomah	250,000

Cash subscriptions in ditto..... 37,000

Total $587,000

After the completion of the first twenty miles of road, the land grant of twenty sections of public land per mile, and the State aid of ten thousand dollars in State Aid Bonds per mile, on the first one hundred miles, will be available in the further prosecution of the work.

The estimated cost of the first twenty miles of road fully equipped with stations and buildings finished, is, in round numbers, $400,000. It is not possible to build this first section by converting simply the assets of the Company named above, for they could not be converted at anything like their value if put up at a forced sale; but it will be necessary to issue some First Mortgage Bonds thereon, which the Company is preparing to do at the proper time. It is satisfactory to be able to state that these assets have been submitted to the judgment of the ablest railroad capitalists and contractors on the coast, who are unanimous in the opinion that your Company has already secured the means to construct and equip the first twenty miles of road. It must be borne in mind that this first twenty miles will cost nearly double as much as any other section between Portland and Eugene City.

As soon as the road is completed to Hillsboro, which we hope may be accomplished by December next, it will commence earning something for the Company. No tangible means are at hand for making a correct estimate of the earnings of this portion of the road. With the opening of the road will commence the erection of new towns along the line, the manufacture of lumber and other articles demanded in the growth of this city and the development of the country; and with this prospect it is not unreasonable to expect that the first twenty miles of the road would earn, at the lowest estimate, five thousand dollars ($5,000.00) per month. It could have no steamboat or other competition. Statistics are being collected by the engineers in charge, upon which to base an estimate of the earnings of the line from Portland to Eugene City, but this matter is reserved to another time.

The Board of Directors have had to resort to litigation to settle questions in dispute, with the rival corporation operating on the east side of the Willamette river, and it will necessarily require some time before these suits can be closed up, but in the meantime no one need be concerned about the result. Justice will be secured some time and the unnecessary trespass upon the Company's rights in the use of its corporate name will be prohibited beyond any doubt.

Since commencing the work of grading on the 15th of April, the work has been pushed as rapidly as circumstances would permit. At the present time there are fifty laborers engaged on the work of grading, besides the engineer corps. A larger force would have been employed, but could not be to advantage, the character of the work requiring a proportionate number of carts, and the carts could not be secured otherwise than by ordering them built, which has required time. The progress made is very satisfactory, and stockholders and the public may rest assured that the work will be pushed with all the energy the means of the company will permit.

The necessary inquiries have been made through the proper channels, to ascertain upon what terms foreign capital can be secured. The people ought not to be deceived and misled. Foreign capitalists will not come here and build your railroads upon your mere request. They are quite as careful of their money as are Oregonians of theirs. While you would not likely invest your money in the bonds of a road proposed to be constructed, but which is not in fact graded, through Texas or New York, it is not likely that New Yorkers will invest in Oregon roads until they see something more than maps. No mere paper schemes, practicing upon the credulity of the people, will succeed. It requires dollars, but a dollars worth of wheat or land can be converted into the construction of a railroad as well as coin. And when enough of the commercial values of the country, be it cash, produce, land or labor, has been aggregated, to enable Eastern capitalists to see that we are in earnest, and have our affairs in a tangible business shape, there will be no trouble in securing money on the Bonds of the Company to further prosecute the enterprise.

Your Directors have let no contracts at exorbitant prices, squandering your contributions upon favorites, upon those who have no interest in the State, or to enrich themselves, and do not purpose to do so. Economy has been required of your Chief Engineer, Superintendent, and all others having the incurring of expenses, and all employes exhorted to a faithful discharge of their duties. It is believed that this is the only way to secure success; and it is some satisfaction to know that this plan has the approval of those of whom we expect to ask further aid. Oregon has not yet done all that it may easily do to aid this great work, and especially those along the line who are to be most benefited by the road. Every man can help some. Let every man do so, and failure would be utterly impossible.

Laborers must be fed, and the farmers along the line can contribute flour, bacon, vegetables and all the necessaries of life, when they would have no cash to spare, and this they would not feel. Teams must be supplied and supported; horses and their provender are everywhere abundant; let them be freely supplied, and the work will not lag. The right of way ought to be cheerfully donated in every case. Cross ties can be easily furnished by persons along the line, each furnishing a few, and taking their pay in stock or lands. In this way let a "railroad spirit" be aroused and stirred up to a deeper depth, and the Railroad which is eminently the people's and an Oregon enterprise, will be pushed rapidly up the Willamette, through the Calapooias to Umpqua, and on to Rogue river, and spreading its iron arms out upon either side, will infuse new life into the whole country, make your wheat of uniform current value from Jacksonville to Portland, take out every brush, reconstruct every farm, quadruple its value, erect comfortable houses everywhere, give the farmer the full value of his labor and his produce at his own door, create new towns and cities, and finally supply and serve the wants of a million of people, prosperous and happy in the enjoyment of one of the most favored spots and climes beneath the sun.

This beautiful picture cannot be accomplished without labor, nor can it ever be accomplished without a railroad. What the beautiful valleys of the Mohawk and the Gennessee of New York, the Scioto and Miami of Ohio, were thirty years ago, the Willamette, Umpqua and Rogue river are today. What the first named valleys are to-day, your beautiful valleys of Oregon may soon be, if we keep up with the progress of the age and construct this railroad. Then, let not the "Railroad spirit"—already aroused—flag in the least, and the best way to keep it alive and increase its value, is to go to the nearest subscription paper and subscribe something. No man fully feels the importance of anything until he is a "little interested." Far more can be accomplished by a little united effort than any one supposes. There are more than one thousand farmers in the Willamette Valley who could easily raise five hundred bushels of wheat in addition to their regular crops, to be put into this railroad one year from next harvest. Suppose by a united effort this was secured, it would make a half millions bushels of wheat, worth to your railroad not less than a half million dollars, every dollar or bushel of which could be turned into railroad iron. The very fact that such an arrangement as this had been made in this State would give your Company great credit in New York and Liverpool.

In conclusion your Board of Directors feel encouraged to state that they consider the affairs and prospects of your Company in a very satisfactory, not to say flattering condition. We have no doubt of the success of the enterprise.

And with this unreserved statement of the condition of the affairs of this, the original Oregon Central Railroad Company, we would respectfully submit to the people of the State this proposition: Is it probable that two companies of the same corporate names, upon opposite sides of the same river, being competing lines for all the trade of the upper Willamette valley and beyond, and rivals in every respect, can reasonably hope to succeed under the present circumstances, and at this point in the history of our State? If it is not reasonable to hope for the success of both, does not justice to the interests of the whole State, a prudent regard for the tax payer, as well as the dictates of business economy, urge every friend of the interests of both sides of the Willamette river, as well as those of the Umpqua and Rogue river valleys, to decide in favor of and give their support to that company which has been recognized by the Land Departments of the U. S. Government, and endorsed by your chief commercial city, which has secured a respectable basis of home means, which has certainly the best showing for success, and thus enable them to speedily build one main line through to Jacksonville, with such necessary branches as will fully accommodate the entire State west of the Cascade Mountain? Should the interests of foreign contractors, or the personal matters of our citizens, be allowed to prejudice the superior interests of the State and the people? And is it not especially the interest of this city, to see that the company it has endorsed and aided, shall not be unnecessarily embarrassed by rival enterprises? We ask of the people of the State a fair examination and discussion of these propositions.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

COPY OF DEED

This Indenture made at Portland, Multnomah County, State of Oregon, this 17th day of April, Anno Domini, one thousand eight hundred and seventy one (1871) between the Willamette Valley Railway Company, Incorporated and organized under the General Incorporation laws of the State of Oregon, party of the First part, and the Oregon Central Railroad Company of Portland, Oregon, Incorporated at Portland, Oregon, under the General Incorporation Laws of the State of Oregon, party of the Second part,

Whereas, the Board of Directors of the Willamette Valley Railway Company of Portland, Oregon, did at a meeting of such Board, duly called and held at the office of such Company, in the City of Portland, Multnomah County, and State of Oregon on this 17th day of April A. D. One thousand eight hundred and seventy one (1871) unanimously adopt the following resolution to wit:

"Whereas the Oregon Central Railroad Company did on the 15th of August A. D. 1870, by its Board of Directors at a meeting thereof duly called sell, assign, transfer, set over and convey for certain considerations, therein set forth, to the Willamette Valley Railway Co., of Portland, Oregon, all the right, title, interest, and claim vested and contingent, which the said Oregon Central Railroad Company then had and possessed or to which it was entitled, in or to the franchises, privileges, grants and lands granted and proposed to be granted to said Oregon Central Railroad Company, their successors and assigns by the Act of Congress which passed the Senate of the United States February 20th 1870, entitled "An Act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Portland to Astoria and McMinnville in the State of Oregon" and did direct the execution and delivery of a deed of conveyance therefore by the President and Secretary thereof, which deed of conveyance was in pursuance of such directions duly executed and delivered to the Willamette Valley Railway Co. on said 15th day of August A D 1870 and whereas some question has been made in the Department of the Interior at Washington City in relation to the power of said Oregon Central Railroad Co. to make such assignment transfer and conveyance and the Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Ackerman has given an opinion wherein he denies such power, and whereas a controversy in the departments and Courts, whatever might be the result, would lead to complications and embarrassments, and in a great measure depreciate its value of said grant, and retard the construction of the road; and whereas the said Oregon Central Railroad Company, to whom such grant was originally made is now in a condition to proceed with said enterprise, and whereas the same persons who own and control over two thirds of all the stock in this Company, also own and hold over two thirds of all the stock in Oregon Central Railroad Company; Therefore in consideration of the premises, and of the consent of the Stockholders of this Company, holding and owning over two thirds of all the stock in this Company, now here present and consenting thereto, and of the sum of one dollar to this company paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, This Company, the Willamette Valley Railway Co. of Portland, Oregon, does hereby sell, assign, transfer, set over and reconvey unto the said Oregon Central Railroad Company of Portland, the franchises, privileges, benefits, grants, and lands, granted or intended to be granted, to said Oregon Central Railroad Company, by the said Act of Congress, passed the Senate February 20th., 1870 and approved May 4th 1870, entitled "An Act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Portland to Astoria and McMinnville in the State of Oregon, and all right, title, interest and claim present and contingent, which this Company has therein by virtue of the assignment and deed of conveyance aforesaid to this Company, of date August 15th 1870, and the President and Secretary of this Company are hereby directed to make, execute and deliver to said Oregon Central Railroad Company a deed of conveyance in the name of this Company and under its corporate Seal, for all such franchises, privileges, benefits, grants, lands, etcetera, as aforesaid,
